One of the principal aims of the scientists is to keep the hot plasma away from the walls of the machine's containment vessel. The walls cool the plasma and are the source of the impurities.

Dr. Moos said the "machines have been successful to a point, but it has been found that even the minutest amount of impurities — a few oxygen or carbon atoms knocked off the wall of the containment vessel by the intense heat, for example — would vastly reduce the energy output from the plasmas."

Freighter holds marijuana—20 tons

MIAMI [UPI] — The Coast Guard seized a 70-foot freighter laden with an estimated 20 tons of marijuana said to be worth $12 million yesterday and arrested its nine-man crew.

The Coast Guard was escorting the mystery freighter, which carried no registration papers, to Florida. The vessel's original destination was uncertain.

"It is considered a stateless vessel, not in compliance with international rules and thus we are allowed to board it in international waters even though it may be found to be of foreign registry," Coast Guard spokesman Lance Jones said.

The cutter Steadfast halted the freighter Caybur Saturday night in the northeast Providence Channel, just south of Great Abaco Island and 150 miles east of Miami.

Jones said the captain of the ship claimed it was registered in Honduras, although the ship carried no registration papers. The nine crewmen, charged with possession of a controlled substance with intent to import, claimed to be from Colombia, Jones said.

He said the Steadfast came upon the Caybur while on routine patrol and boarded it because the freighter carried no home port designation on its stern and displayed no national flag.

Dock strike ends

NEW YORK [UPI] — An expected settlement in the six-week long dock workers strike against container ship operations from Maine to Texas appeared snagged Sunday in a haggle over the wording of a job security clause.

The International Longshoremen's Association and negotiators for ocean carriers met through the afternoon in an effort to iron out the difficulties. Everything in the pact has been agreed upon except for job security — a key issue in the strike that has left $4 billion in goods piled at ports.

"They're haggling over terminology for the job security issues," ILA spokesman Larry Malloy said at 4 p.m. EST.

ILA President Thomas Cleason said dock workers could be back on the job within a week after an agreement is reached.

A settlement had been expected as early as Saturday but after 5½ hours of talks a recess was called while employers stayed behind to discuss the job security provisions.

The walkout, which began Oct. 1, was aimed at container ship operations, in which large trailer-like containers of cargo are lifted on and off ships by crane. The containers are then placed onto flatbed trucks for transport.

Conventional cargo ships, passenger liners and containers holding perishables were unloaded during the strike.

Despite its limited nature, the strike has cost importers and exporters, stevedoring concerns and carriers millions of dollars. Shippers said $4 billion in goods had piled up in ports.

They said this has created shortages of some imported items which will, in turn, boost the cost of Christmas shopping.

Because containerized shipping requires fewer dock workers, the union had demanded a job security program for its workers.

Although only North Atlantic shipping companies were directly involved in negotiations in Manhattan this week, representatives from South Atlantic and Gulf ports were also on hand.

Historically, a settlement in the northeast ports has served as the basis for agreements in other ports.

A major obstacle to a pact was removed Thursday with settlement of a disagreement between the New York Shipping Association and the Council of North Atlantic Shipping Association over the job security program.

rather funny. It might depend on whose doing the gesture, a student or a faculty member, but no offense was taken."

Joseph Connolly, the student in charge of the guide, made a formal apology for the graphics in the Collegian last Thursday. Connolly said the graphics were intended to satirize stereotypes, and not intended as stereotypes themselves. "Because this was not clear we apologized. The opposite of what we had intended was the impression many had of the graphics," he said.

The survey had a low response rate, Connolly said, which is mainly why the guide was so incomplete. The surveys were sent out at the end of last semester, and many faculty members either didn't get a chance to respond or didn't intend to, he said.

Professors have different kinds of questionaires by which students evaluate them and because there is no standardized form of a questionaire, we had to use all resources given to us, said Connolly.

Connolly said there will definitely be another guide, and is working with the Student Center for Educational Research and the Legal Services Office for help on how to get around the problems that were met with this issue.

University spokesman Arthur Clifford said that having taught at UMass, he feels the evaluations aren't always accurate. Sometimes negative comments are the only ones expressed, he said, and few people take the time to write positive. Because of this, the evaluations are not balanced, said Clifford.

In referring to the guide on the whole, Clifford said it is a valuable tool, and the main problem is that it is not complete. The Communication Studies dept. had only four teachers represented. One of the teachers was a teachers' assistant, one was a visiting professor at UMass for just one year, one was teaching for someone that had just died and was not as familiar with the material than he might have been under other circumstances. "You don't get a very accurate picture of the department because of cases like this," he said.

Clifford said he hopes the project will continue, and that a more professional and complete looking book is produced. It is something Amherst College has had for years and other colleges also, he said, it should not be abandoned. It was a learning experience that with proper future support will probably result in a better product, said Clifford, and in the interest of fairness and usefulness, it should include all faculty members.

Females against boy's club

The Ridgefield Women's Political Caucus is trying to stop the Boy's Club from getting six acres of land for $1 because the club does not admit women.

U.S. District Court Judge Jon O. Newman has scheduled hearings on the case Nov. 23 in Hartford.

The caucus says the town should not give the land, which is worth more than $50,000 to an organization that does not admit females.

The battle stems from a club decision to build a pool on the property they have been leasing for $1-a-year.

But club officials said they were unable to get financing for the project unless the club owned the land. A November 1974 town meeting voted to sell the land to the club for $1.

At that meeting club officials said the pool would be open to the public, but refused to include in the deed that all residents would be able to use it.

The caucus then filed the lawsuit trying to block the transfer of the land and Newman suggested the suit become a test suit because the town attorney declined to concede its discrimination against females.

Two girls applied for membership in the club and were rejected in 1975, with club officials citing a lack of funds to provide duplicate facilities.

City migration

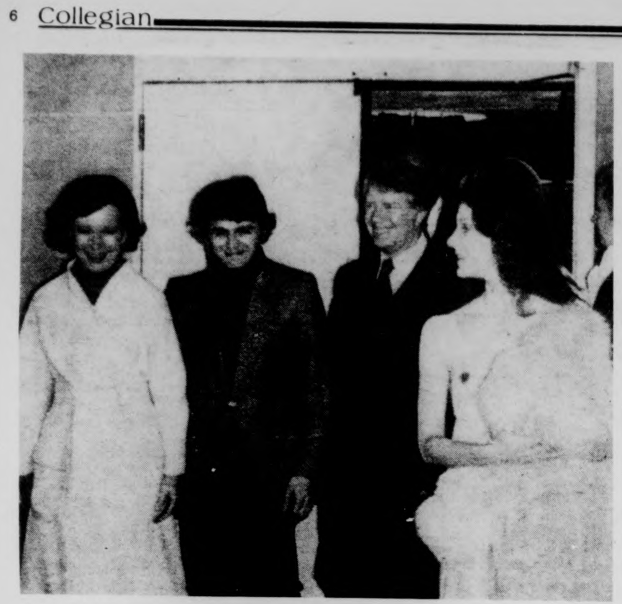
WASHINGTON [UPI] — The federal government has encouraged migration from the nation's cities through interstate highways, home mortgage policies and other programs, a study released yesterday concluded.

The study, done by the Rand Corporation, also found that "jobs tend to follow people rather than the reverse," thus leading to fewer employment opportunities in urban centers.

The study was described in the current issue of Nation's Cities — magazine of the National League of Cities — by Dr. Mark J. Kasoff, visiting scholar at the Charles F. Kettering Foundation in Dayton, Ohio.

Kasoff said federal policies "have contributed to the decline of central city population and employment," and a migration to suburbs and small towns.



President and Mrs. Carter leave the Eisenhower Theater of the Kennedy Center after attending the world premiere of the movie, "The Turning Point", starring actresses Shirley MacLaine and Anne Bancroft and the great Russian ballet dancer Mikhail Baryshnikov. After the performance the Carters leave with Baryshnikov and Browne.

Israel has no guarantees

DALLAS [UPI] — Former Israeli prime minister Golda Meir Saturday cautioned American Jewish leaders to beware of Middle East peace plans that include international guarantees.

"When peace is made between countries, why do you need guarantees?" Mrs. Meir asked the 48th annual assembly of the Council for Jewish Federations.

Simcha Dinitz, Israel's ambassador to the U.S., echoed Mrs. Meir's position. He said American guarantees would not be an adequate basis for Israel's security.

Dinitz said Israel must calculate the consequences of each proposed peace plan to ensure that it will be able to defend itself.

"For Israel to want peace, no pressure is required," he said. "But for Israel to accept an agreement that undermines its vital interest, no pressure will help."

Mrs. Meir complained that world leaders have asked both Israel and the Arabs to take risks for peace, but said any concessions would jeopardize the existence of the Jewish state.

"Are we going to Cairo? Do they really think we're going to take Syria, Egypt, Jordan? But can anyone guarantee us that they won't attack us?" she asked.

Rape safety campaign started in Indiana

BLOOMINGTON, Ind. [UPI] — "Don't be scared, but don't be stupid," proclaims one of the posters on the main Indiana University campus.

The theme of the signboard campaign is part of an effort by school groups and the Indiana campus police department to cut down the number of rapes.

"We're not trying to make people so paranoid that they'll stay in their rooms with the doors locked," said Rick Wynne, vice president of the Indiana Residence Halls Association. But he said educating students about security devices is a way to promote safety.

Troubles in steel corp.

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The chairman of Bethlehem Steel Corp. says the administration should stop "raising hell" every time steel prices are increased since it does not complain of price hikes in other basic industries.

Lewis Foy, head of the nation's second largest steel producing firm, said the industry does not want to be bailed out of its current troubles, but would like the government to ease restrictions, enforce trade laws and impose realistic tax regulations.

"And we'd like government to stop raising hell every time we try to recover, in the marketplace, the costs that we are incurring." Foy said in an interview released yesterday by U.S. News & World Report magazine.

Foy said since President Carter took office, "the only price he has talked about has been the price of steel. And yet, everything we buy, including coal and other forms of energy, has gone up at a faster rate than have our prices."

In one 12-month period, he said, the price of aluminum — a steel competitor — increased 24 per cent.

Student Government Association co-president, said the topic for discussion at the meeting will be "Why the system of University governance does not work."

The Textbook Annex received a favorable review from Vice Chancellor James L. Mcbee in response to a series of charges from Senator Howard Brogan that the annex was inefficient and irresponsible in its procedure of ordering texts.

Mcbee investigated the profits of the Textbook Annex and the University store, twice for Brogan, said the annex was doing an adequate job and accused Brogan of waging a personal vendetta against him.

Election results for the Committee on Committee's were announced by Secretary Terrence Burke. The new members are senators Lawrence L. Ambs, David A. Storey, James H. Matlock, and Robert W. agner.

Various members of the senate have expressed concern about Provost Paul L. Puryear delegating responsibility to lower levels in personnel recommendations and decisions. Senator Lawrence Ryan submitted a written question to Puryear asking to what extent his responsibility has been delegated to an associate provost or other administrative officer, and the procedure on this in the future.

Puryear did not attend Thursday's meeting nor the previous one so the matter will be discussed at next week's Faculty Senate meeting.

News in Brief

Iran doesn't push oil price increase

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Iran has assured the United States it will not push for an increase in world oil prices at this time, an administration source said yesterday.

"That doesn't necessarily mean they'll fight a price increase," the source said. "But at least they won't be out looking for it either."

Iran, which in the past has spearheaded efforts to raise the price of oil on the world market, issued its pledge in advance of next month's meeting of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries in Caracas, Venezuela.

The subject is expected to be discussed when President Carter meets Tuesday with Iranian Shah Mohammed Reza Pahlevi in a session that has drawn the ire of Iranian groups in the United States.

The two leaders also are likely to discuss arms sales, particularly whether the United States will proceed with the sale of 140 F-16 fighter-bombers to Iran.

The shah's oil stance may be related to hopes of improving Iran's chances of receiving approval for its request on military purchases, which during the last fiscal year, was put at more than $5 billion.

The shah's impending visit, opposed by groups which say he violates human rights, was protested Sunday outside the church Carter attended, and there also was a demonstration against the neutron bomb.

Ethiopian leader possibly executed

NAIROBI, Kenya (UPI) — Radio Ethiopia yesterday indicated the country's No. 2 leader, Lt. Col. Atnafu Abate, has been deposed and said further purges within the ruling military council were imminent.

In a 35-minute broadcast, the government radio said Atnafu, who has long been an opponent of the nation's dictator Mengistu Haile Mariam, "revealed a concealed attitude opposing socialism which could prove dangerous to the revolution."

It reported a "revolutionary step was taken against him."

The official statement gave no further details, but the phrasing indicated Atnafu had been deposed and possibly executed.

"A bitter struggle lies ahead," the radio said in an apparent reference to the Dergue, the ruling military council. "Imposters must be eliminated."

The broadcast said the "military bourgeois class" must be "cleaned up" with the "revolutionary sword."

"Those who have to be wiped out are anti-people and anti-revolutionary forces," it added. Since the military ousted the late Emperor Haile Selassie on Sept. 12, 1974, Atnafu had always held second rank in the Dergue behind the nation's undisputed boss, Mengistu. The two men were sworn enemies and repeatedly jockeyed for support among the military council's factions.

The "revolutionary step" against Atnafu, whatever his fate, apparently was the second major incident in Ethiopian politics this year.

Seaside evacuation

PENSACOLA, Fla. [UPI] — About 1,000 people evacuated from their plush seaside houses for the second time in four days returned home yesterday as work crews removed the last 10 of 16 ammonia-filled tank cars which derailed Wednesday night.

Pensacola Fire Chief Lloyd Fleming ordered the evacuation Saturday as a precaution should any of the railroad cars begin leaking the deadly anhydrous ammonia. Crews began clearing the cars about noon Saturday and completed the task Sunday afternoon.

Two of the tank cars of a Louisville and Nashville train derailed along a bayside bluff Wednesday. The ammonia spewed out of the cars and the fumes killed one man and injured 32 others.

Officials evacuated the area immediately after the derailment and all but about 25 families who lived closest to the scene were allowed back home Thursday.

Police Sgt. Joe Irwin said four of the 16 cars were removed prior to Saturday, and the two which ruptured would be left at the site.

S. Africa's future—no racial war insight

WASHINGTON [UPI[ — Prime Minister John Vorster says "sporadic troubles and uprisings," may occur in South Africa, but there will be no racial war.

"I don't foresee a racial war in South Africa now or in the future," Vorster said in an interview with U.S. News & World Report.

"These tensions will pass," he said. "I don't think they will wreck South Africa's future one bit."

He said the forthcoming elections were not prompted by fear South Africa is heading for a major national crisis.

"One can and must expect sporadic troubles and uprisings," in South Africa, Vorster said, in part because "Marxists and Russian communists," are seeking to inflame the African continent.

"They are pumping armaments and ammunition into Africa, and unfortunately there will always be people who like to use them," he said.

Vorster also said President Carter's goal is to force a one-man, one-vote system, "or, in other words, black-majority rule," on South Africa.

"Our policy is that white and black should even have their own parliament, govern themselves, and run their own affairs," the prime minister said.

An economic boycott will hurt South Africa, Vorster said, "but it certainly can't kill us."

"What it can do, however, is kill independent black countries in Southern Africa like Botswana and Lesotho. And it can, to a large extent, seriously harm the black peoples of South Africa," he said.

Research on smog

WASHINGTON [UPI] — National Bureau of Standards scientists have discovered a new organic molecule which may have an important role in the formation of smog, it was announced yesterday.

The molecule, made up of carbon, oxygen and hydrogen atoms, is called dioxirane. It is unstable at normal temperatures and is formed when automobile emissions interact with the atmosphere and sunlight to form photochemical smog.

That type of smog affects most large American cities and has been linked to eye and bronchial irritation.

Plan of preventing world depression

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Sen. Jacob Javits, R-N.Y., yesterday called for a $250 billion, 10-year "world Marshall plan" aimed at developing nations to prevent a worldwide depression in 1979.

Javits said there is a "grave economic danger for our system" in endemic unemployment plus economic stagnation in the developed world due to excess oil prices. Stagnation, he said, is worse for the economy than inflation.

Poor nations, instead of providing new markets for world goods, have to borrow excessive amounts of money to buy the petroleum they need, said Javits.

"If we don't do more than we're doing, we may run into not only a deep recession but a depression in the 1979-80 period because you simply cannot skim off the over $40 billion in excess prices that you're paying to the Organization of Petroleum Exportation Countries," he said on NBC's "Meet the Press."

"I think we have to lean on the Arab countries which are getting most of this money and can't use it," he said, adding the Arab nations should kick $150 billion into the pot, with the developed nations putting in the rest.

Pres. Idi Amin has led his nation through nearly seven years of one of the most tumultuous and bloody dictatorships in African history, declaring his respect and fear only for Allah, Amin, now has curtailed his highly visible visits to Kamplala.

On the other hand... for course evaluations

paul yanowitch

"The stupidist man is the education man out of his field of education" — Will Rogers through Will Durant and George Zinsmiester.

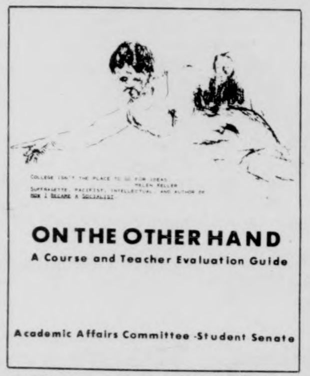
On the other hand, maybe it wasn't such a good investment. I speak of the recently published Course and Teacher Evaluation (known as CATE to a few endearing persons) which was heralded as the first step down the long and tortuous road to greater student power and control over our lives. Unfortunately, the great unveiling has proven remarkably embarrassing for students, as the publication has aroused the ire of both faculty and students — and deservedly so.

The ideal that was sought after, that is, an evaluation of courses and teachers, is a highly respectable and meritorious one. After all, if this university was established, as it presumably was, for the education of students, than we may reasonably be looked at as the ultimate constituency that must be catered to an pleased. The recent rise of the consumer analogy is, in my opinion, quite applicable. We are the consumers, at a price, of an education. And, as any economist will tell you, to enable the marketplace to operate so as to weed out the undesirable teachers and courses, and reward the worthy, there must be consumer sovereignty.



COLLEGE ISN'T THE PLACE TO GO FOR IDEAS.
HELEN KELLER
SUFFRAGETTE, PACIFIST, INTELLECTUAL, AND AUTHOR OF HOW I BECAME A SOCIALIST

ON THE OTHER HAND
A Course and Teacher Evaluation Guide

Academic Affairs Committee -Student Senate

That is, we must have complete and factual knowledge of the choices that appear before us every semester. Hence, this guide-in theory. Unfortunately, what has emerged is the most damaging blow to student-faculty relations since Yahoo.

The publication has myriad faults, yet some are glaring: for example, how many of you have read the FIRST line in the book? To save you the trouble, I will reproduce it here;

> "If the quality of education at UMass mirrored that sublime vision of education embodied within Robert Wood's wet dreams there would be no need for this guide."

I am shocked that President Wood's wet dreams are the subject of discussion. President Wood has fought hard for this university, and has spent many months trying to upgrade this institution. His success or failure is irrelevant; what is of importance is that a certain level of decorum and civility is maintained. If the base criticism must be levied, might it not be more properly applied to various student leaders (and at least attributed to the incognizant fool who wrote it)? (I fear the quote falls into the category of bedroom humor anyway.)

The second major faux pas was the general approach; I find it extremely disconcerting that the authors would even consider printing a recommendation based on one reply. That is statistically unsound, and it is more helpful to not print it than to put one reply in. I do not condone the attitude of those professors who failed to return their consent forms; they, too, are suffering from illogical thinking, faulty assumptions, and a condescending complex. However, this does not remove from the authors the burden to produce a document that is excellent in quantity, as well as quality. We must not throw caution and minimum acceptable standards to the wind in a frail attempt to gain revenge.

Then of course, there are the wonderfully informative quotations from Helen Keller, our self-taught socialist who appears to have "seen the light" in a major epiphany. I do not wish to attack Ms. Keller, though; I direct my pale wrath to the editors for the mere existence of her pithy sayings in the work. I was not aware that this book was destined to point out the way for us. Was its purpose to reflect a particular ideology; a specific philosophy? If so, from whence came this directive? I blissfully assumed that the document would restrict itself to its task; I was palpably wrong. If, as has been advanced, the document is political in nature, at least a touch of subtlety would have been appreciated.

The immature approach is reflected in those wonderous drawings, which obviously were done in fits of pique. The drawings themselves are, I am sure, considered socially redeeming in nature, saving the book from being considered utterly obscene. I am sure that even the editors must have realized that there was no need to callously offend large segments of the student population by denegrating their chosen major; why the disparaging pictures next to business related majors, or journalism, or engineering? Our editors, in their own condescending self-effacing way must be telling us that they do not find favor with these fields — how can we be so stupid as to enter these capitalist, inhumane fields when those who are so knowledgable, mature and intelligent have so plainly shown us the true way. I would like to believe that even the most immature, the most unthinking, the most irrational student would soon arrive at the recondite conclusion that people will be offended by an arm raised in salute (ala Nazism) next to German. Guess not.

I would be interested to see the Faculty Senate put out their own student evaluation forms. That, or leave the job up to Poor Taste, Ltd.

Preemies-'red eyes and brown noses'

By FRANK DENTON

With the arrival of the autumn months, the zoologist once again observes the advent of the preemy. A preemy, for the uninitiated, is that peculiar life form which exhibits a bent toward medical school. The stage of preemy metamorphosis we shall examine here is the characteristic four-year cycle of activity shortly after (and often including) adolescence.

A typical preemy can be found in the dingy domains of Chem 111-112 and Zoo 190. At more advanced stages, a preemy may even penetrate the languages and humanities. Also typical of the preemy are its piteous ululations of "Oh, Sir!" and the sonorous growls of satisfaction resulting from a T.A. conquered.

Particularly outstanding is the male of the species. This gender (more so than the female) has been known to prostrate itself before anything with a high school degree. Such is its fervor that it does, in fact, give even PhD's the fourth degree. This prostration displays the posterior end to advantage, which should be administered a good, swift kick.

Several markings are common to many preemies. They may be spotted from a distance by the padlocks on their notebooks. Generally they are described with red eyes and brown noses. Many are devoted to their mothers.

The habitat of each preemy is a well-kept secret. Some hibernate in nooks and crannies of the library, forgotten by all but Star Trek fans. Old research labs have been known to harbor this species. It is rumored that three preemies reside in an abandoned coat closet in Whitmore.

Much of the creature's time also appears to be spent camping in the habitations of instructors, attempting to revamp the grading structure. Preemies are most often encountered setting up office in a dean's reception room. Frequently they become as faded and jaded as the dean and the rest of the office furniture.

Given pressure, many individuals display a penchant for toilet training, as they will foul any papers in sight, including labs, grades, and transcripts. These beasts make notoriously poor pets, however. Predatory behavior and aggressive play make them unfit for domestic use. As a further inhibition towards domesticity, this breed is rather solitary in its loyalties. Perhaps this lack of domestic capacity is the reason many are Zoo majors.

Atypical individuals have been observed engaging in less parsimonious pursuits. Social sciences, fraternizing, and saluting passing beers are among favorite pastimes. This type should forget med school.

The career of the preemy appears fraught with dubious distinctions and intrepid folly. This author, under duress, has studied the specimen in the field. It is his proposal that the title should be changed from "premedical" to "premeditated".

Also known as "toadie," "turkey," and less printable names, the preemy occasionally emits articulate and philanthropic croaks, squawks, and screeches. Many observers, however, question the motives of any animal with such competitive behavior attempting to enter a humanitarian field. Its environment is generally classified as hostile due to the provocative nature of its habits. With few exceptions, one might conclude that the preemy's existence is altogether vile, churlish, and despicable. It is.

A healthy dose of cynicism

By JOHN BERGMAN

"The torcher never stops." — Frank Zappa

This is my third year at UMass, but I have only three months time as a healthy cynic. During my other two years here I was an UNhealthy cynic, i.e., I kept my nose mostly in my textbooks when I wasn't partying in my dwelling places, and my textbooks naturally didn't afford me the time to learn various details as to many awful perpetrations on campus.

I knew something stunk, but I didn't know why it stunk—"Well, I'll forget that my prof's a turkey and the lines everywhere on campus are long," I'd psyche myself, "and I'll read another chapter of this textbook, then party..."

But now that I'm a healthy cynic, I'm healthier physically and mentally as well. What bummed me out a year ago still bums me out today except that today I don't freak out about it as much. "IT" is many things.

Fairly briefly, here and now, are my suggestions on a few issues: Stop Amherst towing. Oppose the gym site at Kent State U. any way you dare to try. Enter Whitmore, find Chancellor Bromery and tell him the check-cashing facilities are intolerably inadequate. Support the Collegian on their recent banning of a banning of a particular bogusly sexist Schlitz ad.

Fight the Bakke decision; this is still a very murky issue to take a stand on, but the clinching factor is, the U.S.'s ghettoes (of which there are many, all incredibly horrible) have mainly black people living in them, and unlike most white communities, ghettoes' needs for qualified doctors is absolutely desperate (Especially when the ghetto-dwellers' perhaps-most-frequent sickness is rat poisoning).

Also: I think Jon Hite's act is very clean. The charges levied against him appear unfair and very largely groundless not to mention quite malicious. Check him out at SUB Room 430 sometime, and rap with him for fifteen minutes. That's right! You, Joe-Jo student, give him 15 minutes of your time. Firstly, he WILL likely BE there. Secondly, he's a down to earth dude.

Separate to be equal

lisa melilli

Black and still, but not a bad fit.
Will you marry, it?
It is waterproof, shatterproof, proof
Against fire and bombs through the roof.
Believe me, they'll bury you in it.
(Sylvia Plath, "The Applicant)"

Power, according to Webster's Dictionary, is the ability to influence or manipulate, to impose your own ideas over another. But what Webster leaves out is the concept of individual power, the power within the individual to affect and influence his or her own life. This power base within the self is actually necessary in order to exert power over another.

For a woman this inner power is almost impossible to obtain given the position, both economically and psychologically, in which she is placed. A woman is taught from age one to be selfless — not to have a base of power within herself, but in another. First, it's your mother and father and family. Then, by the age of twelve, you're told it's a man. And the process continues as a woman grows older — her power leaps from one man to the next and then when she marries, her total identity, all of her sense of power, is invested in her husband, her husband's career; her children, her children's careers, and she is left aimless and ailenated from herself.

There is another context of this alienation. It's an alienation of women from men which deals with the basic socialization of a man to ignore and fight off his deeply emotional feelings, to not turn out to be a 'fag.' Because of this, many women complain that most men both ignore and cannot participate in discussion of the sensitivity and emotional levels of their personalities and the woman's personality.

For a black this inner power is almost impossible to obtain as well, given the historical position he or she has been placed into, which leads to both an economic and psychological position of powerlessness. Clearly, a black person cannot be stable nor completely equal with whites, dealing in the economic realm, due to stereotyped images from the history of slavery.

And there is another context of this alienation as well. It's an alienation of blacks from whites because of the socialization of whites to ignore and fight off the equality of blacks and the cultural aspects of African life. The fact is that whites have robbed blacks of their inherited past, their heritage. This was part of the manipulatory methods of Southern white culture in the selling of slaves from the same tribes to different regions of the South in order that the cultural bonds would disintegrate.

We can clearly see that both women and blacks are slaves in our society. Their history, their sense of self-power, has been robbed from them. Needless to say, what is needed is a change of the social system from one which is based upon competition, based upon the winner and the looser, based upon pitting one against the other, to one which perpetuates a more humanistic attitude from one person to another, one which would perpetuate a common bond rather than animosity.

But until the system of capitalism is either revolutionized or grows into socialism, women and blacks can only pull themselves together as a group in order to get in touch with themselves and a sense of inherent power. This is called political separatism.

Many men and whites cannot deal with separatism on an emotional level because they view it as defeatism, as a method used because women and blacks cannot deal in any other way with the problems before them.

But clearly, both blacks and women are offered a system in which they must marry themselves to something in order to have a sense of power. For women it is a man. For blacks it is unfortunately only a second rate position in society. Perhaps it is protective to accept these granted positions; however, as Plath says in her poem "The Applicant", "They'll bury you in it." So some choose not to bury themselves, but to pull out. To be separate.

And in this frame of reference, in a political reference, maybe more people can better understand separatism.

Refutation of 'Silent Seventies'

By BILL RIORDAN

It's almost too good to be true. I'm proud of that handful of writers who recently, better late than never, have stimulated some political discussion on this campus. For the first time in recent memory, an ongoing, articulate dialogue is being engaged in that raises questions about our lives that are so fundamental they are often ignored. It's been quite a while since our editorial page has been this lively. It's a refreshing refutation of that awful phrase, "silent seventies."

Ironically, though, the intensity of feeling behind this discussion, which seems to be drawing capitalists and socialists alike out of the woodwork, may be acting to overshadow the content and meaning of each article with emotion-charged rhetoric that turns thoughtful observers into propagandists. My fear is that, in the heat of this battle, so much ideological dust is being kicked up that nobody can see the issues beneath it all. It would be a shame to see this debate die because of its very high level of intensity.

For a week or two now, the Collegian editorial page has featured a vigorous debate in which each side, that is, left and right, has taken turns criticizing the other and promoting its own. As I said, I'm thrilled that some life has been breathed into this paper, but I'm afraid that this particular format widens communication gaps, overlooks down-to-earth problems, and, worst of all, alienates readers. When capitalism and socialism are alternately defined as causes and cures of the world's ills, the discussion escalates to an emotional dogfight that abandons inquiry into the nature of the issues.

There's a reason, perhaps, for that. When pressed to define the ideology in real terms, i.e., as applied to concrete realities, both socialists and capitalists are left speechless. To prove that statement, I'll bring up some of those issues and challenge and defy Authors Sampson, Mathieu, Crane, and the rest to respond.

Overpopulation. Did someone really mean to imply that overpopulation is an inherently capitalistic problem, and that socialists could deal with it? Explain! Please don't muddy the issue with dogmatic rhetoric about capitalist exploitation of the working class. That's an insult to the reader's intelligence. Take this issue out of the ideological clouds and tell me how socialism would deal with this most awful of all the world's problems. You, too, Mr. Mathieu. If capitalism is the best way to organize human activity, why has it failed to curb population growth?

Resources. They're running out. Are the capitalists at fault? No doubt Americans are gross over-consumers and its shameful. The way to use resources is wisely and efficiently. What provides the incentive for efficiency, S. Sampson, in a system where production and pricing are immune to the effects of competition and demand? Don't smile, capitalists. This is the country that makes cars that get eleven miles to the gallon.

Abortion. Anybody who has arrived at a firm, unmovable opinion about abortion is a fool. This issue is ripping families and nations apart all over the world. Tell me what's right, capitalists, I thought you had the answers. The Left is claiming that capitalism cheapens life by making commodities out of people. Is that true? But all the leftists I know support abortion without batting an eyelash. These are the ones calling for freeing people to develop their potential to its fullest!

Food. There's not enough. Russia has to buy grain from us. Score one for the capitalists? Not quite: ten million Americans don't get enough to eat. China feeds itself, but I don't know how mental starvation compares with the physical kind. If it's the best of all possible worlds, what's wrong with permitting a look at the others?

Both capitalist and socialist ideologists today make the blunder of describing the world with century-old theories, theories that are obsolete, theories that have become irreverant with time. Worse, the struggle, the rift between left and right, only diverts human energy away from these issues. These approaches revolve about particular interpretations of human nature, say, cooperative vs. competitive. But to base a way of life upon such necessarily subjective interpretations is only repressive. Who's to say what our nature is? It's pathetic when one side rejoices at the other's failure to cope with a problem that is hurting everyone.

Again, what I want to see in the Collegian is thoughtful, mature discussion of what things are wrong and why, not vindictive banner-waving. The former opens up issues while the latter obscures them. And when it comes to potential, hat of a college newspaper, relatively free of fears about circulation and sponsorship, is unmatched.

Food drive; lend support

To the Editor:

Throughout this week, the UMass Newman Club and the Pan-Hellenic Council [the organization of sororities] are jointly sponsoring a Thanksgiving Food Drive. Please give us your support!

All food collected will be donated to the Open Pantry in Springfield. The Open Pantry is an emergency food program, serving Springfield, Holyoke, Ludlow, and the greater Springfield area. If a family must seek federal or state assistance, due to poverty or loss of income, the Open Pantry provides them with food until the welfare check or food stamps arrive.

We ask you to donate one can of food. There is a table in the Campus Center concourse, a table in the Newman Center, and boxes in each dormitory on campus for this purpose.

A family at starvation level needs staple food, such as: beef stew, chunky soup, peanut butter and crackers, cereal, powdered milk, and canned fruit and vegetables. For this reason, we ask for these items.

Please, remember the poor of our area this Thanksgiving. One can of food, for a very worthy cause. Thank you.

Fences child-proof?

To the Editor:

The drowning of little Nagi Kawasaki at North Village last week stunned us all in North Amherst. That it happened so near and in an adjoining swamp stunned me. However, Ms. Crill's letter took me aback almost as much. As a parent of a five-year-old, it blows me away to read that grown people see a danger yet are letting time go by waiting for Big Brother to do something about it. If the danger is truly there, procrastination is criminal. How much would a toddler-proof fence cost when split several ways? Ms. Crill demands a "child-proof" fence for the swamp. As an obstacle to kids over six, there ain't no such animal.

The fence will eventually go up — to become more of an obstacle to parents looking for their children than to the children themselves. Accompanying the fence there will exist also a false sense of security and I worry about the safety of kids whose parents would use a babysitter "...a fence and gate for each of the...backyards."

Bill Jenkins

Letters Policy

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian welcomes all letters to the editor. They must be signed and include the author's address and phone number. Organizations may submit letters, but they must include a name and phone number for reference purposes.

Letters must be typed, double-spaced, at sixty spaces per line, and no more than two pages. They should be sent to the Excutive Editor, c-o the Collegian, or dropped off at the Collegian office.

All letters are subject to editing for either content or space according to the judgement of the editors. Due to space limitations, there is no guarantee that all letters received will be printed. Letters for a specific publication date must be submitted by 4:00 p.m. the day preceding that date.

Sun Day proposed

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The folks who brought you Earth Day almost eight years ago are preparing for a gala Sun Day on Wednesday next May 3.

"Where Earth Day atoned for the buffalo, the whale and the cutting of the redwoods, Sun Day will be a day of atonement for the Santa Barbara oil spill, the Scotia mine disater and the near-meltdown at the Fermi nuclear plant," said Sun Day official Peter Harnick.

While most Sun Day functions are still in the "idea" stage, organizers said the day will start with a sunrise celebration on Cadillac Mountain in Acadia National Park, Maine, where the sun first hits the United States, and move westward with a concert at the United Nations Plaza in New York, clothesline art displays, solar energy exhibits, teach-ins, and political demonstrations.

Boston and Atlanta are preparing solar fairs while a group in Martinsburg, W. Va., plans a solar home tour, organizers said.

"There's even some talk of a national ice cream chain featuring a Sun Day sundae," said Richard Munson, a Sun Day coordinator

Sen. Charles Percy, R-Ill., is planning to introduce a Sun Day resolution in Congress, a member of his staff said.

Considered a "modern celebration of a primitive holiday," the festivities will not only praise the sun for sprouting seeds, but will include demonstrations of solar technology illustrating the sun's ability to "heat and cool homes, desalinate the seas and power factories."

"The sun has been rising every morning and setting every evening for billions of years, delivering energy to your doorstep or rooftop," the Sun Day group said in a statement. "It doesn't foul the air, land or water and there isn't a thing a terrorist, hijacker or multinational company can do to prevent sun power from reaching you."

Incumbents enjoy election advantage

WASHINGTON (UPI) — An incumbent House member running for re-election starts off with more than a half million dollar advantage over challengers, says a study made public yesterday by Americans for Democratic Action.

The ADA analysis includes the congressman's salary, his staff allowance, mailing privileges and office space among advantages the incumbent has — even though they may not be used directly in the campaign.

"The huge advantage accruing to all incumbents over challengers is clearly evidenced by the remarkable staying power of both House and Senate members," the study concluded.

The report said in every House election in the past decade, at least 96 percent of incumbents who sought office were re-elected —except in the post-Watergate upheaval year of 1974 when the figure dropped to 90 percent.

The study said the incumbent gets a $387,984 "advantage" in salaries and office space — primarily from his own $57,500 salary and the $255,144 allowance for a staff of up to 18 persons.

Members of Congress get another $143,245 "advantage" in communications and travel, including the $100,000-a-year franking privilege. Finally, there are $35,962 in miscellaneous benefits —for a grand total of $567,191.

Three man ring accused in check fraud

NEW HAVEN, Conn. (UPI) — FBI officials say the arrest of three men who were allegedly trying to sell $130,000 in fake traveler's checks raises concern about a possible nationwide ring.

Thomas R. Dugan, FBI special agent in charge in Connectinut, said Saturday the bogus checks were all in 350 denominations and were of excellent quality. He said the checks were made by photooffst printing and he was concerned about a possible nationwide trend.

The suspects were arrested Friday after they allegedly tried to sell the counterfeit checks, made to look like those sold by American Express, to seemingly reluctant buyers who were really undercover agents.

The agents haggled the buying price down to $23,000 from $48,000, Dugan said. He said the bogus checks were confiscated shortly after the sale was made to FBI agents inside a Wethersfield motel room.

WOMEN GREEKS may be allowed back on the Stanford campus, after a 33-year ban of sororities, there. The Board of Trustees is considering lifting the ban which they imposed in 1944 because the dual system of sorority and University housing at that time was "causing serious disruption among women students."

Title IX of the Education Amendments Act of 1972 has caused the trustees to consider Stanford in violation because men currently have a housing privilege — subjective selection — which women do not, according to a story in The Stanford Observer.

Thus far, only three national sororities of the nine formerly on the campus have expressed an interest in returning.

HAPPY HOUR at Texas A&M occurs every day in the campus library, from 8:30 to 10 a.m. and 12:30 to 1 p.m., and it's free, according to a recent piece in the Battalion newspaper.

The lines of faculty and students don't do any drinking, either, once they get inside. What they do get is free computer time that is valued at $4,000 in a busy month.

The Happy Hour is intended for students not taking any courses in which funds are alloted for computer work, but who want to use the computer, anyway. The free time is financed by the office of the vice-president for academic affairs.

SPEAKING OF WHICH reminds that an MIT student editor is being tried for his part in publishing an allegedly racist photo in the Freshman Picturebook.

The photo of Grogo, the statue of a gorilla used as a mascot and symbol by the Technique, appeared captioned "Harvey Grogo — Kampala, Uganda." The result was a charge that the picture and caption were a racial slur against black Africans.

MIT president Wiesner and Chancellor Gray agreed, while the picturebook's publisher said the entire matter was intended as humor and had been blown out of proportion.

The Ramones in concert Wednesday at Hatch

By now you've no doubt heard of punk rock. But the Union Program Council now gives you a remarkable chance to see and hear the real thing for yourself, right on your home turf — at the Hatch this Wednesday evening, as The Ramones hit town for a one-night stand.

Leading perpetrators of American punk rock — or "new wave" music — The Ramones have just released their third Sire album, "Rocket To Russia," which comprises "Teenage Lobotomy," "Cretin Hop" and "Sheena Is A Punk Rocker." Their songs are all short (under three minutes) and furious walls of sound, replete with truly memorable melodies, and their stage show is one of the most exciting around.

If only out of a desire to witness punk rock in person, if only out of curiosity, or if only to hear some great rock 'n' roll, then The Ramones are not to be missed.

Boston center director speaks on energy policy

Dr. John Neely, executive director of the Center for Energy Policy in Boston, will speak tomorrow about the economic and social consequences of a national energy policy at 4 p.m. in Herter Hall 231. His talk will be titled "The Failure of Energy Policy, Why New England Will Use More Oil Rather than Less" and will be followed by a question period.

Neely has been involved with energy-related matters since the early 70s, when he worked with the Conservation Law Foundation of New England. Since January of this year he has been with the Center for Energy Policy, Inc. involved in a variety of energy-related matters and serves as a resource to various agencies and organizations.

Minister raps grade school sex education

BOSTON [UPI] — A Boston Unitarian minister has blasted a proposal to introduce the issues of birth control and family planning to children in the first grades of school.

The Rev. James K. Allen of the First Parish Church in the city's Dorchester section said the ideas presented over the weekend by a Chicago physician to the American Public Health Association are "preposterous."

The clergyman was referring to the suggestions of Dr. Lonny Meyer, of the Midwest Population Center.

The Rev. Allen said he supports sex education but said the discussion of birth control and other issues at that age "would replace the innocent play of children with incest and immorality."

Jewish documentary film showing in Thompson

"Let My People Go" will be shown in Thompson 104 today at 8 p.m. This film contains rare footage which captures the essence of the Jewish people — the early settlers of kibbutzim in the 1920's, the beginning of the Arab-Jewish conflict in Palestine, the Holocaust, the illegal immigration to Palestine following World War II and the founding of the state of Israel.

The film, sponsored by B'nai B'rith Hillel, is free and open to the public.

A PROGRAM IN WINTER LEISURE LIFETIME SKILLS IN THE HEART OF VERMONT'S NORTHEAST KINGDOM.

CROSS COUNTRY SKIING
SNOWMOBILING
SNOWSHOEING
ALPINE SKIING

The major emphasis of the institute will be to provide an effective experience for people who seek an introduction in developing skills in alpine skiing, cross country skiing, snowshoeing, and snowmobiling. During the ten day program, students will be conducted through a series of winter skills models. The instruction will be scheduled so that the student proceeds along various levels of competency. This should result in a growth pattern as the student is exposed to all five winter skills in repeating patterns over the duration of the institute The winter skills learning models will be supervised by staff of Lyndon State College's Department of Recreation and Leisure Studies.

Your Birthday

By Stella Wilder

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 14

Born today, you are one of life's merry-makers, always seeming to find some reason for rejoicing. While aware of the ills about you, you refuse to allow them to conquer you. You will not allow disappointment to be anything more than momentary; certainly you will not allow it to deteriorate into discouragement. In short, you are always ready to begin again, regardless of the difficulty involved.

A generous individual, you often give away to others precisely what you need for material success; for you consider peace of mind, personal satisfaction and spiritual growth more important than any material or financial gain. Beware not to carry this attutude to such extremes that you cause the suffering of family and friends.

You get along extremely well with people, although sometimes you prefer nothing more than solitude. Your ambitions are to fulfill your basic nature rather than gain a position of authority. You have leadership qualities, but can also understand when a follower must take the initiative, must anticipate needs and act to secure them.

To find what is in store for you tomorrow, select your birthday and read the corresponding paragraph. Let your birthday star be your daily guide.

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 15

SCORPIO(Oct.23-Nov.21) - Yesterday's good time may become today's nightmare if you are not wise in the story you tell. Don't exaggerate.

SAGITTARIUS(Nov.22-Dec.21) - Carry a good frame of mind to the day's employment. A depressed attitude serves no one.

Pats falter again as offense fails

MIAMI [Compiled from wires] — The Miami Dolphins struck for a second period touchdown and their defense then took over as the Dolphins defeated the Patriots, 17-5, yesterday at the Orange Bowl to hand the Pats their second straight loss.

Gary Davis ran in from one-yard out for the second quarter score, while Gary Yepremian added a 33-yard field goal in the fourth quarter to provide the Dolphins with hard-earned points before Nat Moore caught a 26-yard touchdown pass with 5:51 to play to give Miami an insurance score.

New England's only offensive score was a 33-yard field goal by John Smith, which made it 7-3 in the fourth quarter as Miami's defense held on grimly. Miami punter Mike Michel took a safety intentionally on the game's final snap, standing in the end zone as the gun went off.

The stunning kickoff return by Davis set up Yepremian's field goal to give the defenders a bit more breathing room.

Smith's field goal came after an unnecessary roughness penalty on a Miami punt gave New England the ball on its own 47 yard line.

Ike Forte, who earlier in the second half had a 33-yard touchdown run called back by a holding penalty, started the drive by skirting right end for 16 yards and one play later bursting eight yards up the middle.

But on the kickoff following Smith's three-pointer, Davis darted up the left sideline, swung across midfield and raced to the Patriot 22 yard line. Miami worked down to the two on Griese passes of three yards to Don Nottingham and 15 to Moore.

The offense stalled and Pete Barnes threw Griese back to the 18, forcing Yepremian's field goal.

New England threatened on its first possession, but was unable to muster much offense the remainder of the half. The Pats were shut out through a first half for the first time in 25 games.

The first quarter threat came when New England got the ball on the Miami 43 on a short punt and 15-yard penalty. The Patriots moved to the Dolphin 16 in seven plays but a procedure penalty pushed them back to the 21 and Smith was wide with a 37-yard field goal attempt.

The Dolphins blunted a late New England drive, taking over deep in their own territory. Rather than risk a punt return or blocked kick in the closing seconds, Michel took the snap and ran around in the end zone for five seconds — giving up the safety as the clock expired.

with three interceptions. Just super," said Sullivan.

Secondary coach Jim Reid was happy and relieved when his secondary responded the way it did.

"We just had a couple of breakdowns the whole afternoon. Croasdale went one-on-one with Pope four times and won three out of the four. I'm proud of the people back there and I love them all," said Reid.

"A lot of people said we were going to lose the game in the secondary all week and we worked hard all week to prevent that. I think Allen is even a better quarterback than Leamon Hall of Army and we stopped Allen all but once," Reid added.

The offense's reaction was nothing but pride for the defense.

"Things weren't going as well as we hoped in terms of moving the ball but after that goal line stand, we knew we had to repay the defense in some way. They made life easier for us," said offensive lineman Gerry Greene.

"The defense was phenomenal," said tight end Moses Williams.

"At halftime, we said that we were not going to let the game get away from us. As far as UNH was concerned, the door was closed for them. The defense slammed it right in their faces," Williams added.

"It was the greatest goal line stand in the history of UMass football. A real classic, because it meant everything," said head coach Dick MacPherson.

run across athletic fields for the first mile and then enter a hilly, treacherous stretch of two miles. In this period, the runners will go through horse and riding paths, rugby fields, narrow woods with sharp ditches and get themselves ready for "Cemetery Hill."

"Cemetery Hill", said O'Brien, is about the steepest hill on a cross country course I have ever seen. It gets its name not because runners pass out when they get to the top of the hill, but because there is a little cemetery at the top."

The runners then sprint down the hill for a half mile to the finish line.

An hour after the varsity race, assistant coach Arnie Morse will send 12 runners to the line to compete in the JV race. The JV harriers, coming off winning the New England titles are favored to win the JV IC4A's, which they won last year.

Harriers invade Bronx to face Eastern powers

By MIKE BERGER
Collegian Staff

All season long, the UMass cross country team has been living in the shadow of Providence College, ranked fourth in the country. Today's meet, the IC4A's, will decide just how well UMass itself can do on a national level.

Providence, by virtue of winning the New England's last week, was given exemption from running in today's meet scheduled for Van Cortland Park in the Bronx. (12:00 varsity race). The Friars will compete next Monday in the nationals held in Spokane, Washington.

The top two New England colleges to finish in today's game will qualify for the nationals.

With Providence not competing, the team title is up for grabs. UMass has a good chance for the top spot but according to head coach Ken O'Brien, the competition will be stiff.

Rutgers, Villanova, and Georgetown represent the three best teams in the New York-New Jersey region and are very similar in team personnel.

"On paper, Villanova has the best talent but in actual performances this year, Rutgers is my choice to win the meet," said O'Brien.

Rutgers comes into today's meet, rated 9th in the country and undefeated, with a 9-0 record.

"They have no one really super but they have seven runners on about the same level, which in comparison to our team could be a mixture of seven Mike Quinn's and Stetson Arnolds," said O'Brien.

Villanova was highly regarded by O'Brien at the beginning of the year but he termed its 8-1 record "lackadasical". The Wildcats are led by South African transfer Sidney Marcey, 3:56 miler.

"If Villanova runs to potential, they could win the meet, but I am more scared of Rutgers than I am of Villanova," said O'Brien.

Georgetown is regarded by O'Brien as the sleeper in today's meet. It finished third in last year's IC4A's, and are ranked 11th in the country. It is led by George Peterson, a four minute miler, and Jim Dobrynski, seventh finisher in last year's IC4A race.

For UMass to do well requires good performances from two important variables. For the last two weeks, O'Brien's squad has been buoyed by the returns of injured runners Mike Quinn and Stetson Arnold. Quinn won the Yankee Conference meet and placed 4th in the New England's, while Arnold ran sixth in last week's NE race.

Still, O'Brien cannot predict just how well the two will do today.

"Knowing the type of injuries they have had (Quinn-ankle, and Arnold-hypoglycemia), I can't say just how well they will do. If we are to do anything it depends on those two," said O'Brien.

Secondly, the finish of UMass runners Frank Carroll, Lou Panaccione, Matt Wolff, Tom Wolff, and Michael Morris in relation to Quinn and Arnold will also determine the finish of the harriers.

"If Mike and Stetson do well, the rest of the runners will have to be close, because in all three cases, Georgetown, Villanova, and Rutgers have the caliber of runners that are equal to Quinn and Arnold. We can't afford to have two runners in the top ten and then wait another ten places before our next runner comes in," said O'Brien.

Last year UMass finished 8th as a team in a strange race which saw Mike Quinn get stomach cramps in the middle of the race and drop out, and little known (in x-country circles) Harvard University win the team title. title.

Two aspects in UMass' favor are that 23 of the top 50 finishers in last year's race have graduated, and secondly, UMass more than any other team has run the rough Van Cortland Park course reasonably well.

In the heart of the Bronx, overlooking Manhatten College, 270 runners will line up,

Merwomen open season

By ELLEN DAVIS
Collegian Staff

The UMass women's swimming and diving team "kicks off" its season tonight, as it hosts Smith and Mount Holyoke in a 6:00 tri-meet at NOPE pool.

"It should be a good meet," says UMass coach John Nunnelly. "With the five-college rivalry, everyone should be psyched."

Nunnelly is particularly excited about tonight's meet, because it is his first as a collegiate coach.

Although the 25 swimmers and divers on this year's UMass team have been practicing for two months now, Smith and Mount Holyoke have been training since the first day of school, and are at the peak of their seasons.

"That will make it tougher for us," said Nunnelly.

Last year the team beat Mount Holyoke, but didn't swim Smith.

This year, the two visiting teams have selected to swim a "long program" meet, where the 12 swimming events are twice their usual length.

Since UMass is primarily a sprinting team, that could be a disadvantage, said Nunnelly.

The fact that the scoring will be divided three ways could also make the meet a close one. "Every race will count," he said.

Although Nunnelly expects "good performances all-around", the team's strongest event should be the 200-yard butterfly, in which UMass will have New England champion Deb Schwartz entered.

Nunnelly is also counting on the team's "outstanding divers," who compete in two events, for extra points. The five divers on the team are coached by Doug Forsyth.

Tonight's meet is the first of 14 for the UMass women, whose season runs until March.

For the team's six home meets, volunteers to help with timing and judging are needed.

The team's next meet, and first dual away from home, will be against Williams on Wednesday.

Stickers soar to Nationals

By JIM GLEASON
Collegian Staff

> "I knew we could do it and we did it. We're going to Colorado."
> —the UMass field hockey team

CAMBRIDGE — The UMass field hockey team reached the goal it has been playing for all season — a chance to compete in the Nationals at Colorado next week.

Though the Minutewomen were edged, 1-0, in the Northeast finals, they were assured a seed in the National Playoffs by virtue of their 2-1 win over Springfield in the semifinals this weekend at Harvard Stadium.

UConn won the Northeast EAIAW playoffs with its 1-0 victory over UMass.

The UMass team played the best hockey of the tournament and its most consistent hockey of the season to place second.

A proud UMass coach Judith Davidson was admirable of her team's performance.

"I am so pleased that we showed what we can do. Everybody on the team played so well and I'm very proud of them," she said.

The tournament started on Thursday morning with 16 tense teams trying to advance. UMass was paired against a virtually unknown Maine but quickly sized up its chances.

"I knew right after the game started we were going to win because I could see we were better in every position," said Judy Kennedy.

And win the Minutewomen did, 2-1. UMass started quick and strong and had a 2-0 lead at halftime on goals by Lynsie Wickman. The goals were identical and scored off penalty corners when Jody Wickman flicked the ball out front to Cheryl Meliones, who caught it and left it for Lynsie who drove the ball into the lower right-hand corner of the goal.

UMaine scored with 19 minutes left in the game and applied pressure as UMass seemed to let down. But a solid defense-led by goalie Kathy Gipps, sweeper Gayle Hutchinson, and right back Kelly Salls — kept the ball out and gave UMass the victory.

Instead of returning to the hotel for the day, the team had to stay for another game at 3:00.

The UMass squad, already tired from its earlier game, stretched out and warmed up to play Dartmouth. It took the Minutewomen a while to get going and the score was 0-0 at halftime. Realizing their whole season's hopes were on the line, the stickers applied early second half pressure.

Right from a penalty corner, UMass also scored and forced the Big Green goalie to cover up on the ball in the scoring circle. Resulting from that action, Sue Kibling was awarded a penalty stroke. After a slight delay, Kibling drove a hard shot into the lower left hand corner to give the team a 1-0 lead.

Play for the following minutes was even with both teams getting good chances to score. Then, from a seemingly harmless play, came one of the most outstanding individual efforts of the tournament.

Laura O'Neil stickhandled and dipsy-doodled for 30 yards past Green defenders and broke in alone on the helpless goalie. O'Neil managed to keep her balance long enough to hit the ball in the net.

That gave UMass a 2-0 lead and the win but more importantly supplied the team with confidence as it looked ahead to the next day's game with Springfield.

"We needed not only to win those games but to play well and we did," reflected Davidson. "Laura's goal was our first 'regular' goal and we needed to know we could score those."

It was late in the afternoon when the game ended and the team was ecstatic but drained — both mentally and physically. Each player was tired and most had minor injuries. The only thought which kept them going was that Springfield was next.

Ginger Bulman said, "I think it was good that we played Springfield because I don't think we could have 'gotten up' for anybody else. We knew what we had to do to win."

The field was ready for the Minutewomen-Chief clash with both teams knowing the winner was headed for Colorado.

"I was never so nervous for any single game in all my life," said Judy Kennedy.

The first half was, for the most part, played evenly as neither team wanted to take chances and there was no score at halftime. Hutchinson made some great last effort saves when the ball laid on the goal line to keep the game tied.

In the second half, Jody Wickman scored her first goal of the year from a loose ball in front of the net.

Six minutes later, O'Neil scored the insurance goal on another fine individual effort. Springfield's Nita Lamborghini put in a meaningless goal with 30 seconds remaining to make the score appear close. The fact is that most of the UMass team was waiting around as the clock ran down the final seconds.

The team was off to Colorado.

However, UMass had one game left to decide the Northeast Champions and it was against UConn, upset winners over UNH. A tired and battered UMass team took the field and quickly fell behind 1-0.

Not accustomed to losing, the stickers gave it all they had and controlled play but could not score. They hit the goalpost twice and once had the ball spinning on the goal line but couldn't get it in. The team lost, 1-0, and placed second in the Northeast.

Davidson was happy with her team's performance despite the loss. "They gave it everything they had and came back even though they were dead (tired)," she said.

The team politely watched as UConn accepted its trophies and celebrated with champagne. The Minutewomen left the stadium separately and dejected, momentarily forgetting their season's dream had come true.

But someone yelled to Jody Wickman, "C'mon, hold your head up, you played well and you're flying to Colorado."

Booters bop PC, 2-0; Hodgdon sets record

By MARK MARCHAND
Collegian Staff

Senior goaltender Mark Hodgdon broke the record for shutouts in one season with his sixth blanking of the year on Saturday afternoon to lead the UMass soccer team to a 2-0 win over the Friars of Providence College on Hicks Field in the final contest of the regular season. Prior to the game, the Minutemen learned that they were selected as one of four teams in the upcoming ECAC Playoffs. The announcement came after UMass was snubbed by the selection committee for the New England Division One playoffs last week.

The UMass win gives the Minutemen a final record of 10-4 while Providence finished its season at 5-8-1.

"Our defense wanted the shutout for overall pride," said the record setting Hodgdon. "I'm just glad that the regular season ended on this happy note."

Hodgdon's performance wasn't the only record set on Saturday as forward Joel Mascolo, named Yankee Conference Player of the Week for his work last week, equaled the record for assists during one season when he notched his seventh of the year.

Mascolo is now fourth in the Yankee Conference in scoring while teammate Tasso Koutsoukos holds the number two spot.

The scoring for UMass was opened up by freshman Bob Abt who slid a rebound past Friar netminder Bob Patton at 28:44 of the first half with the assist going to Bill Leary. It was Abt's first career goal.

12 minutes later, Koutsoukos finished up the scoring when he took a perfect lead pass from Mascolo and beat Patton with a low shot to the right.

The Minutemen had plenty of other chances to increase their margin but just couldn't connect on the last pass during several offensive thrusts.

"We had the chances to run it up but just didn't do it," said UMass mentor Russ Kidd.

"It was just a solid, controlled game of soccer," continued Kidd. "We only gave them two really good scoring chances."

Friar coach Bill Doyle said that UMass' passing offense caused his backs to back up and play a defensive game.

"In stead of three halfbacks, we had six of 'em playing back," explained Doyle. "We just let them handle the ball too much."

One of the scoring threats for the Friars came late in the second half when one of the Friars got the ball in front of the UMass net with no one, including Hodgdon, in front of him. Instead of taking his time, the Providence player got off a hurried shot that sailed over the net to the relief of the entire UMass bench.

"I figured that he'd take his time and just slide it in with no one around," said a relieved Hodgdon.

The Minutemen are now awaiting final details on the upcoming ECAC tourney which will take place this Saturday. The four teams that have been selected are: Oneonta College, Adelphi University, Boston University, and UMass. UMass would like to get a chance to prove that the New England Tournament Committee shouldn't have overlooked them, according to team members.

Saturday's game also marked the last regular season contest for UMass seniors Larry Aronson, Ed Niemiec (co-captains), Andy Moore, Willie Sorenson, and Hodgdon. Each were announced before Saturday's game with a summary of their deeds by announcer Bob Lazarus who is also graduating this spring after doing a wonderful job at the Minuteman home games.

BOOTER BANTER: A tip of the hat to ballgirls Nancy Maki, Lisa Newborg, Nancy Stechler, and Roberta D'Ambrosia. Their presence has added a touch of class to the Minuteman home games...Also, statistician Cindy Laborde, manager Barry Benson, and trainer JoAnne Celia deserve credit for the time and help that they both have contributed to the team...the booters finished strong with an awesome seven game winning streak...Hodgdon is ranked fourth among Yankee Con. netminders...if momentum is a key, the booters should do well in the ECAC tourney.

Dave Croasdale, who received the game ball for his three thefts, set up UMass's second score by picking off Allen's pass to intended receiver Lee Pope on the Wildcats' next series after the goal line stand. Croasdale stepped in front of Pope at his own 20-yard line, then raced 38 yards up the sideline to the New Hampshire 47.

UMass's offense took command, when six plays later, on the second play of the fourth quarter, fullback Hank Sareault rambled 16 yards to give the Minutemen a 12-0 lead.

On its next series, UMass drove 65 yards on eight plays — mostly due to the running of Sareault and reserve halfback Dave Douvadjian. A senior, Douvadjian entered the game mid-way through the second quarter, after Coleman was forced to leave the game because of an ankle injury. The slashing type runner was a big factor in UMass's success and was the game's leading ground gainer with 99 yards in 17 carries.

"This is the most I've ever played, I think," said the Greenfield native. "I was sorry to see Billy get hurt, but it meant a lot to me to be able to get in the game. Just to be a part of this and to have made a contribution is a great feeling."

But UMass's third score didn't come on the ground. Rather, quarterback Mike Fallon (eight completions in 17 attempts for 128 yards) surprised everyone in the stadium, when on a fourth and one situation at UNH's 21-yard line he hit John Romboli coming out of the backfield for the score.

Romboli was another key factor behind UMass's victory. In the first half he managed to keep the Wildcats pinned deep in their own territory with an adept display of punting. Twice he left New Hampshire stuck inside its own ten-yard line, and once he saved the Minutemen from possible disaster.

Near the end of the first period, Romboli went in to punt. Standing near his own 45-yard line he watched the snap from center sail over his head. He turned, caught the ball on the run, avoided a tackle, then somehow managed to get the kick off. Although it was listed as only a nine-yard punt, the play had actually saved the Minutemen almost 45 yards.

The matter of field position was the key in the opening half. UMass's defense allowed the Wildcats a miserly 60 total offensive yards in the half. The defense harassed Allen and limited Burnham to 57 yards rushing. Burnham did not enjoy his best afternoon as he finished with 81 yards in 23 carries. The strong senior halfback did score his team's only points for the day when he burst over from the one in the fourth quarter for his 22nd TD this season.

"We never had field possession that whole half," said Bowes. "That hurt us. We just weren't able to get anything going."

The Minutemen's first score came 9:39 into the first quarter on a one-yard plunge by Coleman. The touchdown was set up by a Fallon to Kevin Cummings pass that covered 49 yards and gave UMass possession at UNH's eight yard line.

Standing in the delirious locker room after the game, co-captain Peter McCarty summed up the team's feeling.

"Like the song says," said McCarty, referring to the Beanpot trophy which he held. "It's nice to have you back where you belong."

MINUTEMAN FUMBLINGS... Evidence of the Minutemen's pass rush was the statistic that showed Allen losing 46 yards on the day... Injuries took their toll as Coleman, John Willis and Ross Schubarth suffered ankle ailments...

DURHAM, N.H. — The UMass football team earned quite a bit more than the Yankee Conference championship when it defeated New Hampshire, 19-6, Saturday at Cowell Stadium.

The Minutemen, in all likelihood, will be the East representative in the national Division II playoffs. They may also win the Lambert Cup, symbolic of the top middle-sized Eastern collegiate grid team. In addition, UMass has a good chance of finding itself ranked number one in the nation in Division II.

To top it all off, this Saturday's UMass-Boston College game will almost definitely be telecast on a regional basis by ABC-TV.

First, the playoff picture. Unlike Division I college football competition, the NCAA has adopted a post-season playoff format for Divisions II and III.

Eight teams are selected for post-season play, which begins Nov. 26. The East, South, Midwest, and West regions are each represented by one team, while four other teams are named as at-large participants.

A representative from the NCAA said Thursday that the winner of the UMass-UNH game's chances of making the playoffs are "excellent."

The selections for the tournament must be made by Sunday.

The Lambert Cup may also be awarded to UMass since in the latest voting (made before the UNH game), the Minutemen trailed the Wildcats by just a few points. The latest Lambert Cup poll will be released today.

UMass, which was ranked third nationwide in last week's Division II poll, should move up at least one notch in the new rankings, to be released tomorrow night.

South Carolina State (ranked first) lost its last game of the season Saturday to Wofford College, 39-21. The Bulldogs ended the year with an 8-1-1 record.

North Dakota State (ranked second) finished its regular season with an 8-1-1 mark Saturday as it beat Northern Colorado, 27-3.

This week's Division II poll will be the last of the season.

The final game of the UMass season, against Boston College, is "99 per cent" set to be telecast, according to UMass assistant athletic director Bob O'Connell.

"I know that BC had been contacted regarding a telecast," O'Connell said last night, "but ABC had to go there to check out their lighting."

O'Connell said he expects to hear from Boston College today for definite word on the telecasting.

A classic team effort paves way for victory

By MIKE BERGER
Collegian Staff

DURHAM, N.H. — When all is said and done concerning the UMass victory Saturday over New Hampshire, people will still continue to discuss who the game ball should have gone to.

Cornerback Dave Croasdale received the ball from captains Peter McCarty and John Gladchuk and said there were a number of people equally deserving of the award.

"I could name a lot of names on this team who did a helluva job for us. John Romboli, Dave Douvadjian, Mike Fallon; but as a whole I have never played on such a team and have been this proud of everyone. The defense was unbelievable and the guys on it deserve a game ball," said Croasdale.

When fans look back and remember this game, they will remember the goal line stand of the UMass defense which not only changed the momentum of the game but also represented the character, hard work, and confidence of the total UMass defensive unit.

"I knew," said offensive lineman Jim Penta, "and everyone else knew that UNH was not going to score on those set of downs. Our defense has done that all year and it's certainly no surprise to anyone on this team."

With UMass leading 6-0 in the third quarter, UNH changed offensive strategies after being convinced that Bill Burnham was not going to get past the UMass defensive lines and the linebackers. In 11 attempts in the first half, Burnham had 57 yards but in total team rushing yardage, UNH had only 24 yards in 24 attempts.

UNH quarterback Jeff Allen decided to go to the air and connected on a 31-yard pass reception, giving UNH the ball on the UMass 17. After completing two more swing passes and a Burnham rush for three yards, the situation was set for the UMass goal line stand on the four-yard line.

Allen tried to bootleg it in but was stopped on the one- yard line by safety Steve McInnes. Burnham tried to bulldoze in but a combination of UMass defenders (Dave Bemis, Phil Puopolo, Duncan Gillan, Peter McCarty, Joe Harrington, and Dave Croasdale) stacked him up on the one foot line.

Burnham tried again, but again the UMass defensive line rose again to the occasion and he was stopped. There was no measurement. It was obvious. But how close did Burnham come?

"This close," said linebacker John D'Amato, holding his hands six inches close.

"That killed UNH's momentum right there," said lineman Bemis, who sacked Allen three times on the afternoon.

"I think we were able to do," Bemis said, "because we all believed in each other. Everyone was talking to each other, trying to help each other out."

Puopolo, another lineman, who sacked Allen another three times and was credited with the tackle twice on the goal line stand, credited his linemates.

"When I had my hands on Burnham, there were at least six pair of hands on him also. If UNH had tried again, we would have stopped him again. There was no way he was going to get in, because we knew if we stopped him then, UNH was broken," he said.

Safety Harrington felt the unsung hero of the defensive line was reserve Gillan, who replaced the injured John Willis in the second half.

"Gillan was unbelievable. He was there popping Burnham and keeping the pressure on Allen that whole second half. Losing Willis hurt at first but UNH could not get past Gillan. He was super," Harrington said.

The UMass secondary (Dave Croasdale, Kevin Sullivan, Harrington, and McInnes) knew the pressure was going to be on them when Allen started going to the air.

After the goal line stand, in its next possession, UNH went to the air on nearly every play. The result was a 39-yard pass reception setting up a UNH touchdown but the secondary didn't panic.

"We knew Allen was going to attack our area. So we had to buckle down even harder. Dave (Croasdale) was great. He had the toughest assignment (covering Lee Pope, UNH's leading receiver) and he responded

Supreme Court gets another college 'reverse bias' case

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Another "reverse discrimination" case arrived at the Supreme Court — this one dealing with required black representation on two student groups at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill.

The University filed the appeal after two white students, Lawrence Uzzell and Robert Arrington, won at the federal appeals court level on their challenge to the representation regulations.

After the students have had a chance to present their side, the justices will decide whether to review the case.

The court heard arguments last month on an appeal by the University of California from a state supreme court decision striking down the special minority admissions program at the university's Davis Medical school.

The "reverse discrimination lawsuit was brought by a twice-rejected white applicant, Allan Bakke.

In the North Carolina case, Uzzell and Arrington objected to student government regulations which:

—Required the student body president appoint two black members and two women to the 20-member campus governing council if two are not elected.

—Permitted an accused called before the student honor court to request that four of the seven judges be members of his or her race or sex.

Uzzell and Arrington contended that federal civil rights law guarantees them the right to attend a state university free from officially approved discrimination, and a taxpayer should not be compelled to subsidize a university that sanctions discrimination.

A panel of the 4th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals ruled that "without either reasonable basis or compelling interest, the composition of the council is formulated on the basis of race."

"This form of constituency blatantly fouls the letter and spirit of both the Civil Rights acts and the 14th Amendment," the opinion said.

The same ruling was made regarding the honor court.

On re-examination by the entire circuit bench, the panel was upheld 4-3.

The circuit court dissenters said the white students lacked standing to sue because "there is no actual or threatened injury to them." They also deplored the lack of a complete record of "the whole story...of discrimination or non-discrimination at the university."

In its appeal, the university said the lower court "ignored the distinction between the benign or harmless use of racial classifications and their invidious use" and "the principle that harm is an essential predicate to standing and (to) the existence of a real and concrete controversy."

Sam Greenlee a native Black American is a Author, Film Producer, and poet exquisitus. On Tuesday, Nov. 8, at the N.A.H. Lumumba Hut he presented the film he CO-PRODUCED, ENTITLED, "THE SPOOK WHO SAT BY THE DOOR". The film is an adaptation of his book, which is of the same name.

He stated that he had a difficult time trying to get his book published, in which case, he sent the rough draft to over twelve publishers before one accepted to publish his book. The book was published by Bantam Publishers in 1970 and came out in paperback in 1972.

The book became an immediate success directly after it was distributed to independent lower establishmentarians. Six months later Film Director and Actor Ivan Dixon approached Sam Greenlee with an idea to adapt his book into a movie, the two decided to produce the film themselves. Sam Greenlee suspected that had he released the filming rights to a multi-national cinemacrat the film would be turned into something completely opposite.

Sam Greenie and Ivan Dixon did not foresee the difficulties they would encounter trying to produce the film independently. They ran short of funds while filming and had to cut certian portions of the film that were very costly but doing this the total quality of the film was diminished.

Sam Greenlee served several years in the Foreign Service of the U.S. Information Service, while there he observed many C.I.A. men while assigned in Iraq, Indonesia and Greece. He characterized them as men with a guise of humility that would be comical if it were not for the fact that they are extremely dangerous.

The film is a indepth interpretation of the mannerisms of C.I.A. agents particularly in regards to white agents attitudes towards black agents and black peoples capabilities as a whole.

The film had such an impact on black youths that movie theaters gradually phased the film out. The film made a lot of money while it was being distributed, Sam Greenlee attributes the sporadic plug pulling of the film to the content of the film and the growing fear that black youths would take the film literally. As in the film where as the black C.I.A. recruit completes training and joins the ranks of the C.I.A. with alternus motives. The ploy of the flim is for the black agent to gain as much information as possible without being suspected of using that information against the C.I.A. He does completely disguise his intentions and organized a revolutionary army of black patriots in the name of freedom. The film is of such dynamic dimensions that theater owners regard it as a unprofitable comodity, but in reality the film made a more than appreciative profit up until the time that it was phased out.

Sam Greenlee stated that he can no longer get any of his work published neither can he get a decent job in his profession. The publishers industry stated Greenlee has "white listed him". In other word they consider his work subversive and of a decadent nature. Sam Greenlee stated that he is in exile in the writers industry and he is presently earning his livelyhood lecturing on college campuses and through speaking engagements.

Sam Greenlee considers his film a composit demonstration that black people can take those measure necessary to liberate themselves from the oppression institutions that control their lives.

Protests hit KKK border patrol unit

San Diego, Calif.

The Ku Klux Klan (KKK) began its vigilante patrols of the U.S.-Mexican border last week in the face of intense opposition from the Chicano community here.

U.S. Attorney General Griffin Bell ordered the KKK to halt its border activities Oct. 27.

Bell's warning that the Klan "cease and desist under penalty of law" was the first sign of federal opposition to the patrols. KK Grand Dragon David Duke received a guided tour of the San Ysidro border area near here last week from U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service (INS) official Alan Clayton.

Shortly after Bell's statement, his office issued a milder release explaining that while the Justice Department had no authority to actually stop the border hunts, such work should only be handled by legitimate law enforcement officials.

In Texas, meanwhile, Duke stated that the Klan plans to continue its border patrol despite Bell's threats.

And in San Ysidro, Calif., an estimated 750 people marched to the border and back Oct. 29 to protest both the KKK patrols and INS harassment.

Herman Baca of the Ad Hoc Committee on Chicano Rights set the tone of the rally when he told the multinational crowd: "As long as the migra (the name given to the INS) exists, racism and discrimination will continue. Only when we unite can we hope to eliminate these evils." Bacca also insisted that the much-publicized KKK border patrol was not the most important target for attack.

"The INS and the government set the tone and determine the policies that allow groups like the KKK to thrive," he said. "We must get to the root of the problem if we expect solutions."

The action was sponsored by a broad range of groups including the Black Federation, Puerto Rico Solidarity Committee (PRSC), Union of Democratic Filipinos and many individuals and community organizations.

In announcing formation of the border patrol Oct. 19, Duke said the Klan would stem a "rising tide of color washing over our border, washing away our culture, our racial fabric and changing America as we know it."

KLAN
WATCH

KKK leader David Duke at California border Oct. 25.

He said that 500 to 1000 KKK members would patrol the border "from San Diego to Brownsville (Tex.)," in special Klan-marked cars, armed where permitted, to "spot" undocumented immigrants coming across the border.

Duke's description of the size and extent of the patrol has so far not been matched by actual operations. Only a few KKK cars were on the road near the border during the first nights of the Klan vigilante undertaking.

Referring to the Klan patrol, Baca warned immediately after its announcement: "Let it be made clear right now, lest any of these individuals have the mistaken idea that Chicanos are going to submit passively, that any action taken by these groups against our people will call forth an immediate response in kind."

Baca made these comments at a press conference here on behalf of the committee, a newly formed grouping including CASA, the Chicano Federation, the Chicano Pinto Organization and organizations representing the local Black community.

"We're going to defend ourselves any way possible," Baca declared. He denounced the KKK patrol and the recent announcemtn of doubling of the INS border forces, from 2000 to 4000, as "the militarization of the border."

Baca emphasized that while the situation has been worsened by KKK involvement, the treatment of undocumented aliens by INS has been a longstanding affront to the Chicano community."

"We have decried repeatedly the human degradation, brutalities, harassments, rapings, and killings that have occurred on these borders," Baca said. "We have raised our voices against the manipulation of the undocumented alien issue to the point of hysteria by self-serving interests."

The new coalition called for the immediate removal of INS regional director James O'Keefe and Clayton, conductor of the guided tour for Duke. The group also urged the Carter administration to disavow the INS' implied endorsement of racist groups and vigilante gangs.

The night following Baca's denunciation of the KKK campaign, signs reading "Duke's boys are here" and "Chicano go back where you came from" were painted on the driveway of Baca's home. The home of another Chicano activist was broken into and a "KKK" was painted on the walls. A cross was burned near the home of Leon Williams, San Diego's only Black City Council member.

Formation of the Klan patrol marks an escalation of an 18-month KKK recruiting drive in San Diego County. Until recently, most Klan activity in this area was centered around the Marine base at Camp Pendleton, 35 miles north of San Diego. Klan incitement of racial prejudices among white Marines led to the incident at Camp Pendleton in which 14 Black Marines were charged with assaulting whites whom the Blacks believed to be KKK organizers.

As the Klan increased its public activities in the area, links developed between the KKK and other right-wing racist groups like the White Brotherhood and a local Nazi organization.

The Chicano coalition, leading to the fightback against the KKK has recently been joined by the local PRSC chapter, the Jewish Federation and the National Urban League. Baca explains that the Chicano-led alliance is trying to rally broad support here to stop Klan actions that threaten all minorities.

Chicanos Wary of U.S. 'Justice'

Agua Prieta, Mexico

A law of vigilantes, sherriffs' posses, vengeance and racism has long reigned along the Arizona-Mexico border. But Chicanos and Mexicans in the area say it's a system of law they can no longer tolerate.

The determination of the Spanish-speaking population to fight back against the white power structure was further strengthened with the recent acquittal of two Arizona men charged with the abduction, torture and robbery of three Mexicans.

Following the Oct. 7 acquittal by an all-white, middle-class jury, 1500 people demonstrated at the border station between here and Douglas, Ariz., to protest what Douglas city councillor Frank Barraza called "racist justice."

"Residents feel left out and insecure about the future of justice in this country," said Barraza.

It has become very obvious that a dual system of justice is present in the Southwest," said Rumanado Suarez, president of the Spanish-speaking Council of the Diocese of Tucson. "One system which protects the rich and the other which prosecutes the poor."

A coalition of people from Tucson, Douglas and Agua Prieta have called for a boycott of the Arizona border towns — many of them economically dependent on the shopping trade of the much larger Mexican cities — "until there is justice in the Hannigan case." (The Hannigans are the two brothers acquitted of the torture charges).

"We have called for a boycott of the U.S. border towns to show the government that the people of Mexico are concerned and to force the Civil Rights Division of the U.S. Justice Department to come in to investigate this case," said Barraza. "If a boycott is what it takes, it has to be done."

The boycott organizers have also demanded a boycott of the statewide Dairy Queen franchises owned by the Hannigans, a politically influential ranching clan.

The U.S. attorney in Arizona has called in the FBI to investigate the case, but as yet a full-scale investigation has not been initiated by the Justice Department.

The Mexican government, angered by the acquittal of the men, has condemned the action as "a flagrant violation of the civil rights of our countrymen" and "an example of racial sadism."

"The cynic jury has declared an open season on Mexican workers," said Raul Avaleyra, the Mexican consul.

During the three-week trial, the three victims of the sadistic practice — Manuel Loya Garcia, Eleasar Ruelas Zavala and Bernabe Herrera Mata — recounted their ordeal. They told of gunshot wounds, knife slashings, abuse of their genitals and burnings by hot iron rods by the Hannigans.

The Hannigans' attorney, Wes Polly, tried throughout the trial to discredit the intelligence of the three men rather than to prove his clients' innocence. Afterwards, he said: "I am satisfied there was the help of God."

The tensions created along the border area here by this example of "racist justice" may explode or alter the "jungle law" prevailing here, according to local observers.

"The people are madder than hell down there," said Charro Rabago, a Douglas city councillor. "Something bad is going to happen down there."

Framed Black Chicago Man Freed

CHICAGO — Two Chicago policemen almost beat Bennie Lenard to death last January after he got into a car accident with a white woman.

The state then turned around and charged the Black repairman with nine traffic violations and misdemeanor counts.

Despite the state's attempt to railroad Lenard, who is now partially blind due to the beating, a Circuit Court jury acquitted him on all but one count Oct. 21: carrying an open car of beer in his car. Sentencing will occur Nov. 10.

"I feel excellent about this," Lenard said following the verdict. "I'd like to thank all the people who helped me...who were concerned about the poor, working-class man."

Judge Harold Schrier, who acted in the interests of both the prosecution and the Melrose Park police throughout the proceedings, contended that the question of whether or not Lenard was beaten was "irrelevant to the case." He denied defense attorneys the right to enter into evidence photographs showing Lenard's condition following the attack.

At one point, defense attorney Edward Stein asked one of the cops, "How many times did you hit him (Lenard) with your billyclub?" Judge Schrier then threatened to hold Stein in contempt of court.

Lenard, a worker at the International Harvester plant in the Melrose Park section, was called racist names and beaten almost to death by Melrose Park policemen Sansone and Robert Argento following the minor traffic accident. Lenard has been hospitalized twice since the beating and has recently undergone surgery for a dislocated shoulder suffered in the beating.

The testimony of the prosecution's witnesses was full of contradictions concerning both minor and substantive details. None of the witnesses presented the same description of events between the time of the accident and the departure of the police car.

Police Testimony

During cross examination by defense attorneys, Sansone, who was the first policeman at the scene of the accident, testified that:

- He did not witness the accident.
- He did not know the location of either the arrest or tow reports.
- He did not sign any of Lenard's traffic tickets. Another police officer, who was never at the scene of the accident, signed the five violations.
- When he peered into Lenard's car he did not see a gun. Earlier, in the pre-trial motion, arresting officer Argento had testified that a gun was found on the front seat of the car.
- He signed a sworn statement at the police station that Lenard had refused a "breathalyzer" test. Earlier Sansone had testified that he had never been in the police station with Lenard.

Lenard's supporters argue that the "evidence" was manufactured in order to back up the state's phony charges and to draw attention away from the brutal beating.

Lenard's supporters attended every day of the two-week trial. Contingents from International Harvester, the United Auto Workers union, Cook County hospitals, high schools, junior colleges and anti-repression groups were present at the opening session.

"We're very happy with the verdict," concluded defense attorney Val Klink following the trial. "We feel that my client never would have been acquitted had it not been for the jury...The outcome shows it was a coverup from the beginning to hide the brutality Lenard was subjected to by police."

Kenya set to oust subversive Kenyan Somalis

NAIROBI — As Kenya-Soman relations continue to steadily deteriorate, the Kenya government has ordered a mass registration of all Kenyan Somalis living in the country and plans to expel those found to be engaged in subversive activities aimed at disrupting peace and stability.

The move has been coupled with demands from certain political circles in Kenya that the government here should close the Mogadishu embassy in Nairobi.

Leading the attack against the Somalia government is the head of Kenya Civil Service, G. Kariithi, who is also the Permanent Secretary in President Kenyatta's office. He has accused the Somali government of being engaged "in a process of forming a new shifta front focused on Kenya's north-eastern province."

The Kenya government's official view on the Somali-Ethiopia confrontation was made known recently when Kenya declared that "victory by Ethiopia was Kenya's victory," and made it clear that Kenya would fight alongside Ethiopia in the current "war" in the Ogaden area in Ethiopia.

What sparked off fresh developments in the already strained Kenya-Somalia relations was the recent arrest by Kenyan security forces of a number of Kenyans of Somali origin who had been issued with Somali government passports in Nairobi to enable them to travel to Somalia to join the country's national army.

Among those arrested was a former Kenya Army officer, Mohamed Rashid Ahmed, who admitted that he had been issued with a Somalia government passport and was heading for Mogadishu to join the Somali National Army.

According to security reports, the Kenya government estimates that more than 100 such passports have been issued to Kenyans of Somali origin in Nairobi in the last six months and that many of them have already left Kenya to join the fighting in the Ogaden area.

"The recruitment of such people like former Kenya Army men who have detailed knowledge of Kenya is worrying the Kenya government because such people will be sued by Somalia to attack Kenya," the reports say.

Although the Somali Embassy here has denied reports that it was recruiting Kenyans of Somali origin to fight in the Ogaden war, it has however, admitted that Somali government passports have been issued to Somalis on "humanitarian grounds to help them travel out of Kenya in search of employment outside."

In announcing the mass registration, Vice President Daniel arap Moi, said, "The Kenya while they involve themselves in anti-Kenya activities." He appealed to patriotic Kenyans to assist the authorities in identifying those known to have sympathised with the Somalia government "and the government will not hesitate to deport such people who are being used as agents of a foreign country against the territorial integrity of their mother country."

"Although the Kenya government has known for some time that Somalia was recruiting Kenyan Somalis with military knowledge to form a new shifta front to attack Kenya, the government here continues to adhere to the 1967 Arusha Declaration in which both Kenya and Somalia agreed to maintain and respect their sovereign integrity and borders," a Kenya government spokesman said.

Other Kenya government reports say there is an influx of Somali people, particularly in the urban areas of Kenya, believed to have crossed the border from Somalia and the fact that the Somali Embassy here has admitted issuing such people with Somali government passports makes the mass registration necessary so that Kenyans of the Somali ethnic group are easily identifiable to Kenyan security forces.

Black press not stilled in S. Africa

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa — The voice of the black press has not been stilled here despite the white government's closing of the World and arrest of its black editor Percy Qoboza.

The Post, billed as a revival of a similarly named black paper that closed here several years ago but still exists in Durban as a weekly, has taken up the torch.

It is being published three times weekly and is expected to become a daily. Its editor, John Miskelly, is white, but news editor Joe Latakgomo worked with Qoboza on the World.

Early editions have publicized the fact that students in Soweto and around the country are not only continuing their school boycott but have extended it to include junior highs as well as high schools.

The high school boycott has been going on for over a year.

U.N. votes S. Africa embargo

UNITED NATIONS — The Security Council has unanimously slapped a global embargo on military sales to South Africa, but the white supremacist regime says it can go it alone and called the embargo "an incitement to voilence."

The 15-0 vote Friday was the first time in U.N. history a member nation has been hit with such stiff punishment. U.N. Secretary General Kurt Waldheim called it "a momentous step" that will hasten the end of apartheid.

But in Pretoria, South African officials boasted their government manufactures enough weapons to support itself and warned the embargo would only serve as an incitement to violence among black nationalists.

Transport Minister Lourens Muller called U.S. Ambassador Andrew Young, who voted for the embargo, a "two-faced black racist" motivated by his own blackness rather than his concern for South Africa's blacks.

Western analysts agree Pretoria already is the strongest military power in Africa South of the Sahara and has the capacity to manufacture more than half its weaponry.

Although the U.N. embargo is mandatory — meaning U.N. member nations are subject to sanctions themselves if they violate the ban — it remains to be seen how strictly it will be enforced.

France, which has been one of South Africa's principal suppliers of foreign weaponry, joined the 15-0 vote and said it would take "all necessary steps" to make sure it is enforced.

But Israel, the second major source of foreign weapons for the Pretoria regime, issued a non-committal statement on the U.N. embargo and said it "will draw its conclusions like any other country."

Andrew Young said the arms embargo was a necessary reaction to South Africa's Oct. 19 crack-down on black dissidents, when it outlawed 18 anti-apartheid groups, banned several black leaders from speaking in public and shut down the nation's two leading black newspapers.

Buy Young added the United States holds the "fervent hope" that South Africa "will finally begin to talk and listen to its own people — black and white, Asian and colored, English — and Afrikaan — speaking — and work with them in moving away from the disaster which threatens that country."

All Security Council members hailed the four days of negotiations between hard - line black African and Western nations that led to the compromise resolution approved Friday.

The African nations wanted economic as well as military sanctions against South Africa, but Washington, Paris and London vetoed those proposals.

The West first favored only a six-month embargo, but later relented under the Africans' pressure and agreed to make the embargo open - ended.

But several U.N. ambassadors said they would press for the economic sanctions at some later time unless Pretoria changes its policies.

African Progress

ACCRA — Ghana has concluded a draft management agreement with the U.S. based European African Development Co. for the establishment of a free-port in Ghana.

The agreement, which is to be submitted to the Ghana government for approval soon, provides for the setting up of a "Ghana free zone authority" which will have responsibility for the organization and administration of the freeport.

Work on the opening of the port is to begin early next year, according to K.S. Adusei-Poku, chairman of Ghana's Capital Investment board.

KENYA'S COFFEE BONANZA

NAIROBI — Kenya expects coffee earnings for the financial year 1976-1977 to be a record 200 million pounds, according to the assistant minister for agriculture, George Mwicigi.

Mwicigi has urged Kenyan coffee growers and co-operative societies to take advantage of the high prices coffee is now fetching to purchase new machinery and equipment.

He said that coffee will continue to attract high prices if farmers maintain the quality of the coffee they produce.

TANZANIA OIL PLANS

DAR ES SALAAM — Tanzania has received an assurance from India that it would be willing to put its oil and gas exploration expertise at the country's disposal.

Oil experts from both countries took part in discussions in Delhi, and the matter is to be considered further.

Meanwhile, it has been announced here that the Tanzania Petroleum Development Corporation has begun research into ways of using the natural gas discovered at Songo-Songo Island earlier this year.

ZAMBIAN CANDLE FACTORIES

LUSAKA — Zambia expects to become self-sufficient soon in the manufacture of candles, which are used widely in rural areas of the country.

This will be made possible by the construction of four candle factories, at Mongu, Kasama, Mansa and Solwezi. They're to begin operation early next year.

The project is being financed with a loan from the Development Bank of Zambia, and will use imported paraffin wax.

ANGOLA BRANCH OPENED

LUANDA — A new branch railway line has been opened in Angola. Known as the Cacuaco line, it is serving people living in the industrial complexes between Luanda and Cacuaco.

8,737 whites flee Rhodesia

SALISBURY, Rhodesia (UPI) — Government statistics show Rhodesia has lost 8,737 whites through emigration so far this year — more than in the previous record year of 1964.

The monthly digest of statistics showed 1,479 whites left the country in September while 455 immigrated.

The negative balance of 1,024 for September pushed to 8,737 the number of whites lost through emigration between January and September 1977.

The loss recorded so far this year exceeds the 1964 loss of 8,710.

At that time, the loss was attributed to the uncertainty resulting from Rhodesia's failure to conclude an agreement with Britain over the country's colony status. In November 1965, Prime Minister Ian Smith unilaterally declared independence.

The negative migration balance of 1977 is attributed by government officials to the guerilla war, increased military commitments for whites and the uncertainty of the whites' future if a majority rule settlement is achieved.

Civil Service Commission Accused of Discrimination

WASHINGTON — The Civil Service Commission, administrator of the federal government's merit system, is being questioned about its own equal opportunity program.

The interrogation is said to be led by Clinton Smith, a black who is serving as executive vice chairman of the Interagency Advisory Group and as director of the commission's Equal Employment Opportunity unit.

Smith is reported to have urged CSC chairman Alan Campbell, in a recent memo, to take disciplinary action against high officials at the commission for possible obstruction and interference in the processing of complaints of discrimination and abuse of the merit system.

For his efforts, Smith is said to be meeting increased resistance from key CSC officials in his attempts to enforce internally, laws and regulations that the commission is responsible for enforcing in the government-wide merit and EEO programs.

The complaints, said to be made by Smith, reveal that high CSC officials have failed to take corrective action on internal merit violations brought to light as a result of several discrimination charges.

U.S. indicts 4 Houston cops

Four former Houston policemen convicted in connection with the beating and drowning of a 23-year-old Chicano laborer pleaded not guilty last week to federal charges of violating the civil rights of the victim.

Two of the indicted policemen, Terry Denson and Stephen Orlando, had earlier been charged with murdering the Chicano, Jose Campos Torres. Although convicted on misdemeanor charges by an all-white jury, five of whom worked for the police system, they were set free Oct. 6. The sentences of one year in jail and a fine of $2000 each were suspended. The two did not spend a day in jail.

The other two, Louis G. Kinney and Joseph Janish, had been given immunity from prosecution in return for their testimony against their colleagues during the earlier murder trial.

The federal charges were prompted by work carried out by the Chicano community in Houston. The community's anti-police brutality efforts, protesting recent police murders of Blacks and Chicanos in the Houston area, is led by the Coalition for Responsible Law Enforcement in Houston.

The federal district judge in charge of the civil rights violation case has set a trial date for Dec. 5. The defense attorneys have been given 25 days to file motions, one of which is expected to be a change of venue for the trial.

Public Service Announcement

All CCEBS students interested in law should note that on Tuesday, November 15, students from Northeastern Law School will be in the New Africa House. These law students will talk with all interested CCEBS students from 1:00 - 3:00 p.m. in the second floor lounge of the New Africa House. All those interested in this visit should sign up with Brian Maher in Room 208 of the New Africa House by Thursday, November 10. Also check to see if any other arrangements can be made at this late date.

What is the National Black Student Association?

On December 11, 1975 a call went out from the Afro-American Society at Tufts University in Medford, Massachusetts. The statement went out to colleges and universities across the country. It spoke to the need for Black students to revive their active participation in the struggle for the liberation of our people. The National Black Students' Solidarity Conference was held from February 17 thru 23, 1976 at Tufts University. Over 200 students from various parts of the country attended. Also attending the conference were several people who have been leaders in the liberation movement. Queen Mother Moore, Akbar Muhammad Ahmed, John Henrrk Clark and several others, including Robert Williams, participated on panels and workshops. Workshops were held on topics covering the range of areas of student involvement.

The conference resulted in the initiation of the National Black Students' Association. Conference participants were urged to return to their respective areas and to begin the work of building the National Black Students' Association.

By June of 1976 a statewide NBSA conference had been held in Massachusetts. During that summer organizers in the southeastern region planned for a Southeastern Regional NBSA Conference to introduce the concept and the organization into the area. The conference was held on September 24 and 25 of that year. Over 125 students attended from 50 schools. The Conference, in spite of the attempts of a few would-be disrupters, was a success. After the Southeastern Regional Conference work was done to implement the programs and to consolidate the Atlanta Chapter. Work was done on the local and regional structures of the organization. During this time many local forums were held and communications were sent to organizations throughout the region. In December the southeastern region produced a Newsletter called UJIMA. At that time the newsletter dealt primarily with issues pertaining to Black prisoners and was an extension of our Prisoner Support Program. Later, because of suggestions from the prisoners we were working with, the scope of the newsletter expanded. Two more editions Of the newsletter came out during the first part of 1977.

During the first part of 1977 there was further work done on internal consolidation and on programs. The primary progrrms were the Prisoner Support Program (PSP) and the Tutorial Program. The PSP was the most successful of the programs. Work is still being done to develop a regional tutorial program.

Meanwhile the Northern Region is consolidating bases in various major cities and the building of NBSA continues.

The National Black Students Association had its first Congress on November 4, 5, 6, 1977. The congress was held at Dean Sage Hall, at Atlanta University in Georgia. Most of the conference dealt with outlining Black students roles in the Liberation struggle in the country, and around the world. The conference had international representation. There was students there from Africa, and Europe and they came to find out what the NBSA was about. Some of the discussion was for black students to get involved with Prisoners support programs, political prisoners rights. It was also decided where necessary to start tutorial programs. The NBSA also decided to start where the Student Non Violent Coordinating Committee left off. They decided to begin to work for Voter registration again, to elect sensitive Black political figures who would have blacks self interest at heart.

The Congress also worked out for a Code of Operations, and broke down tasks to a Sterring Committee who was elected at large. The Congress decided that they would work on the Bakke decision around the country. On November 24, 1977 the NBSA, along with Dick Gregory planned to have a National demonstration to protest the U.S. not calling for an Embargo against South Africa. Last week the South African government killed young children in the streets of South Africa. This type of animal behavior should not be on the face of the Earth. The NBSA, along with Dick Gregory is asking for students around the country to give up their "Jive Turkey" to protest the U.S. role in South Africa. The New World Center along with NBSA, and the Committee for the Liberation of Southern Africa will be sending down a bus from this area more details about the bus, and the demonstration will appear in the Black Affairs section of the Collegian. Dare to Struggle Dare to Win! We will without a doubt.

Sherwood Recall Election

An important election is being held this week concerning the recall of Craig Sherwood. Sherwood is one of several white students who ran on the Third World Senate ballot during senatorial elections, however, he is the only white student who has remained seated on the Third World caucus. His presence on the caucus has aroused controversy as to the definition of Third World and who can be classified as Third World student.

The most critical issue in this election is our right to define ourselves as a Third World community. We cannot allow other groups to dictate who we are because ultimately they will decide how, when and where we are active. The Office of Third World Affairs and the New Africa House Steering Committee strongly urges Third World students to register and vote on the recall of Craig Sherwood.

Registration will be held Monday, Nov. 14 and Tuesday, Nov. 15 at the Cultural Center in New Africa House and the Bilingual Collegiate Center offices in Goodell Hall. Elections will be held Thursday, Nov. 17 and Friday, Nov. 18 at the same locations. It is extremely important ot both register and vote in this election as those who are not registered cannot vote.

South African Demonstration

There will be a demonstration on South Africa Saturday, November 19th, at 1:00 p.m., on Amherst Commons. The demonstration is being planned jointly by The New Africa House Steering Committee and The Committee for the liberation of South Africa. All Third World peoples, and other people, are invited to attend. It will be completely informative, and it is a peoples demonstration. We, as Black people must realize how important this demonstration is. Hundreds of Black children, students, young adults are being killed at the hands of blind racist. South Africa is presently in a state of seige, with military and police killing and imprisoning non-white people who do not succomb willingly to the white South African ideal. It is very important for Black people to recognize their responsibility for this demonstration. Places and universities all over New England are being contacted about this and the people are invited to come. It will last from one to two-thirty in the afternoon, and this much space can be allotted by anyone when 60 children below the age of five die every hour because of racism in South Africa and U.S. government businesses invest 1.5 billion dollars in South Africa. The demonstration is completely informative, and it is designed to encourage other schools and universities to the same.

Ex-CIA head found guilty

Richard Helms.

Former CIA Director Richard Helms appeared secretly in U.S. District Court Oct. 31 and pled "no contest" to two misdemeanor charges of failing to testify accurately before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee about the CIA's role in tampering with the 1970 Chilean elections.

The maneuver to get the former CIA director into court without causing attention was carried out in secrecy. The schedule did not appear in the court docket and the Justice Department strayed from a long-standing tradition of informing the press about the trial of public officials. No spectators or reporters witnessed this first conviction of a high-ranking CIA official.

The Justice Department, reportedly with White House approval, recommended that Judge Barrington Parker suspend the potential sentence of two years in jail and a $2000 fine.

The judge, however, reportedly refused to automatically accept this arrangement and said he will schedule a sentencing date.

"Richard Helms knew at the time he testified that in 1970 the CIA carried out a covert operation approved by the Forty Committee to prevent (Salvador) Allende from winning the Sept. 4, 1970, Chilean presidential election," Assistant Attorney General Benjamin Civiletti said in court.

"Mr. Helms also knew at the time he testified that the Forty Committee had approved actions and money to prevent Allende's selection and to encourage by economic pressure and other means action by the Chilean military to prevent Allende's accession to the presidency," the assistant district attorney added.

The government charged that Helms did not testify "fully, completely and accurately as required by law" when he appeared before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee on Feb. 17, 1973 and on March 6, 1973.

Helms "nolo contendere" plea will go down in court records as an admission of guilt.

FBI spied on Lawyers Guild since 1937

By JEFF SEGAL

The National Lawyers Guild (NLG) has learned from recently released FBI documents that it has been a key target of governmental espionage since its founding in 1937.

Some 5000 pages covering the years 1937-1958 have already been gone through by the guild's researchers. They reveal concerted attempts by the FBI, the CIA and other state and local intelligence agencies to destroy the guild by such activities as burglarizing and wiretapping its offices, disrupting its activities and implanting agents and informers in its meetings.

A damage suit based on these revelations has been filed on behalf of the guild by a team of lawyers headed by Michael Krinsky, president of the guild's New York City chapter, under a project of the National Emergency Civil Liberties Committee (NECLC).

By 1939, according to the files, the guild's vigorous defense of working class demands and its racially integrated nature had gained it FBI Director J. Edgar Hoover's "undying hatred." The FBI director subsequently made several unsuccessful attempts to get the Justice Department to declare the guild a "subversive" organization.

The guild's condemnations of Truman's cold war policies, as well as its denunciations of the 1947 Loyalty Program, earned it intensified surveillance by the intelligence community, led by Hoover, who took personal interest in the lawyers' organization's activities.

In 1947, Hoover ordered 21 FBI field officers to wiretap and spy on the guild's offices, its chapters and the activities of its members.

The McCarthy era brought the FBI and the House Un-American Activity Committee (HUAC) together to vilify and attempt to cripple the guild through a large-scale propaganda campaign. The FBI and HUAC fed the American Bar Association (ABA) with enormous information in an attempt to get the ABA to dismiss guild members.

GUILD REBUILDS

In 1948, the Board of Governors of the ABA recommended the exclusion of NLG members from its fold. The move was repudiated, however.

But the ABA was receptive to much of the FBI's proddings and threatened to dismiss members who tried "to defend communists in hearings before Congressional Inquiry Committees."

The FBI's attempts to place the guild on the attorney general's list of subversive organizations paid off on Aug. 27, 1953 when Attorney General Herbert Brownell announced at an ABA Annual Convention his intention to do just that to the NLG.

Five years later, after an exhaustive court battle, Attorney General William B. Rogers, Brownell's successor, gave up such efforts. The NLG, however, had already paid very dearly for the intelligence agencies' intrigues. Its 1945 membership of 4000 members and 25 chapters had shrunk to 500 people in four chapters.

The guild survived and reemerged with stronger membership, commitment and popularity in the late 1950s and 1960s with the birth of the civil rights and antiwar movements.

According to guild researchers working on the case, the thousands of pages of the documents yet to be studied possibly contain enormous information indicating massive plans by governmental agencies to destroy the left and progressive movements, not only the lawyers' association, in the late 1960s and early 1970s.

Black officials under the gun, study reveals

by Mary R. Warner

WASHINGTON (NNPA) — Research undertaken by the National Association of Human Rights Workers reveals some of the most prevalent tactics being used to discredit black elected officials.

The tactics include: Lack of coverage by the media, biased coverage, investigations and unfounded criminal accusations by the white media.

Other methods are: Audits and investigations by the IRS; surveillance, bugging, burglaries and covert disruptive activity by intelligence agencies and inquiries, grand jury investigations and allegations by law enforcement agencies.

These activities not uncommonly amount to vicious, vindictive witchhunts which have the effect of damaging or destroying the credibility of the officials involved, though there is never any finding of wrong-doing, the research shows.

Smear campaigns, intimidation of voters and constituents, recall efforts, charges of "reverse discrimination, suits that impose economic hardship through necessitating payment of attorney fees, legislative censure, defamation of family members, friends and associates; and threats of personal injury or death also are used, according to the findings.

The character, volume and intensity of these tactics are far in excess of what might be normally and reasonably expected by virtue of being a candidate for a holder of a public office, many officials say.

In fact, "In nearly every respect, black officials are judged by a double standard. They are required to be more scrupulous, more above reproach, more competent, more effective than their white counterparts," the research revealed.

The harassment is not a new phenomenon.

Black officials were harassed throughout the Sixties when black militant organizations were being attacked and destroyed.

Harassment was occurring throughout the Nixon era, when black officials were included on the "enemies list" and targeted for IRS investigation, according to the findings.

The harassment has not ceased, however, since Nixon left office.

On the contrary, it has continued to mount as increasing numbers of blacks are elected to public office and achieve positions of influence, newspaper reports indicate.

Nor is the harassment merely a product of the "new post-Watergate morality" that currently prevails.

Rather, the cry of "corruption" has become a smokescreen for conducting racist and discriminatory attacks on black officials, much as the accusation of "Communism" was used in the past to discredit civil rights leaders and organizations, the research shows.

18 U.S. prison cases probed int'l body

LONDON (UPI) — Amnesty International, winner of the 1977 Nobel Peace Prize, is investigating the cases of 18 prisoners in the United States because it believes they may have been jailed for their beliefs, origin or involvement with unpopular political groups.

Most of the 18 are black activists. The group includes two American Indians and the "Wilmington 10," convicted of burning a white-owned grocery store in North Carolina in 1972.

Amnesty International is a non-governmental, worldwide organization that investigates and works for the release of prisoners it believes are in jail for their beliefs or origins.

It does not defend prisoners who have either advocated or used violence.

Amnesty spokeswoman Fran Taylor said at the organization's London headquarters the American cases are being reviewed individually.

In some instances, Amnesty International has requested the release of the prisoners.

Ms. Taylor said that although questionable imprisonment in the United States is not as widespread or clear-cut as in some other countries, some prisoners apparently "have been framed on criminal charges."

The 18 cases being investigated are:

—Richard Mohawk and Paul Skyhorse, American Indians allegedly beaten by guards at Ventura County jail in California. Amnesty International has written California Gov. Edmund G. Brown to request an inquiry.

—The "Wilmington 10," including Benjamin Chavis, Marvin Patrick, Connie Tindall, Jerry Jacobs, Willie Earl Vereen, James McKoy, Reginald Epps, Wayne Moore, Joe Wright and Ann Shephard Turner.

Except for Mrs. Turner, the prisoners are black. They were sentenced to up to 34 years in jail in North Carolina.

—Lee Otis Johnson, sentenced to 17 years in jail for stealing $18 and a television set in Texas in 1976.

—T. J. Reddy, a black activist sentenced to 20 years for arson in 1968. He is free on bail.

—Eva Kutas, sentenced to two years in the Pleasanton Federal Correctional Institution for conspiracy and harboring an escaped federal prisoner.

—Iman Obadele, also known as Richard B. Henry, president of the Republic of New Africa organization, who received a 7-year sentence for conspiracy to assault a federal officer and related charges.

—David Rice, found guilty of first degree murder in Omaha, Neb., in 1970. Amnesty International thinks the police may have framed Rice.

—Gary Tyler, a 17-year-old black youth who received the death sentence for the murder of a white youth in Destrehan, La. The organization said Tyler "may have been wrongly convicted of killing a white youth and that the reason for this miscarriage of justice may have been (his) ethnic origin."

Airline executive tells it like it is

Although black youngsters have more positive role models today in the business world, they still have to fight hard to make it to top-level positions.

That's the view of James O. Plinton Jr., vice president for market development for Eastern Airlines.

Plinton says that blacks can't sit back and wait for jobs to fall into their laps. "You have to be in there fighting," he said in an interview with the AFRO.

The 62-year-old Plinton was in Richmond last week to encourage black civic and social groups to fly to the Caribbean.

He said that he had encountered the "how will he fit into my team" attitude from white co-workers, and he had to prove he could do the job.

"It's a hell of a lot easier than it was" for blacks to get high-paying, respected jobs, he said, but there is still a long way to go.

When Plinton was growing up there were no black pilots, but now there are "role models" in many jobs for today's youths, he said.

Plinton, who said he grew up in New Jersey a "privileged ghetto — that's one with grass around the house," proved himself outside the country.

After flying with an all-black squadron in World War II, Plinton established and operated a small air service in Haiti. After the 1956 Haitian revolution, a close friend at TWA helped him join that airline. In 1971, he became a vice president with Eastern.

Plinton conceeds that he probably would never have become a top airline executive had he stayed in this country.

More directly related to his trip to Richmond, Plinton said, "black convention travel is incredible.' He said that about one-third of the $722 million spent by blacks on commercial travel was with the airlines.

Evening of Cultural, Political Togetherness

Dr. Helen Rodriguez

On the 15th of November, there will be a evening of cultural and political get together sponsored by the Committe to End Sterilization Abuse (CESA). The event will be held at Lumumba Hut at 7 p.m., situated in New Africa House at University of Massachusetts.

The guest speaker will be Dr. Helen Rodriguez from New York. She is the director of pediatrics at Albert Eurstein College. She was a member of the Social Science Department at Montefiore Hospital. She is a founding member of CESA nationally. Helen has been instrumental in pushing and gettng pass the guidelines in New York City — that effect 17 municipal hospitals. She is also a member of the Puerto Rican Socialist Party and is working to end unjustices of law against Third World people.

Ms. Rohini Bhate is reknowned Indian dance artist and founder and director of Nriytabharati Kathak Dance Academy of India. She is receiver of the Padma Shri Award (an Indian Award in Fine Arts). She has toured in China and Russia and is currently on tour in the states.

CESA is Committee to End Sterilization Abuse. The committee has been in existence since early spring of this year. It is a group of concerned women fighting sterilization abuse in this area. Sterilization is a surgical operation which makes you permantly incapable of reproduction. Sterilization abuse occurs to reduce the size of the population. It occurs whenever someone is sterilized without any knowledge of the risks, benefits or alternatives to the operation; is sterilized without knowing the operation is permanent; is sterilized without having given informed consent; is sterilized without the opportunity to make the decision with chance to learn the social facts and to understand their implications; and is sterilized because abortion was unavailable or other methods of birth control too costly.

Sterilization is used as a strategy by the Imperilist power to control the population in Third World countries, and also the poor whites at home. Best example of sterilization as an imperilist tactic is seen in Puerto Rico where 35 per cent of all child bearing age women are sterilized. Over 24 per cent of all Native American Women are sterilized; 20 per cent of Black married women are sterilized in U.S.; 5 per cent of married white women are sterilized.

The CESA is currenly collecting data on sterilization abuse in this area. Anyone having knowledge about cases of sterilization abuse can contact us SUMAN BOHM, 256-6019 or LISA. All information is held in strict confidence. We would like to thank Distinguis Visitor's Programme and Third World Women's Center for helping us to sponsor this event. Day care is provided at the event.

SBK—Innovators In Black Classical Music

SBK Concert, November 6th, 1977, The Dining Commons at Hampshire College.

Steve McCraven-Drums
Brandon Ross-Guitar
Kevin Ross-Bass

Candlelight and a small but eager audience awaited the debut of SBK, a trio of brothers, currently locally-based, who have been dealing with their own modes of the Black Improvisational Music for some time.

With a flowing, lithe, from the heart sound, SBK opened with Benny Goodman's "Soft Winds" — as arranged by saxophonist Marion Brown. Possibly, thoughts of the man Brown were with the members of SBK throughout the performance: all three have played with him locally, and it was during a late-Winter European tour earlier this year (with Mr. Brown) that the guitarist and drummer of this group got their first on-the-job feel for the European scene and its response to Black Music. At this performance SBK did a number of Brown compositions: "Sweet Earth Flying", "La Placita," "Bosco," "Miles" (for Miles), and "Fela Gold" — all done in memorable style.

Energy soared through original compositions by SBK's drummer and guitarist. Drummer Steve McCraven — who wrote "Last Flam in Amsterdam" — set up a deep, rich rhythm for this tune while Brandon Ross, the guitarist, did a spicy phrasing, reminiscent of the cosmpolitan Northern Europe town. Also by Steve was "Sangoma," written for drummers.

Brandon Ross wrote "Connecticut Lunch" (co-authored by Paul Block). This tune ended with a brashy acappella chorus with visualizations of the luncheonettee's clientele: hard-heels yelling, "Gimme my beer!" and innocent by-standers being "taken-out-to-lunch" by the place. A mellowed, "The Sun Shines for Personal Reasons" (originated by Brother Eshu Elegba), was developed by guitarist Ross. "Long Distance," another composition of Brandon's, took flight when bassist Kevin Ross grabbed the tune and gave it his own type of feeling: sensitive, yet strong, with an expressiveness unique to an aggressive bass player.

The session closed into the next morning with a smoking (really!) rendition of Monk's "Straight, No Chaser," which left the diminished audience of die-hards, friends and lovers quite satisfied, SB&K: young innovators in the mode of Black Classical-Improvisational Music.

semble and Andrew Salkey presented a benefit performance for the Che-Lumumba School.

The event was forefronted by Andrew Salkey as recited poetry both self-written and that of his politically aware cohorts.

This was followed by a demonstration of verbal and physical bodily theatrical expression by the Diane RAMOS dance ensemble. Unlike the typical Afro-American, Afro-Latin and African dance ensembles, this one expresses thought about the realities of life. The workshop-ensemble offered a wide contrast of the pieces performed. "Black People and Changes", a poem written by John Williams was recited by Judy Brandt. In coordination with the poem was a solo dance piece by Diana RAMOS with background music composed by Marion Brown.

"Invisible", performed by the entire ensemble related the experiences of suffering of Third World people.

Powerful and moving words praising the legendary master of the tenor sax, Archie Shepp, were read by Rick Scott Gordon. Prof. Shepp approached the stage with his familiar spirit of truth as his illustrious cohorts were introduced; Arts Matthews on piano, Charles "Majeed" Greenlee on trombone, Cameron Brown on bass and Clifford Jarvis on Drums. They wasted no time in presenting an array of their outstanding musical abilities as quintet kicked off a swift tune. Art Matthews lead Prof. Shepp into unique realms of improvisation. The popping and bombdropping of Clifford Jarvis made for interesting rhythmic conversation between drums and piano.

The spirit of "Bird" spoke through Shepp as he jumped into his rendition of "Confirmation". After a short intermission Shepp pressed onward this time on soprano sax mixing exotic blends of melody with Majeed. The first half of the concert proved to be just a warm-up when the stage became alive with the sounds of "Things Have Got To Change". African elements were presented in a heavy, flowing 6-8 rhythm with Clifford Jarvis laying the foundation.

Archie Shepp became "Blue and Sentimental" with his music as he expressed the 'gut' feeling of 'Blue'. Prof. Shepp always manages to convey in his music the black social experience in the form of sound. The experience of pain, suffering and stife are prevelant amongst his compositions. His music has a specific message to educate the people, and that education is truth.

The Voices of New Africa House Workshop Choir, a unique vocal ensemble of twenty-five voices from the Five College community, will present its sixth annual Fall Concert on Thursday, November 17, 1977 at 8:00 p.m. in the Crown Center, Hampshire College.

The Voices of New Africa House Choir, with its sister choir Genesis, will present "Gospel in the Valley", an evening of contemporary Gospel music. Genesis, Smith College's gospel chorus, was organized in 1975 by Laurice McDonald, a Sociology major at Smith. Under the direction of Laurice McDonald (a former member of the "Voices"), Genesis has expanded into thirty-five glorious voices delivering their message of joy in the spirit of authentic Gospel music.

The Voices of New Africa House Choir was organized in 1972 by the famous percussionist Max Roach, a professor at the University, as a performance course in the W.E.B. DuBois Department of Afro-American Studies.

From 1974-1977, Dr. Horace Clarence Boyer, Assistant Professor of Music at the University, an authority on the Afro-American Vocal Tradition, directed the choir par excellence from an academic and professional dimension. Under Boyer's guidance the choir has not only appeared in solo concerts, but with such well-known artists as Max Roach, Ossie Davis, Reggie Workman, Archie Shepp, Paul Carter Harrison, Dorothy Love Coates, Sallie Martin, Dee Dee Bridgewater, Cissy Houston, Carman Moore, the Famous Boyer Brothers, and the Collective Black Arts Ensemble.

Highlights of the career of the choir include a successful tour of several colleges throughout the United States; a concert in tribute to Thomas A. Dorsey, the "Father of Gospel"; Porgy and Bess with the Springfield Symphony; "Gospel Fuse," a fusion of gospel and symphony; and "Tomorrow Has Been Here and Gone," a musical play by Thurman Stanback and Semenya McCord.

Accompanied by an instrumental ensemble, the "Voices" perform in a wide variety of styles, including in their repertoire selections of gospel songs, blues, spirituals, black classical music, soul, and slave songs such as cries, field hollers and shouts.

The Voices of New Africa House Choir is under the direction to David Marshall Jackson, an Afro-American Studies major. He has served as assistant director and organist for the choir since 1974, and has accompanied students of Boyer's Afro-American Vocal Technique class. Known as the singer's pianist, Jackson has performed with many professional gospel soloists, groups and choirs throughout eastern United States.

The public is cordially invited to experience, "Gospel in the Valley," Pioneer Valley's call of Unity, sponsored by the W.E.B. DuBois Department of Afro-American Studies and the Third World Organization at Hampshire College. Admission — FREE!

Blue Note

Like so many artists featured on Blue Note Records, Bobby Hutcherson has become a symbol of advancement and evolution on the instrument of his choice. The vibraphone and marimba an instrument he has done much to revive inprogressive music. He was born January 27, 1941 in Los Angeles. Bobby tike piano lessons when he was nine years old, but did not become seriously interested in music until he heard a record by Milt Jackson. Soon he had his own set of vibes and was playing local dances and concerts.

After gigging around Los Angeles for some time with Curtis Amy, Charles Lloyd and others, Bobby joined the Al Grey-Billy Mitchell combo. He earned wide exposure, all the way from San Francisco to New York.

Bobby worked with other combos, including those of Archie Shepp, Hank Mobley, and Charles Tolliver. He also free-lanced with small groups. He played in two notable big bands, Gil Fuller's orchestra, and later with Gerald Wilson's all-star ensemble.

Hutcherson won the 1964 Down Beat critics poll as the vibes man most deserving of wider recognition.

It was in 1965 that he took to doubling on the marimba, commenting: "It's such a basic instrument, and it really hasn't been brought out in jazz."

Bobby has been widely acclaimed for his fresh, free style. His use of four mallets in some of his performances has been notable characteristic.

bobby Hutcherson means good vibes.

Benefit Concert For Craeman Gethers

The very talented Jean Carn, along with JADE will be in concert for the benefit of the Craeman Gethers Defense Fund this coming Sunday, Nov. 20 in the Student Union Ballroom at 8:00 p.m.

Jean Carn is a vocalist of enourmous versatility and skill, she is rapidly becoming one of the great Black female artists of our time. She can be heard on the Black Jazz label singing such compositions as "Search for the New Land" and "Infant Eyes". Jean has also recorded with Norman Conners and with Charles Greenlee on his album "I Know About the Life".

Her first solo album "Jean Carn" on Philadelphia International has been tremendously successful, a second album on the same label is to be released in the near future. Accompanied by the instrumental group JADE, Ms. Carn is touring the east coast performing for enthusiastic capacity crowds. JADE made its debut last spring at UMass in a benefit performance for Craeman.

The entire university community is urged to attend this Craeman Gethers benefit sponsored by the Afro-Am society. Tickets are $2.50 and can be purchased at TIX in the Student Union. Your donation will be going to an extremely worthwhile cause and the concert itself promises to be a very special event.

Prism at Hampshire College

PRISM (Powerful Rhythms Inspiring Soulful Music), an up and coming group from New York City performed a concert-disco Friday night at Hampshire College.

Prism is a group with devotes its music entirely to the listener. Their rhythms of happiness are enhanced by melodies of love and lyrics of understanding. The sound in which they convey brings happiness into the heart of the audience.

The group sound encompasses a broad musical spectrum. It includes a variety of musical styles including disco, funk, latin, calypso, jazz, popular and raggae.

The members of the group include drummer-leader Ray Newton, guitarist Eric Saunders, saxophonist and composer John Purcell, bassist Kevin Parlor and singers Louise Robinson, Carol Mailand and Diana Warton. They have recorded for and played with such artists as Bobbi Humphrey, Ester Satesfield, Leon Thomas, Frank Foster, Tito Puento, Marion Brown, Tito Rodriguez, Aquarian Dream, ABC, Impulse and Buddha records.

They perform popular as well as original works. Their music is guaranteed to educate, enlighten and entertain ones thoughts and body movements. In the near future look for a group with a total array of soulful music, PRISM.

How Jobless Can Lose Out On Work When Others Fail

WASHINGTON — White national unemployment rose slightly back to 7 per cent and black unemployment jumped to 13.9 per cent in October, three federally funded jobs programs were stripped of their monies because they failed to allocate jobs on schedule.

Thus jobless black workers in those areas who might have qualified for millions of dollars worth of work missed out and the funds were shifted elsewhere.

The funds, given out under the Comprehensive Employment and Training Act, amounted to nearly $3 million and were reassigned to areas that were on schedule in allocating jobs.

Hugh Davies of the Department of Labor division which oversees the CETA program said the three counties (prime sponsors) lost the funding because they "couldn't identify enough people" who qualified for the jobs.

He said the program requires that a person has been without a job for 15 weeks, has been collecting unemployment benefits for 15 weeks, has exhausted jobless benefits or be a recipient of Aid to Families With Dependent Children.

He said the division formerly reviewed the ability of prime sponsors to allocate jobs on schedule quarterly, but would be stepping up the reviews to monthly.

Prime sponsors found unable to fill jobs promptly would be in jeopardy of losing their funding if improvement is not shown in a 30-day period after a notice of intent to withdraw the funds, he said.

In addition, instead of having to fill 70 per cent of the jobs planned for in their programs, prime sponsors will have to meet 80 per cent of the schedule.

A spokesman for the CETA program in Baltimore, which meets 100 per cent of its jobs schedules, explained that the city has a decentralized program that hunts out qualified persons in the pockets of high unemployment.

Jay Harris said that because funds for the program are based on an area's overall unemployment rate it is often difficult to reach the pockets where the jobless rate is at its peak and the qualified people are available and looking for jobs.

The Baltimore program, he said, therefore relies on community offices run by groups such as OIC and the Urban League which have proven their ability to reach people and get the qualified ones on the job rolls.

He said the city also operates several mobile vans that canvass other neighborhoods where unemployment is high to find qualified persons.

Based on performance reviews by the department's Employment and Training Administration in July $2,892,000 was taken from sponsors that filled less than 70 per cent of the jobs they planned in expanding their programs.

They were:

—Pacso County, Fla., from which $1 million was reallocated to Escambia County ($800,000) and Northeast Florida Manpower Consortium ($200,000).

—Tippecanoe County, Ind., from which $892,000 was reallocated to Hammond ($140,000), Lake County ($100,000) South Bend ($150,000), St. Joseph ($102,000), Madison County ($150,000), Delaware-Blackford Consortium ($100,000), and Vigo County ($150,000).

—Du Page County, Ill., from which $1 million was reallocated to Shawnee Consortium ($62,750), McLean County ($105,950), Macon County ($22,100), and Illinois balance of state ($251,600). The remainder will be allocated later.

Reeds

By FREIDA JONES

A reed, a cut and shaped piece of bamboo, piece of some pole sticking out of water.
When taken, soaked in saliva, placed in a mouthpiece and ligature tightened, when touched by the tip of the tongue,
by wind rushing up
a reed vibrates....

And wails dry and slow like the wind over the desert, like ancient tones, slipping like silver light through dark clouds stretching endlessly;

Knee deep in the Nile, the woman
hides in the reeds,
palys a flute cut from rushes.
Her song is the heat of evening lessening,
the sun sinking,
her ceremony.
She is black, bare and lotus-scented from the cone of wax she wears on her head.
She stops and listens. fish rush past her calves; in the house where she is servant, her son taps rhythyms on a leopard-skin gourd.

A tuning fork is vibrating.
listen.
There has been one sound for ten-thousand years.
listen.
It's the music of the opening up of palms, the acceptance of immeasurable benefits from the infinite past.

If you could realize the gift.
If you could remember the promises you have made, to hear and become one with the oneness the wholeness of sound, sound that can foldin like a flower in the night. Or have the symmetry of the wings of large birds.
Or the illusion of raucousness, city that swells and sweats out of the pores of skin like sound, stolen and disguised sound, that covers truth like a curtain, glittering with paste jewel sounds.
But all sounds are woman melody flowing over male rhythym; like the drum is hollow like a woman's womb giving life.

Knee deep in the mud of a Cuban river,
of a New Jersey marsh, of the Amazon, men penetrate wilderness. Knives cut and tear reeds, rushes, stalks, cane brush gives way as the men cut away America to make room for Europe.
The reeds cry screech
Can you not still hear?

A plethora of reeds. regrowing in the New World. Convention of planets, like Hawkin's reed.
Betchet's reed.
Lester's and Jacquet's reed.
Parker's reed.
Moody's, Rollins' and Stitt's reed.
Ornette's reed.
Trane's reed.
Shepp's reed.
Marion's, Ayler's, Dolphy's reed.
McPherson's reed. Pharoah's reed - through them rush ancient languages like silver tongues splashes against harsh skies, silver light breaking through the clouds stretching endlessly.

Students study TV violence

By MARY WYATT
Collegian Staff

The effects of television violence will be highlighted by UMass students re-enacting the trial of Ronald Zamora tonight.

Zamora, a 15-year-old convicted murderer, claimed he killed an elderly woman because of his watching hours of television crime shows. His defense attorney argued Zamora was temporarily insane due to "television intoxication." Testimony from sociologists and psychologists, key witnesses for the defense, was not allowed to be heard by the jury.

Under the direction of Professor Brian Fontes, of the Communication Studies Department, the students will re-enact the trial according to the court transcript, including the professional testimony overruled by the Florida judge.

The UMass students are attempting to determine the outcome of the trial had the experts' opinions been presented the jury. Al Dodge, student lawyer for the defense said, "We feel it was a gross injustice that the sociologists and psychologists did not get to testify. We want to examine the evidence that was not brought out in the trial."

Karen Kozacki, student lawyer for the prosecution, said, "We are doing the whole trial over again to see whether television violence or Zamora himself was on trial."

Dodge said, "We are trying to show that television was responsible for Zamora's actions. The basic idea is to try to make people aware that television can influence individuals to act in certain ways."

Fontes added, "The students are re-enacting that segment of the trial which the judge dismissed. The purpose of the assignment is to give the students a chance to role-play the experts, the jury and the mass media."

The re-enactment is set for tonight at 7 in Herter Hall room 227.

Town to test for water

By PAMELA LINDMARK
Collegian Staff

Amherst Town Meeting last night took a major step forward in the search for future water supplies in the town, voting to begin immediate testing for new water wells in Lawrence Swamp in South Amherst. The decision was a turnaround from one made at the Oct. 14 Town Meeting.

The assembly also voted to appropriate and transfer $1,000 from available water funds in support of the study of water usage and water conservation. In another decision Selectmen and Town Manager of Amherst were authorized to study and review the details of Amherst's present water situation.

In other business, a unanimous vote was made to back planned legislation which would reform the property tax in Massachsetts. Approval was also given to a project for the reconstruction of a drainage tunnel and utility complex.

According to a recent engineering study water in Amherst is becoming more and more scarce. Controversy over solutions to this problem run high, as was seen last night in a two hour debate over whether or not the town of Amherst should initiate testing of the quality and quantity of water in the Lawrence Swamp.

Arguments against this dealt with the desirability of alternative solutions. One such solution would be use of water from the Quabbin Reservoir, owned by the Metropolitan District Commission. Another would be the possibility of Hadley as a more than adequate source, if negotiations proved to be successful.

Selectman Roger C. Jacque said of the Lawrence Swamp testing proposal, "$63,000 is too high of a price to ask, given the fact that it may not prove out, coupled with the fact that Amherst in future years may have need of more water than this source may be able to provide."

However, if successful, such testing could prove to be Amherst's most accessable and financially sound solution, backers maintain.

Selectmen Nancy B. Eddy said "The Quabbin Reservoir, is a far possibility, in view of its limited supply and the high number of cities and towns applying for its usage."

"As for Hadley, if you close off the Lawrence Swamp option, we are at their mercy...we will be depending upon a Hadley Town Meeting."

Eddy stressed that Amherst must complete explorations within its own borders before making any decision. Water from the Lawrence Swamp would be totally under the control of the town of Amherst, whereas other alternatives would make Amherst dependent upon the source.

"It would be well worth the $63,000," said Eddy. "$63,000 is peanuts compared to $5,000,000 of any other total cost."

Fluoridation controversial in Washington

[Ed. Note: Arnold Warshaw is a Collegian staff reporter on internship with the Capitol Hill News Service in Washington, D.C.]

By ARNOLD WARSHAW
Special to the Collegian

WASHINGTON — The long battle over water fluoridation has taken yet another twist as controversy mounts over whether the chemical causes cancer.

Only in the past three years has a "cancer link" become the rallying point for fluoridation opponents, although it has long been one of their objections to fluoride.

Moreover, the fluoridation debate has pitted the government's chief cancer research agency, the National Cancer Institute, against a California-based health lobbying group, the National Health Federation.

Proponents of fluoride claim that its presence in the drinking water will help prevent tooth decay in young children.

But opponents have waged a long battle against it for political and health reasons. Some claimed back in the 1950's that it was a Communist plot to poison the American people; others said it was a civil rights violation to force everyone to drink fluoridated water.

Heart disease, kidney disease and arthritis, as well as cancer, have all at one time been claimed as side effects of fluoride.

All across the country, the fluoridation issue has been decided by referendum votes, but rarely without much heated debate.

A number of U.S. communities have reversed pro-fluoridation votes with another referendum, such as in San Diego. But in most instances, once fluoridation is begun, it continues.

In testimony before the House Subcommittee on Intergovernmental Relations and Human Resources, representatives of the NCI said they had seen no evidence of a fluoride-cancer link.

"I can state with certainty from the analyses and reviews of the relevant data that no trends in cancer rates can be ascribed to the consumption of water that is artificially or naturally fluoridated," said Dr. Arthur C. Upton, director of the NCI. The NCI is the cancer research arm of the U.S. Public Health Service.

Testifying before that same subcommittee, Dr. John Yiamouyiannis, science director for the NHF, said his research showed a link between consumption of fluoridated water and cancer.

"At the present rate, we can expect in the area of 10,000 fluoridation-linked cancer deaths yearly... unless something is done to stop fluoridation in the U.S.," Yiamouyiannis said.

The NHF is a Monrovia, California-based organization. According to its vice-president, Clinton Miller, the group lobbies for "freedom of choice in health issues."

Among their other interests, the NHF has come out in support of laetrile, the controversial cancer "drug" made from apricot pits and has been lobbying for its legalization.

Robert Livingston: Botany prof

By CHRIS BOURNE
Collegian Staff

UMass Botany professor Robert Livingston said last night that "we may have planted a thermal time bomb by releasing large amounts of CO2 into the atmosphere."

Livingston spoke to about 50 people at Coalition for Environmental Quality meeting last night in the Campus Center. Rising CO2 levels and rising levels of smoke and dust in the atmosphere may bring about the first climatic changes caused by man, he said. "Climatic change is the norm, but until recently they weren't caused by man," Livingston said.

Carbon dioxide, captured in coal, was formed about 300 million years ago. "The world 300 million years ago had about ten times the amount of CO2 that we have now. This helped great numbers of plants to grow. Gradually they reduced the CO2 level and died off. These plants were then converted into coal," said Livingston.

By burning this coal, we are releasing the CO2 into the atmosphere, said Livingston. The excess CO2 in the atmosphere can act like the glass in a greenhouse and retain the heat that the earth gets from the sun, according to Livingston.

Livingston cited figure which show that the average temperature around the world rose steadily from 1880 to 1940. "Since 1940 the temperature has declined, due to increasing amounts of smoke in the atmosphere. The smoke reflects the sun's light and heat out into space before it reaches us," Livingston said.

However, he feels that the "greenhouse effect" caused by the CO2 will raise the temperature more than enough to offset this in the long run.

Many of the world's major glaciers have receeded in the last 70 years; some by many miles. "A temperature rise of only six degrees would be enough to melt all the glacial and artic ice in the world. This would cause the oceans to rise as much as 500 feet," Livingston said.

A rise of only 80 feet would flood major portions of the US east and west coast as well as much of the southeast according to Livingston.

The high levels of CO2 could throw the world into a new cycle of ice ages between periods of very hot, humid climates, according to Livingston. "The oceans holds about 50 times as much CO2 as the atmosphere, but most of this is contained in the cold artic waters. As the world's temperature rose, the oceans would warm up releasing more CO2 into the atmosphere," said Livingston.

Livingston went on to explain that when the glacial and artic ice had melted, there would be enough ocean water to start absorbing CO2 again. As this CO2 was absorbed, the temperature would begin to drop, bringing a new ice age. "This cycle takes about 50,000 years, so I don't think we have to worry much about it yet," Livingston said.

According to Livingston, the only way to stop this process would be to develop a new energy source. "This source would have to be non-polluting, cheaper than fossil fuels, and available right now."

Livingston is not optimistic about the prospects for such a source being found. "The trouble is that we don't pay any attention to things which don't happen in our backyard," Livingston said.

Even if we are able to stop putting CO2 into the atmosphere, Livingston said that there might still be drastic climate changes. "The smoke and particles in the atmosphere might begin to lower the temperature. It's the type of situation where you are damned if you do and damned if you don't," Livingston said.

Karol Szyndzielorz: Polish journalist

By MARY McAULIFFE
Collegian Staff

Noted Polish journalist, Karol J. Szyndzielorz said last night that social and economic tensions since 1970 have left the Polish people with a "feeling of helplessness."

Szyndzielorz, a 1977 Nieman fellow at Harvard University, told a group of 40 people in S.BA. 120 that Poland has restructed its priorities in economic planning.

"This is done through massive reconstruction in industrial production through modernization of steel production and shipbuilding industries specializing in fishing business," he said.

The government has tried to deal national problems as establishing a national purpose, promoting a decent rate of growth, and elimination of food production shortage, leading to an increased confidence for farmers, he said.

According to Szyndzielorz, there is no unemployment in Poland. Although there are millions of young people entering the job market, the government created new jobs to accommodate the growing labor force.

The housing industry, he said, is an area that is slowest to make progress. He predicted, however, that each family should have their own house or apartment by 1990.

Szyndzielorz also said Poland is rich in natural resources. It has a large coal industry and is second to the United States in coal export. It is also the biggest industry in that country.

"Poland," said Szyndzielorz, "is a country trying to pull itself up by its own bootstrap with tremendous effort but old tensions are replaced with new ones with what is to come in the next five to seven years."

Agriculture has prospered and experienced constant growth since 1970, he said, but agriculture is having difficulties because many farms are divided into small plots which limits improvement by machinery.

Szyndzielorz said agriculture faced another setback last summer when large amounts of grain was ruined by rain. He said the country borrowed heavily for new lines of production.

Poland has a long term agreement with the United States for importing two-and-a-half million tons of grain, Szyndzielorz said. Since the poor crop of 1976, Poland has increased that figure to four and a half million tons, he said. The government increased grain import so farmers would not use livestock to compensate the grain loss when the market for livestock would be better next year, he continued.

The government also tried to raise food prices which caused political crisis because workers organized strikes against new programs.

Education is universal, said Szyndzielorz, but it is financed by the state. There are three levels of education. The first eight years are compulsory, and some cities are making high school mandatory. The college level is highly competitive and is open to those who have the scholastic ability.

Benjamin Rosenthal: Congressman

By BRAD GOVERMAN
Collegian Staff

Congressman Benjamin S. Rosenthal, D-New York, told an assembly of about 50 students at Amherst College last night the outlook for a Middle East peace settlement is "hopeful".

Rosenthal a Liberal-Democrat, serves on the House International Relations subcommittees on Europe and the Middle East, and on International Organizations.

In a thirty minute speech, Rosenthal presented the perspectives of all the countries involved, criticized President Carter's approach to a settlement, offered his own views to a solution, and ended by fielding questions from the audience.

Begin said he disagreed with President Carter, that if a Geneva Conference doesn't happen this year "The world will come to an end." He also criticized President Carter's approach to a Middle East settlement, which he pointed out was an adoption of a Brookings Institute study done by National Security Director, Zbigniew Brezinski.

The Brookings plan calls for Israeli withdrawal of lands back to the 1967 lines.

Rosenthal said the "trump card of the U.S.", and one which Carter will certainly play at Geneva, is to have Israel "go back to '67' lines and tell them we will guarantee their security."

Rosenthal pointed out that the Israelis don't think we're good on our guarantees.

"Guarantees are not a healthy situation. We should help them achieve self security," said Rosenthal.

Rosenthal said that in his view the intolerable conditions of the Gaza Strip Palestinians would have to be recognized by Geneva if a settlement were to be reached.

After completing a recent tour of the Middle East, Rosenthal said he found that much like the average American, the average Egyptian was primarily concerned with rent, food, family, and their job.

"We found the general population willing to live in peace. It's the politicians who are riling up the electorate, not the electorate riling up the politicians," said Rosenthal.

His views of the perspectives of the countries involved in the Middle East went as follows:

United States: "Carter sees himself as a paramount in foreign affairs and resents congressional interference. He feels a great commitment to attaining peace which means a reconvening of the Geneva Conference."

Israel: "Prime Minister Begin is a true believer that the West Bank is original Israeli land and seems intransigent on this issue."

"Begin feels there is not a clear definition of who the Palestinians are. He believes these things are negotiable."

Rosenthal called Begin "an extraordinarily courtly person" who sees himself as protector of the remaining 12 million Jews interests.

Syria: "This country is under an identity crisis," said Rosenthal noting Syria's relations to Russia in the past. Rosenthal said that while visiting Syria he talked to a Chief Justice who expressed interest in trading with Israel.

Jordan: Rosenthal called Jordan's King Hussein "soft spoken, well-educated, and willing to go along with any peace settlement that won't topple his throne."

"Hussein doesn't like the PLO (Palestine Liberation Organization), but that's the kind of thing politicians have to say. The PLO is an enigma to some of these people," Rosenthal added.

Egypt: "Sadat is a capable, astute leader," Rosenthal said of Egypt's president.

Rosenthal said that peace was in the interest of Egypt, considering their economic and social conditions.

"Egypt's per capita income is only about $300 a year," he said.

Rosenthal lectured courtesy the Amherst College Political Science and History Departments and the Foreign Affairs Committee.

77 years ago today...

By SHARON STENTIFORD
Collegian Staff

The Campus Pond, scene of the recent duck and swan fall round-up, has through its various transformations served as showground and playground for countless human entertainments, sports, and celebrations, as well as the home for a variety of wildlife and a haven for winged visitors.

A Peking duck, a domestic mallard and three mute male swans are the most visible of the pond's seasonal inhabitants. The swans were donated by the Rhode Island Wildlife Sanctuary. According to Kenton Billings of Grounds and Services, wild ducks have been known to drop in on the pond birds, which are brought each spring from Tillson Farms by Physical Plant employees.

Edmund J. Ryan, physical plant superintendent, said no attempt is made to stock the pond with fish, and the origin of the goldfish is a mystery to him.

When the pond is drained so that litter and debris can be removed and weeds trimmed, said Ryan, the fish stay around in a small pool of water.

The fish and other pond inhabitants have not always been treated with such care. One October morning in 1947, the pond was found almost empty of water. Crayfish and fish gasped and giant mud turtles roamed about. Some unauthorized person had obtained a key to the dam and let the water out the night before.

In preparation for the Baccalaureate exercises of 1913, students tried to control the pond's algae by dumping in 90 pounds of fish poison-ten times more than was necessary. Along with the algae, the poison killed two "wagon loads" of suckers, that gave off such a stench they had to be raked up before Commencement.

Thanks to Collegian articles dated 1944 and 1953 by Lois Bannister and Marcella Harling, respectively, the pond's history can be traced back almost a century.

Prior to 1892, the waters of the pond region, springing from a source east of Butterfield, formed a small meandering stream through a cow pasture at Massachusetts Agricultural College. Here town boys of the 1880's speared fish in the spring; in winter they rode downhill on sleds to the pond.

To help provide the large quantities of ice needed for the dairy products and cold storage of fruit, a dam was built across the stream. William Wheeler, a graduate of MAC's first class in 1867, supervised construction of the dam. The pasture became submerged beneath a sheet of water.

In 1893, after more than 20 classes had graduated, the mass of water was fashioned into College Pond. A couple of years before, two sophomores had coaxed Fred S. Cooley, superintendent of the campus farm, to build another dam. Through the influence of Cooley and President Henry H. Goodell, the Massachusetts legislature appropriated $1,000 for the project.

Despite other's doubts concerning the dam's ability to hold the pressing waters. Cooley said he would "eat his shirt" if it broke. It did, but it is uncertain if he kept his word.

About a year later, Samuel Maynard, professor of horticulture proposed that the new pond be ornamented with a "Massachusetts Garden" consisting of native trees, shrubs, and plants. As part of the garden motif an island was built.

Since then, the pond has served as a showground and playground for a variety of activities.

MAC's first ice hockey game was played on the pond in 1909. By this time the freshman-sophomore rope-pull was already an established tradition.

The College Pond was also the scene of hazing for freshmen. Dressed to appear ridiculous, women were made to cast for nonexistant fish using "real worms". Some initiates were thrown into the pond.

"Winter Carnival Weekend" featured ice shows on the pond for many years. Campus afternoon entertainments included pond races and figure skating exhibitions.

In late spring, 1937, juniors and seniors began a custom by forming a procession to the banks of the pond for graduation exercises.

The UMass administration first began providing discretionary money to its senior level officers in 1970, funding activities which the University could not pay for out of other restricted funds, such as state monies.

Since that time, discretionary monies have been used for a variety of purposes-entertainment, scholarships, faculty enrichment and travel expenses.

A report by an independent certified public accounting firm, Hurdman and Cranstoun, states, "It is generally recognized in educational circles that senior University officials have a duty to carry on community activities both within and outside the university community.

"However, because of Commonwealth of Massachusetts restrictions on the nature of certain types of expenditures, these funds were handled outside the normal University channels, but, we are informed, subject of official scrutiny and approval to the same extent as Commonwealth funds," the report states.

The report is a review of management controls on the discretionary accounts, ordered by UMass President Robert C. Wood during the summer to determine what each senior officer receives and how much University discretionary money he directs.

According to a 1971 memo authored by Wood, the discretionary accounts were established for "official and ceremonial entertaining," although they have been used to finance other special activities as well.

The money was raised through interest on student fee — generated trust funds. Interest and earnings on the trust funds this year amounts to $675,000 the report says.

In 1971, the Executive Committee of the Board of Trustees approved a memo from Wood asking that "perquisites," income in addition to salary, be established for the Chancellors at both the Worcester and Boston campuses. This was done to give the incoming Worcester chancellor and Boston chancellor payment towards buying homes. Amherst Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery lives in a state-owned house on campus; Wood does not receive a housing allowance.

Up until 1976, the discretionary monies were held by the University Foundation, a non-profit, private corporation described by Wood as established to provide "enrichment" programs to the university.

But changes in federal law and Internal Revenue Service Codes forced the University to establish separate accounting procedures Wood said in a telephone interview Sunday. At that time, a budgeting and review procedure was also established whereby a three person trustee committee would oversee the accounts.

For this year, Wood controls a discretionary budget of $20,000, Bromery a budget of $16,500, Worcester Chancellor Roger J. Bulger oversees $16,000 and Boston Chancellor Carlo L. Golino controls $25,000.

The report recommends continuing the controls already instituted over the accounts, such as signature power in the hands of someone other than the chancellors of presidents staff's, and that other controls be tightened.

While the report includes a financial diagram of how much money was expended by each officer for the last few months, the forms are not standardized, and only Chancellor Bromery's and Bulger's are footnoted.

Among the activities the officers have financed in the past year:

—the reception at UMass-Boston during the summer for the Kennedy Library, which cost the University "between $3,000 to 4,000", according to Wood. The reception, and the "few hundred dollars" he said he spent lobbying to have the library built at UMass, "were well worth the money," he said.

— in 1977, Worcester students were treated to a party and clam bake at the Dean's house totalling $1,926.03. The money was taken out of discretionary funds budgeted for entertainment which Bulger had budgeted about $3,600. Bulger also said he used the money to finance the first faculty retreat at Worcester.

— varying sums ranging from $10,000 to $40,000 over the past several years to finance a day care center at UMass-Boston, when state funds could not be found.

— financing yearly commencement receptions for honorary degree recipients at the Chancellor's house in Amherst and partial reimbursement from Bromery's trip to Hokaido University last year.

Correction

The caption on a page 3 photo in yesterday's Collegian incorrectly stated that the UMass President and campus chancellors "may be cited for possible income tax evasion." The caption should have read that the trustees made public a report on the officer's discretionary accounts, recommending tighter auditing control of the funds.

BOSTON — Recently appointed UMass Interim President Franklin K. Patterson likes "to start something new and different about every five years."

"I don't like to be stuck in a rut," said Patterson in a recent interview. He once worked with New York City youth gangs before helping to found Hampshire College in 1966 and eventually joining UMass in 1973.

As the University's Frank L. Boyden Professor, Patterson said he begins his day at UMass-Boston at 8:30 a.m. and is often involved with committee work in the University graduate school program. He is also frequently consulted by University trustees and administrators.

Patterson explained the honorary position he holds is dedicated to a former UMass trustee chairman and headmaster of Deerfield Academy. Patterson said he is "so glad I teach here" at the Boston campus because of the students he has met.

"UMass-Boston is a fantastically good place," he said. Patterson teaches political science to 45 students in two classes. Most of his students, he said, are between 26- and 29-years-old, and there's "no motivation question at all."

Visits Amherst Friday

Patterson said he hopes to be as visible as possible to the University community. It is "absolutely essential," he said, to be visible. "I hope within the limits of time to be able to be around all three campuses."

He said he plans to visit administrators and student leaders of the Amherst campus this Friday. Saturday he will be attending the inauguration ceremonies for recently-appointed Hampshire College President Adelle Smith-Simmons.

Patterson said he left Hampshire College to come to UMass because he had "done what I wanted" as president there for five years.

Patterson and Charles Longsworth, Patterson's successor who resigned this year outlined the educational goals and plans of Hampshire College in their book, "The Making of a College". Four of his years as president there Patterson worked with Longsworth and others to organize the college before it admitted its first 250 students in Patterson's fifth and last year as president. He then chaired the college's board of trustees while beginning his association with UMass.

Here he has held the honorary professorship and also served as the University secretary for two years.

Before helping to found Hampshire, Patterson researched "youth relating to society" when he served as director of the Lincoln Filene Center for Citizenship and Public Affairs at Tufts University in Medford.

During the 1950's, he worked with "bopping" youth gangs on the Lower East Side of New York City. The sixty-one year old Patterson began his association with education in the secondary schools of his home state, California.

Didn't Seek Interim

Patterson said he didn't seek the interim job as president. He said he took the job for "neither power or glory" but rather out of a sense of responsibility.

"The University needs someone to give as much as possible to unify various elements as much as possible in a period of transition," said Patterson.

He said he wants to "try to help the University develop and strengthen programs and relationships outside and inside (UMass).

"I do not see my role as an interim president to seek to install any major changes in the University," he said. "It wouldn't be fair to my successor to start something he or she wouldn't want to do."

Patterson added he probably wouldn't bring any of his Hampshire College policies to UMass.

"I don't know if I would want to try what is appropriate for a small residential college at a public university," he said. "It would be foolhardy to automatically think I could make UMass like Hampshire. They are two totally different situations."

Lobby Style Different

A major task facing Patterson this spring is lobbying the state legislature for the University budget. In the past UMass President Robert C. Wood has managed to attract reasonable funding despite his political differences with Gov. Michael Dukakis and his efforts to trim state services.

Patterson said he is not yet familiar with the whole University budget process, but he looks forward to the "challenge".

"The major thing the president has to do," Patterson said referring to budget lobbying, is to look at the budget "not with anxiety, but the challenge to do good."

Patterson said his lobbying technique is "quite different from anyone else's style. I will use my own straightforward style with the legislature as I know how," he said, adding "I look forward to good relations with the legislature and governor."

Preparing to defend the budget is also a "happy coincidence" for Patterson because he is analyzing the history of the state legislature for its bicentennial anniversary in 1980.

Patterson said he is "comparing the human make-up of the colonial legislature" with those of 1880, 1930, 1978, 1979 and 1980.

The research is helping him to know the legislature better, he said, and the legislative leaders are "friendly to the study."

Patterson said he sees no redundancy in academic programs offered at the three UMass campuses. UMass-Boston, he said, is different than a state college in resources. The Harbor Campus services a "commuting population which can't go to (UMass) Amherst."

"It is possible" for redundancy in programs offered by UMass-Boston and local state colleges, but it can be prevented with "adequate resources," Patterson said.

UMass-Boston has "fine faculty and programming which need strengthening," he said. Noting the John Fitzgerald Kennedy Memorial Library being constructed on the Harbor Campus, Patterson said if the state "doesn't face the challenge" of proper expansion, then it has "failed a real opportunity for a (state) university in Boston."

A Need For Higher Ed Reorg

"There is a very great need for a more effective organization for the state's relation with public higher education," said Patterson. A reorganization of public higher education "will have to take into account the totallity" of the public and private schools in the state.

Higher education in Massachusetts, said Patterson, is the state's "third or fourth biggest industry".

"We don't have grain or things of that nature, we have brains, or at least I hope we do," he said.

Patterson said he has been "trying to persuade" the last two Massachusetts' governors to reorganize the state's public higher education system.

The state legislature and governor have been fighting the last few years over how to reorganize public higher education in the state. A committee was formed this fall to evaluate the system.

The present state Board of Higher Education has "nominal planning responsibilities," Patterson said, "but it's not in the position to do much. It can't prevent redundancy in the public sector."

The reorganization of public higher education will have to access the tradition of the state's independent educational sector and help "mesh the public and private" systems so they are useful to each other and the people of the state, Patterson said.

"One way or another the board (of public higher education) needs to exist stronger than now," Patterson said. "It has to have a greater voice in the total planning process and utilize its resources more effectively."

Trustees not adversaries to UMass

Patterson said he does not see the UMass Board of Trustees "in any way an adversary of the president, faculty, students or University." There is nothing to be gained, he said, if the president and trustees are adversaries.

"My chief intention in undertaking the job is to work effectively with the board. I have a great deal of confidence in what the board can become," he said, noting the "considerable turnovers in the composition" of the board since Wood in June announced his January resignation.

The "desirable relationship" between the trustees and president, Patterson said, is the president having the trustees' "confidence and support" to lead the institution. If the trustees do not feel the president is doing the job, Patterson said he would expect the trustees to fire the president.

Patterson said his philosophy of management for Umass is the same as for "almost any other" institution. He said he has a two-fold view which is "fairly simple".

As the University's executive officer, Patterson said he would take the "initiative" and "go out front on things that need to be developed, formulated, evaluated and changed." Patterson added because he will be the interim president, and not the permanent executive a time limit may constrain some policy decisions.

Governance Tension "fun"

Patterson said while he believes in strong leadership, he also believes in "all the feasible participation of those concerned with the effects of decisions as in making the decisions." He said he likes as much a decentralized administration as possible. He said the "inevitable tension" which occurs between the administration and staff when making policy decisions is the "fun" of governance.

"There doesn't have to be a lot of bloodshed," Patterson said, adding faculty and staff "Tend to trust you" as they did when he was associated with the administrations at Tufts and Hampshire.

Patterson said he'd "like to know the dynamics" of student unionization before discussing its role in university governance. He did say the students at UMass-Boston "have a really pretty good opportunity to participate" in the governance structure with the campus unicameral assembly of faculty and 30 to 40 students.

Patterson said he has no idea of the impact of faculty unionization at the Amherst campus, and added he would be "interested and concerned" to see its effects.

Likes Present Governance

He did say the existing governance system at UMass "is just about the best thing any university has." It provides for a "substantial amount" for initiative of decentralized governance while "respecting" a centralized process, he said.

Patterson said while no governance system is perfect, the UMass governance system is "a pretty good one for interfacing governance and management."

The UMass governance system allows faculty and student senates to recommend changes to University administrators and trustees when making policy decisions.

Patterson's former associates call him 'outstanding', 'committed'

"Patterson has more of a commitment to education, he is not just a manager. Robert Wood could be the manager of anything; he's an operator. Pat could be an operator too," said Ruth Hammen, in comparing her former boss, Franklin K. Patterson, with UMass President Robert C. Wood. Patterson, the Founding President of Hampshire College in 1966, takes over as UMass interim president this January when Wood steps down.

Hammen was Patterson's secretary in the early years of Hampshire College. She is now the administrative secretary in its School of Language and Communications in a building dedicated to Patterson. Hammen and two other original Hampshire College personnel recently reflected upon their association with Patterson, when the college comprised only 20 faculty and 250 students. There are now 120 faculty serving 1200 students.

Hammen said Patterson is the combination of administrator and professor that the UMass Board of Trustees sought for interim president.

"I believe he is an outstanding administrator and an educated man," she said. "Patterson as an academic is deeply committed to education and to public education. He enobles a state institution. That wasn't President Wood's deep commitment by any means.

"He seems to me to be an excellent choice for interim president," said Hammen. "He knows the University, the structure, and he knows how to work with the (state) legislature."

Hammen, who first met Patterson when she became his secretary in 1966, said she does not feel he will bring any of Hampshire College's policies to UMass.

"I do not think that he thinks his ideas are evangelistic," she said. "He wouldn't try to impose his style on UMass. But it's quite possible that he learned something in his experiences at Hampshire that will help solve some of the problems at UMass.

"I don't know how much bad or good he can do in six months," said Hammen, "but he may whip some things into shape."

Hampshire College liberal arts Professor Richard Lyons, who met Patterson in 1967 and began working with him a year later as the college's first academic dean, said he became interested in the new college after reading a book that outlined the educational goals and plans of Hampshire College. The book, "The Making of a College," was co-written by Patterson and his Hampshire College successor, Charles Longsworth. Lyons said he saw in the book "lively new possibilities in curricula design."

The ideas in the book, he said, were like "a lot of fresh winds blowing through the stagnant air of higher education." Lyons was associated with the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill before coming to Hampshire College.

Lyons also praised Patterson's administration at Hampshire College. "Pat is very organized and has an organized mind. He ran a very tight ship."

"He is a strong academic and a very strong administrator," said Lyon. "He has a quick mind and one with imagination. I believe he is unusual in that respect. He is deeply responsive to poetry — you don't often find that type in a college president," noted Lyons.

Lyons said Patterson was "always at ease with students." Patterson served as

Group asks students to fast for harvest

By LARRY COHEN
Collegian Staff

Many UMass students may go hungry Thursday. But there is a reason. They will participate in the world-wide annual "Fast for a World Harvest."

The fast is sponsored by OXFAM-AMERICA, an international organization which gives small grants and loans to local farmers in third world nations. Oxfam helps farmers to raise their own food, rather than to supply them with the finished product, said Howard Goldman, UMass fast coordinator.

"Our efforts in this fast are several-pronged," Goldman said. "First, we hope to generate awareness of the world food situation. Second, we'd like to get people to donate money." Last year, Oxfam collected about $200 at UMass, he said.

Goldman said information tables will be set up in the dining commons and in the Campus Center Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday. Students may donate either money or meal tickets. Food Services will donate about 70 cents for each meal ticket collected, Goldman said.

There will be films shown all day in the Campus Center, Goldman said. "Diet for a Small Planet" shows people how they can start conserving world resources by eating "lower" on the food chain.

"It takes 10 pounds of grain to make one pound of meat," said Goldman. Another movie, "Toast," deals with the technology that goes into making bread. There will also be a slide show, Goldman said.

Among the groups that are supporting the fast are the United Christian Foundation, the Newman Center, Hillel Association, Peoples' Market, Earthfoods, and the Coalition for Alternative Agriculture and Self Sufficiency, Goldman said.

Goldman, who is also coordinator of the Peoples' Market, said they will not be open the day of the fast. Phil Cox of Earthfoods said they will be serving bread, water, tea, and coffee only, as a "shock effect."

"The idea is to present people with the fact that when they come in here to eat, there won't be food," Cox said. "A suggestion will be that people donate what they would usually pay for the food to OXFAM," he added.

Goldman said the main focus of the fast was not to make people go hungry. "We understand that people might not be able to fast that day, due to an exam or something, and that's okay. We just want people to be aware of what this is all about."

president the first year Hampshire College admitted students.

Lyons said there were occasional disagreements between Patterson and the college's first 20 faculty members.

"There were times when Pat disagreed with the faculty, but by and large we pulled together very well," said Lyons, adding "It was tough (for Patterson) to compromise his views of what this college should be."

Dorothy Anderson, secretary to Hampshire College President Adelle Smith-Simmons, said Patterson should have no trouble becoming president at UMass after having served as president at the smaller Hampshire College.

"I think he will do very well, he's very versatile," said Anderson. She and Hammen typed the draft copies of "The Making of a College" for Patterson.

"I tend to think of him more as an administrator. But I heard that the students were pleased with his style as a teacher," Anderson said. She also said the faculty "loved" Patterson.

"He knew a great deal about their fields," she said.

UMass President Robert C. Wood told the trustees Patterson, "will be critical in the transition period of the University."

Wood said Patterson "will do a very superb job as interim president."

Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery told the trustees he looks forward to working with Patterson.

"I look forward to working with Frank; we were on the board of trustees at Hampshire together. Doctor Patterson is a good choice, and I believe that he will be a very good interim president," Bromery said.

Amherst campus Student Trustee Marion L. Batiste said Patterson was the best interim candidate for dealing with the state legislature.

"The trustees' committee spent a long time discussing all the candidates," she said. "Doctor Patterson was, as far as we could see, the interim candidate best qualified in dealing with the legislature."

Fellowships

The deadline for nominations for three fellowship programs is Nov. 20. The three programs, all sponsored by the Fund for Theological Education, include the North American Ministerial Fellowships, the Black Opportunity Fellowships and the Hispanic Opportunity Fellowships.

Direct application is not permitted. Interested persons must be nominated by a campus minister, professor, or parish pastor. The local contact agency is the United Christian Foundation in Student Union 428, 545-2789 and 545-2661. Information is posted outside the door.

Pete Sabey, campus minister, will talk with persons about their interest and eligibility.

All seniors are eligible for the North American Ministerial Fellowships. Seniors and graduate students (up to age 30) are eligible for the Black and Hispanic Opportunity Fellowships. Anyone who might want to consider theological study should contact UCF no later than this Friday.

Hutcherson

Bobby Hutcherson, nationally know black classical musician, will appear in a free concert Saturday at 8 p.m. in the Campus Center Auditorium.

Hutcherson has played with Archie Shepp, Hank Mohley and Charles Tolliver, as well as Gil Fuller's orchestra and Gerald Wilson's All-Star ensemble. He has become known for his innovative use of four mallets during his performance.

The concert is sponsored by the Union Program Council.

Oxford study

Alumni of the Oxford Summer Seminar will be available to discuss the program tomorrow night at 7:30 in Bartlett 301.

The seminar will convene its 13th session next summer at Trinity College. Students in any discipline may apply on the graduate or undergraduate level. The cost is $1,000.

Details are explained in a brochure available in Bartlett Hall 160 or from the dean's office of the College of Arts and Sciences, South College.

The program employs Oxford tutors exclusively, though UMass Honors credit is provided. Courses range from Medieval Paleography to Contemporary British Theatre. Several are inter-disciplinary; all are taught in small classes and tutorials averaging eight students.

There is time to travel before, during, and after the program. Rooms at Trinity are mostly in suites: a bedroom and a livingroom. In 1977 students from 44 colleges and universities participated.

Knievel is jailed for six months

SANTA MONICA, Calif. [UPI] — Evel Knievel, who admitted beating a television executive with a baseball bat for writing a book which the stuntman said was a "vicious lie," was sentenced yesterday to six months in jail and put on probation for three years.

Knievel's "action violated all precepts of civilized society," Superior Court Judge Edward Rafeedie said in imposing sentence on Knievel, 39.

Knievel pleaded guilty last month to using a bat on Sheldon Saltman, 46, vice president of 20th Century Fox's telecommunications division, who wrote a book, "Evel Knievel on Tour," about the stuntman's unsuccessful attempt in 1974 to jump the Snake River Canyon in a rocket-powered motorcycle.

Saltman, 46, who promoted the Snake River Canyon stunt, suffered a broken arm and wrist in the attack.

When he pleaded guilty to a charge of assault with a deadly weapon last month, Knievel said the book was "a vicious book of pornography about me, insulting me, my wife, my grandmother, my children, my loved ones."

Knievel was allowed to remain free until next Monday when he is to report to the sheriff's department.

"I have only one thing to say about this day in court," Knievel said when he left Rafeedie's courtroom. "That judge is a good judge, he is a fair judge. That's all I have to say."

Rafeedie recommended the motorcycle daredevil he assigned to either a work furlough program or to an honor farm. He said Knievel could apply later for parole.

Three states claim Hughes' residence

LAS VEGAS, Nev. [UPI] — The legal battle over Howard Hughes' millions flared on three fronts yesterday — in Nevada, Texas and California — and the U.S. Supreme Court was asked to step in and bring order to the turmoil.

In Nevada, jury selection was in its sixth day in the trial to determine the authenticity of the so-called "Mormon will" attributed to the late industrialist who died April 5, 1976 on a medical flight from Mexico to Houston.

In Texas, jury selection began in a trial to determine the legal residence of the late industrialist in an action that could lead to that state collecting millions of dollars in inheritance taxes.

California, which also is battling to prove Hughes a legal resident of its state, asked Supreme Court Justice Lewis Powell to stop the trial in Houston.

Russian dissident family summoned

MOSCOW [UPI] — The family of imprisoned dissident Anatoly Shcharansky has been summoned to a meeting with Soviet authorities in what could be the prelude to his long-expected trial on charges of treason, his brother said yesterday.

Shcharansky has been in prison for eight months awaiting word on his fate.

His brother, Boris, told fellow dissidents yesterday that he and his parents, Ida Milgrom and Leonid Shcharansky, were told to report to Lefortovo Prison Wednesday.

Dissidents said this probably means authorities have completed their investigation and will advise the family to retain a lawyer for Shcharansky.

Shcharansky's fate has been unclear since he was arrested March 15 in an apparent crackdown on dissidents monitoring Soviet compliance with the Helsinki Accords on human rights.

The first public word or charges against him were reported by the Tass news agency last month when they labeled him a "betrayer of the motherland."

Tass said he would be punished to the full extent of the law for alleged collaboration with foreigners in anti-Soviet activity.

'Super rats' are immune to poison

HARTFORD, Conn. [UPI] — Federal officials indicated Monday a stronger strain of rodent, a "super rat" immune to common poisons, is apparently breeding in Hartford.

The rats feed on potent anticoagulant poison without ill effect. Health officials are concerned because the poison has been the extermination standard for 30 years.

The poison ordinarily kills by causing internal bleeding.

The so-called "super rats" were first identified in North Carolina in the late 1950s and have migrated north, infesting ghetto areas along the eastern seaboard, according to the Hartford Tribune.

Officials at a 40-city rat control project in Albany, N.Y., sponsored by the Department of Health Education and Welfare, said four rats in a 32 rat sample trapped in Hartford were found to be immune from anticoagulant poison.

Ku Klux Klansman on trial for murder

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. [UPI] — A jury of three blacks and nine whites was chosen yesterday to decide whether a former Ku Klux Klansman killed an 11-year-old black girl with a 1963 dynamite blast at a Birmingham church.

The jury was chosen to hear the case of Robert E. Chambliss, 73, charged with four counts of first-degree murder for the bombing of the Sixteenth Street Baptist Church.

Prior to the questioning of potential jurors, Chambliss' attorney asked that the prosecution be halted and the jury panel declared illegal because no one on the panel was over 70 years old.

What are we doing?

By DAMON THOMAS

During my grammar school and high school years I remember being told I was building for my future, that the knowledge that I gained and used would someday prepare me for college.

College — that was the goal to reach, the key to the "good life" and to personal realization of the "American Dream." Of course, I was only rarely reminded that certain people just wouldn't be allowed to make it, but I was never told just why. Anyway, for those of us fortunate enough to be able to attend, college was, next to heaven, the place to go even if the reasons for attending weren't all that clear.

Well, now, here we are at the University of Massachusetts. For some, the university represents the end of their formal education; after completion of their studies here, they will (hopefully) enter the depressed job market. For others, UMass is again only a steppingstone for their future. Some are here to learn how to change the world, others are content to carve out and master a small part of it, and still others are here only because college represented the next stop.

> We're obviously all here for different composite personal reasons, and we look to the university to provide for our diversity, to educate us (not indoctrinate us)...

We're obviously all here for different composite personal reasons, and we look to the university to provide for our diversity, to educate us (not indoctrinate us), to provide relevancy and meaning to our studies and to our lives, not only through the classroom, but also through living situations and in providing for myriad situations conducive to the development of interpersonal relationships with our fellow students.

What do we see each day as we look about campus? Students scurrying from place to place, busily attending classes, labs, and lectures, studying in libraries, living in dorms. This seems apparent, childishly obvious. But look again.

Many of our activities here consist of an empty, ritualistic, processed set of tedious exercises, designed to keep us pacified. To demonstrate this, let us borrow some thinking from Marshall McLuhan. A light bulb, McLuhan says, has no content. The content of a student's day is being a student, the purpose of his-her activity. The medium, however, is the student's actual activities during the day. And, as McLuhan says, the medium is the message, although we don't know it. The medium, like the light bulb, itself tends to be overlooked because it has no content. In more general terms, we are trained to be aware of the goal of our activities, but not to be aware of what is actually happening.

What are we doing? We isolate ourselves while we "study". We glance away as we run past our brothers and sisters. We sit confined to chairs as though involuntarily strapped down, in lecture halls and libraries, cramming and memorizing for tests beyond any point of value. We are assigned a worth as a total human being by the type of alphabet letters we receive on a yellow card. We are forced into competitive relations with each other, each person pushed by our capitalist culture and economy into an individualistic, competitive, hierarchical mold.

Look at many of the faces and listen to some of the words being spoken. We do not look at faces very often, even less than we look at ruined rivers and devastated hills. Human beings, so engrossed in becoming their role occupations, that they have largely forgotten how to communicate with one another, beyond the plastic "How are you?" and "What's happening?" human beings, so concerned with a future of self-defeating materialism and status that they lose a sense of who they are and what they are truly worth as individuals (not collectivized, stamped, filed, numbered, briefed functionaries): Human beings, so wrapped up in forgetting their own loneliness, that they have relinquished their ability to relate, hiding instead behind the business of organizations and constantly seeking love and reaffirmation by striving for the perfect lay. Instead of sharing feelings, desires, needs and weaknesses, and relating to them in both an interpersonal and spiritual context, they flood their senses with drugs and alcohol, hiding from their problems and from themselves.

Too often, we THINK we like what we are doing here, and we don't stop to question the obvious, but we must all critically ask ourselves if our studies and actions are really the overt manifestations of personal desires or even spiritual convictions, or just the acting out of a prescribed role or task that we have been thrust into.

Sooner or later, we all have to confront ourselves with some fundamental questions of great importance. Am I really satisfied with what I am learning here? Will I be able to better myself and society with what I am learning? Am I watching what kind of a person I am becoming, or do I drift with the tide, content with being a slave to external expectations and internal passions? Do I keep myself open to new ideas, to new experiences, and to developing meaningful, understanding human relations?

Clearly, responsibility lies both with the school and with the individual. But, in becoming what we will be, we must always be careful not to lose sight of who we are, what we are really doing, and our basic needs as human beings. It is within this context that we will be able to best fulfill our potential during, and give meaningful expression to, our learning experience here.

A genious is discovered

It's pre-registration time again. Hordes of muddled freshmen are laying down sleeping bags in the hall outside the CASIAC office, clutching their computer cards for next morning's appointments. Cynical seniors sit huddled at tables in the Coffee Shop, exchanging grim smiles over games of Cosmic Wimpout and wondering when they will really have to graduate. At times the air seems filled with the sound of shuffling greenbacks, as weasely individuals "persuade" deans and department chairmen that the foreign language requirement is not relevant to all students' needs.

I am happy. For the first time this semester I have an excuse to stop thinking about my eight term papers (due next week) and start worrying about what to do in January. No professors will be so heartless as to assign term papers in spring — or will they? Mid-November is a time for hope and procrastination.

As I am descending the steps in front of the Student Union, a freshman runs by, waving a pink slip of paper.

"HEY, look what I got!" he lisps enthusiastically to anyone bored enough to listen. "The dean says I don't gotta declare a major for a whole year! And I bought off the rhetoric requirement for just 200 dollars! And I found two gut courses that look intelligent — sort of.

"So you know what I'm takin'?" he continues, his shrill lollipop voice swelling with emotion. "Intensive Basket Weaving, Exotic Sex Theories, and three gym classes!!!"

I congratulate his silently. That kid is already showing signs of genius. Wait and see, he'll be summa cum laude in 1981. It's amazing how quickly some people can master the UMass system — a tradition — and wrap it around their little finger after two months. (Discretion will come later, when Smart Freshie finally learns not to announce his triumphs in public.)

The last of my Smart Freshie days passed many moons ago, and here I am, a Suffering Senior with a blank pre-registration form and nowhere to turn for help. I have no money to bribe deans, and I can't even find solace amidst the whimpering masses of CASIAC, since my major was declared last spring.

If no one supplies me with a better course choice, I just might consider Intensive Basket Weaving. A little occupational therapy might help me cope with the final stretch of confinement in this zoo.

'Tired of the system giving you the finger?'

charles bagli

The phone rang at my house the other night. The caller wanted to know "if this was the commie house." What? He then said he hoped the house "burned to the ground."

When the first of the month comes and and I've got to pay the rent, I wish the same thing sometimes, but somehow I don't think that's what the caller had in mind.

He must have seen the convention poster or the picture of Rockefeller that asked "are you tired of the system giving you the finger?" which then went on to invite students to the founding convention of a national young communist organization.

I had to ask myself, what was this character defending. Another "Capitalism, I Love It" guy strikes again. Well I'm one of those "Capitalism, I Hate It" guys.

What does capitalism mean to me? A quick list:

—in the spirit of "money talks": the gas was turned off on a 70-year old man in Ohio for failure to pay a $18 bill. He was found frozen to death a few days later.

—in the spirit of free enterprise: unemployment for construction workers is 50 per cent, while our cities fall apart, and blocks and blocks of the South Bronx (NYC) are burned out graveyards — each a monument in honor of the god profit.

—in the spirit that capitalism inspires initiative and creativity: 80 per cent of the minority youth in NYC are unemployed and 40 per cent of the white youth. College degrees get you cab licenses and little else. For many youth the only future the system provides after high school is standing on the corner smoking dope or drinking wine.

—in the spirit of "capitalism has a better idea": the same politicians Pentagon Capitalists that brought us Vietnam, Cambodia and the Chilean junta, now bring us (ta-da) the NEUTRON BOMB. A fully guaranteed device that will kill people and leave the buildings and machinery standing. (What an Advance).

The list could go on, but the question is, in the country that is called the greatest in the world, why are the above the "natural order of things"? Do things really have to be this way?

These broad social problems, unemployment, discrimination, and war, are rooted in the capitalist system. Its a system based on profits first, not peoples needs. Together we have to confront these problems.

We have seen things begin to stir. The protests against the Bakke Decision and University investments in South Africa, Kent State, Seabrook, and the numerous campuses that responded to cutbacks with united demonstrations, all spell it out. And that's one of the things this "commie convention" is about. Bringing together activists and concerned students from the various struggles of the American people to share their experience and map out a plan of action.

But it doesn't stop there. We also need an analysis, an overall view of just how these things fit together. There will be workshops on the economy, women, the international situation, discrimination, and socialism, etc.

The convention will also clearly put out an alternative to the way things are and the need for revolution and socialism. And thats why my caller wants to burn my house down. I think there's got to be some big changes. Things are getting worse not better and I don't think it has to be this way. The bleak future the system has for my brothers and sisters disgusts me. I'm willing to fight for a better one.

Things are starting to happen but the old solutions don't seem to solve anything. The convention in Ohio this weekend is a time for all students interested to get down on new answers and a new direction. A time to break free from the hopeless hopes and dead end cynicism that we get offered. A place for optimistic youth to rally, people who want to pull together for a world worth living in.

Ad censorship advocated

To the Editor:

I want to join the growing number of people who are protesting the portrayal of women in the Collegian alcohol advertisements. We, at the Alcohol Education Project, have been monitoring ads in the Collegian and we maintain that ads such as the Miller ad on Oct. 28 are definitely offensive both to women and men.

Action must be taken to counteract the negative images of women depicted in ads such as this. Since UMass is supposed to be an educational community, we agree with David Gram's suggestion that instead of banning the ads, free counter-ad space should be provided to point out the images and strategies that brewers' advertising companies use to sell their product. This educational attempt should also act as a catalyst for the brewers to remove the offensive ads from this paper and possibly others. If this idea is not feasible, then we feel that the offensive ads should not be carried in the Collegian.

Certain people on the Collegian staff and in the community should be commended for their efforts and committment to exposing and counteracting these ads.

'The Future is Ours...'

To the Editor:

The Revolutionary Student Brigade [a student organization on 60 campuses across the country] will be merging with Youth in Action [revolutionary urban youth groups] at Ohio State on Nov. 19 for the founding of a Young Communist Organization. The Future Is Ours ... If We Dare To Take It! is the banner under which this new organization for change will be founded. The slogan calls on youth and students of optimistic mind to come together to grapple with the burning questions of the day and map out plans for the future.

The agenda for the convention includes workshops on important issues such as the Bakke Decision, the Kent State struggle, support for people of Southern Africa, and Jobs for Youth. There will also be workshops on broader points including; The International Situation, Soviet Union, Socialism, and Women. Many leaders of past and present struggles of the people will be present. Some of these are: a member of Pan Africanist Congress [freedom fighting organization of Azania], Al Canfora, member from the May 4th Coalition - Kent State, David Clarke, an ex-member of the Black Panther Party, Clark Kissinger, a former National-secretary of S.D.S., Bob Avakian, Chairman of the Revolutionary Communist Party, and a member of the Young Communist League of the '30's. To wind things up, Sunday night will feature Prairie Fire, a revolutionary singing group, and one of those great RSB parties you've heard so much about!

I urge all students who are interested in discussing these important issues or who want to get involved in dealing with some of the problems that confront us all, to join us in Ohio, Nov. 19.

Gov. candidate is 'ignorant'

To the Editor:

A man who hopes to be the governor of Massachusetts spoke to an audience at the Amherst Town Hall on Thursday evening. His comments were so distressing that I think they should be shared with the University community.

Edward J. King astonished many of us in the audience by his lavish praise of the major oil companies, calling them "brilliantly perceptive" and "consistently correct." His views on offshore drilling and deregulation of natural gas sounded like a Mobil Bicentennial Minute.

When questioned on the future of this University, King asked a student how much it cost to attend this institution. When the student replied, "approximately $2500," King asked if the $2500 was just for tuition. He showed absolutely no sensitivity or awareness of the problems facing public higher education.

The fact that Mr. King was speaking in a community which is largely educationally oriented might have been cause for him to familiarize himself with tuition costs and related issues. Instead, Mr. King spoke of a place called the "University of Amherst," which, as far as I've been able to determine, isn't even on the Five College Bus Route.

If Michael Dukakis is indifferent to public higher education, Mr. King is simply ignorant.

Mr. King, we were told, is "pro-life." Yet, no explanation was offered to reconcile his "pro-life" stand with his strong support of the death penalty. Perhaps "anti-abortion" and "pro-capital punishment" are more accurate ways of describing Mr. King's views. Indeed, his extraordinary concern and compassion for the rights of the fetus are no where to be found when the state seeks to kill a human being in the electric chair.

Mr. King flatly opposed the 1976 Massachusetts referendum which sought to ban non-returnable containers. He seeks to establish a constitutional amendment which would place a ceiling on government income tax. He also feels that environmental standards have severely and unfairly contributed to unemployment in this state by hindering growth and production, and that tough environmental standards have created a strong anti-business reputation for this commonwealth.

Mr. King has no reservations whatever concerning nuclear power. Indeed, his calls to "move ahead with Seabrook" have been as loud as they have frequent. He supports vigorous and comprehensive drilling of Georges Bank.

To me, Mr. King's views are intellectually insulting. He has little concern, interest, or expertise in such vital areas as education, the environment, and human services. He appears to be a short-sighted politician with short-sighted ideas, and blind devotion to the welfare and advancement of the big business community.

His election would be a severe setback to progressive efforts at social and economic justice.

Student tow service closer realization

To the Editor:

The Committee To Stop Amherst Towing would like to express their appreciation to those concerned students who signed and supported the petition to create a student run tow service. Last Wednesday evening the student senate overwhelmingly voted to; [1] approve the concept of a student run tow service, [2] appropriated $8,350 immediately to construct the storage facilities and committed $26,650 out of the 1978-79 budget for completion of the service. This loan will be repaid as outlined in the proposal.

This campaign to create a student run tow service was a victory for the student body at large. However, this decision is still under question by the same minority that has opposed it since its conception. On Wednesday, November 16, there will be a motion to reconsider this vote for what appears to be erroneous reasons. Your continued support is essential if this service is to become a reality.

Letters Policy

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian welcomes all letters to the editor. They must be signed and include the author's address and phone number. Organizations may submit letters, but they must include a name and phone number for reference purposes.

Letters must be typed, double-spaced, at sixty spaces per line, and no more than two pages. They should be sent to the Excutive Editor, c-o the Collegian, or dropped off at the Collegian office.

All letters are subject to editing for either content or space according to the judgement of the editors. Due to space limitations, there is no guarantee that all letters received will be printed. Letters for a specific publication date must be submitted by 4:00 p.m. the day preceding that date.

Black students attacked by whites at Bunker Hill

BOSTON [UPI] — A group of blacks from a Pennsylvania Seventh Day Adventists high school visiting the historic Bunker Hill Monument yesterday were attacked by several whites armed with hockey sticks and golf clubs, police said.

Four of the students from the Pine Forge Academy in Valley Forge, Pa. and their history teacher were treated at Massachusetts General Hospital for multiple injuries suffered in the attack. Two men, arrested shortly after the attack, were charged with five counts each of assault with a deadly weapon.

The group of 14 was boarding a tour bus near the monument across the street from Charlestown High School when the attacks occurred.

Charlestown has been a center of racial conflict since the implementation four years ago of court-ordered school busing to achieve racial desegrgation.

Senior John J. Jones, 19, told reporters the men on the trip let the women get on the bus first.

"We all tried to get in the bus, but we all couldn't make it. The guys didn't get on. We were attacked with sticks and golf clubs and other wooden clubs," Jones said. "There were three people circling around in a car. We saw them circle twice and then stop about half-a-block from us."

Some of the students with cameras took movie film and still shots of the attack. "We took pictures," Jones said. The group led by their history teacher Charles Battles, 26, and his wife Miriam, had been in Boston since Saturday. All the injured were treated and released. The most seriously hurt was Battles who met reporters at the hospital carrying his bloodied jacket.

"We read about the busing problem in newspapers and we heard about it on the news but we never imagined we would be victims," Battles said, shaking his bandaged head, "We did not anticipate this hostility."

New theory formulating about origin of universe

MOUNTAIN VIEW, Calif. [UPI] — The theory that the universe began with a big bang may give way to a theory that it started in a much more orderly fashion, according to a group of scientists for the National Aeronautics and Space Administration.

Measurements made recently by a team of researchers using a high-flying U-2 jet suggest that the cosmos may have started "with a powerful but tightly controlled and completely uniform expansion," NASA said yesterday.

Using very sensitive equipment high above the Earth, the scientists measured energy waves that have been pulsating through the universe since its origin.

They concluded that the beginning "was a very smooth, almost serene process, with matter and energy uniformly distributed and expanding at an equal rate in all directions," a NASA release said.

The findings were made by Dr. Richard Muller, Dr. George Smoot, and graduate student Marc Gorenstein of the Lawrence Berkeley Laboratory and the University of California at Berkeley.

The researchers also found that the whole Milky Way galaxy, as well as the sun and Earth, "are hurtling through space at more than 1 million miles per hour," in the direction of the constellation Hydra.

"The radiation left from the universe-forming event, about 15 billion years ago, is so uniform that it provides a universal reference for measureing this motion," Gorenstein said.

Smoot said the researchers were also surprised to find that "there is no rotation of the universe".

"Our measurements give a picture of an extremely smooth process. The big-bang, the most cataclysmic event we can imagine, on closer inspection appears finely orchestrated," the scientists said. "Either conditions before the beginning were very regular, or processes we don't yet know about worked to make the universe extremely uniform."

According to the big-bang theory, the universe began as a hot, incredibly dense mass containing all the matter in the universe. It exploded in an instant and the universe was formed from cooling of the gaseous explosion.

The radiation being measured by scientists now is believed to have originated in the intensely hot material that existed for the first million years after the big-bang. The radiation, now weakened as a result of the many millions of years since then, nevertheless can be used to measure motion of the earth and reveals some information about the beginning.

Women on oral contraceptives increase risk of liver tumors

CHICAGO [UPI] — Women taking oral contraceptions run an increased risk of developing liver tumors, a study in this week's issue of the Journal of the American Medical Association indicates.

The American College of Surgeon's Commission on Cancer conducted a survey of primary liver tumors in cancer program-approved hospitals throughout the nation from 1970 to 1975. The National Cancer Advisory Board requested the study.

Some 543 cases of primary liver tumors among both sexes were reported. Of these, 378 occurred in females and 165 in males. In males, 91.5 per cent of the tumors were malignant. In females, 43.9 per cent of the tumors were malignant.

Women taking oral contraceptions accounted for nearly half of all tumors and 65 per cent of benign tumors found, the study found.

"The findings confirm the suggested association between oral contraceptive use and hepatic cell adenomas and focal nodular hyperplasias," the JAMA article said.

"The frequency of malignant tumors increases with age and resembles the distribution of malignant liver tumors in these age groups in the general population," the article said.

"In contrast, the frequency of benign tumors peaks in the age group from 26 to 30 years and declines slightly in the older age groups, a pattern that corresponds in the female population."

Attorney sends case to jury in Texas' longest murder trial

AMARILLO, Texas [UPI] — Prosecutors and defense attorneys in the T. Cullen Davis murder trial rested yesterday and the presiding judge said closing arguments would be heard Wednesday, sending Texas' longest murder trial to the jury.

"The testimony that you've heard thus far is the testimony upon which you will decide the guilt or innocence of the defendant," District Judge George E. Dowlen told the jury.

Some jurors have been sequestered in a downtown motel since June.

"I can tell you now we will be in a position to read a charge to you and begin jury closing arguments Wednesday morning," Dowlen said.

The defense rested yesterday without calling any rebuttal witnesses. The state had called two during 12 weeks of testimony but rested unexpectedly yesterday.

Davis, 44, is being tried for the Aug. 2, 1976, shooting death of Andrea Wilborn, 12, his stepdaughter. The child's body was found in the basement of the secluded Fort Worth mansion Davis vacated in 1974 when sued for divorce by his wife, Priscilla, 36.

Mrs. Davis and two other prosecution witnesses identified the millionaire industrialist as the black-clad intruder who ambushed residents and guests at his former home. Mrs. Davis was wounded and her lover, Stan Farr, 31, killed. Gus Gavrel Jr., 22, a family friend who arrived during the assaults, was wounded and remains partially paralyzed.

The defense countered the identification of Davis as the gunman with testimony from his mistress, Karen Master, 29, who said he was asleep at her suburban home at the time police theorize the mansion assailant was escaping.

Dowlen and attorneys for both sides spent yesterday afternoon studying more than 740 pieces of evidence introduced during testimony. They will spend today preparing the legal charge which will govern the jury in its deliberations.

Plant stimulant

EAST LANSING, Mich. [UPI] — A new growth-stimulating chemical which increased field crop yields up to 24 per cent in Michigan promises to enhance worldwide food production dramatically, scientists said Monday.

The new chemical is a natural plant alcohol called triacontanol which Michigan State University horticulturist Stanley K. Ries extracted from alfalfa hay.

It is not a fertilizer, the scientists said. It apparently affects plant metabolism in ways that are not completely understood. Ries said much more testing is required before it can be widely used in agriculture.

"It is still possible that the chemical won't work in other important crop production areas such as the tropics or more arid locales," he said. "In fact, it may not work in Michigan next year."

"Increases in yield averaged from 7 to 22 per cent, if all our test plots with 10 different crops are considered," Ries said. "The average increase for all plots of all crops was 12 per cent."

He said triacontanol works in such small doses that one pound could treat 90,000 acres of farmland. It is found naturally in many plants — and in fact is routinely ingested by humans in food — and therefore appears to be environmentally harmless as a plant treatment, he said.

"I'm still very skeptical it's going to work every time," Ries said. "I would just hope it would be an effective means of increasing the crops of developing countries."

Sylvan H. Wittwer, director of the MSU agricultural experimental station, said the chemical is a breakthrough of another kind. Until now, most efforts to enhance crop growth involved external factors such as irrigation, fertilization and mechanization.

By contrast, triacontanol works on the inner biological processes of the plant.

"I think we've got a frontier of research that will be extremely important for society in the near future," Wittwer said.

Omitted spring courses

The following courses were not included in the course description guide:

Music 290 D Boyer

Afro-American Church Music, Office: Cottage C, Meetings: Monday-Wednesday-Friday, 1:25 p.m. Organization: Lecture and class participation. Aim: This course is designed to provide a much needed background to jazz, soul and gospel music, for Afro-American church music serves not only as the source of all Black American music, but also as a direct history of the Afro-American experience. Placing emphasis on such historical song forms as the Baptist lining hymn, camp-meeting spirituals, ring shout, Negro Spirituals, jubilees and church-gospel songs, an analytical line will be drawn directly to blues, rhythm and blues rock and soul music, with special attention given to gospel music. Readings: Textbook by instructor and articles. Requirements: Attendance and class participation listening to tapes and two short exams.

Music 330 [290B] Boyer

Techniques in Afro-American Vocal Music, Office: Cottage C, Classes: Tuesday and Thursday, 1-2:30 p.m. Organization: Lecture-demonstration and individual participation. Aim: To analyze, prepare and perform Afro-American vocal music, concentrating on the development of skills in singing jazz, popular and soul songs, blues, spirituals and gospel songs. The techniques of such singers as Bessie Smith, Ella Fitzgerald, Billie Holiday, Mahalia Jackson, B.B. King, Aretha Franklin and James Cleveland will be studies in detail. The class will present public recitals during the semester.

Requirements: Audition for admittance into class. Note: This course is an elective and open to all Five-College students.

Your Birthday

By Stella Wilder

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 15

Born today, you know and can judge intuitively human behavior. You understand people's problems and of the reasons behind them. You are one of those to whom other people instinctively listen, and to whom they look for sympathy and solutions. You are slow to admit your fallibility; rather, you allow people to keep their trust in you, doing your best not to mislead them.

You are a romantic individual, though not publicly demonstrative of this. You look beneath the surface to those aspects of character essential to a relationship, and establish your friendships accordingly. This ability should serve you well, especially if you attain a position of leadership requiring decisions concerning other people.

Your talent for organization, persuasion, and inspiration could make you a power to reckon with in your community and business or profession. You are easily able to persuade others against their will into uncharacteristic behavior; but this will gain you an adverse reputation. Your concern for others must remain.

To find what is in store for you tomorrow, select your birthday and read the corresponding paragraph. Let your birthday star be your daily guide.

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 16

SCORPIO (Oct.23-Nov.22) - Know the difference between packaging and content. Don't be satisfied with less than the best today.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov.22-Dec.21) - What you considered ills take a turn for the better today. You may have decisions to make by evening.

CAPRICORN (Dec.22-Jan.19) - A new friendship may not be on as sound a footing as you thought. Solidify and stabilize your feelings.

AQUARIUS (Jan.20-Feb.18) - The plans you reworked yesterday and must rework again today can be implemented successfully tomorrow.

PISCES (Feb.19-March 20) - Another's refusal to take your word for things must not upset you. Go about your business.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) - You should be able to make friends when others are making an enemy. The search for success moves downward.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) - Let those less fortunate know that you are ready, willing, and able to help if they ask.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) - Adverse criticism may disappoint you, but it can also challenge you if you take it in the spirit given.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) - A bit of tension is good for the quality of your endeavor. Keep quality up; promote your own projects.

LEO (July 23-Aug.22) - Beware you don't procrastinate until you miss the time completely for taking advantage of an opportunity.

VIRGO (Aug.23-Sept.22) - Be willing to accept extra responsibility. You do much to keep another's interest; use your talents fully.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) - Minor repairs could lead to major expenditures if you are careless. Call in an expert for an estimate.

Longhorns stay on top

NEW YORK [UPI] — The University of Texas, in the homestretch of a National Championship drive, retained its No. 1 college football ranking this week with 35 first place votes and 395 points.

The Longhorns demolished Texas Christian University, 44-14, last Saturday as Heisman Trophy candidate Earl Campbell ran for 153 yards and scored two touchdowns. Texas must get by Baylor this Saturday and Texas A&M on Nov. 26 to complete a perfect season and stage a turnabout of a 5-5-1 record in 1976.

Oklahoma, ripping Colorado, 52-14, nudged ahead of Alabama into second place among the collegiate elite with 314 points. The Crimson tide collected 313 and dropped to the third slot after a 36-0 shutout of Miami (Fla.). Oklahoma and Alabama each had one first place vote.

Ohio State remained in fourth place, losing some support this week as the Buckeyes drew 263 points, 16 less than last week.

Another switch between the fifth and sixth place teams resulted when Michigan climbed to No. 5 with 209 points and Notre Dame slipped to No. 6 on 204 points. Seventh through 10th places remained the same, occupied by Arkansas (159), Penn State (121), Pittsburgh (89) and Nebraska (66). Pittsburgh secured the only other first place vote among the top 10.

JV booters end unbeaten

By BILL TARTER
Collegian Staff

As the curtain fell on the 1977 edition of the UMass junior varsity soccer team last Thursday, there was unanimous agreement that the season had been a great success.

The sub-varsity had easily polished off Amherst College, 4-0, to complete the first undefeated season for a UMass soccer squad in recent memory.

Antonio Estanislau celebrated his birthday in fine fashion, scoring the opening goal and what proved to be the game winner 18 minutes into the first half. The goal was a result of a 'give-and-go' pass worked to perfection by Dave Mains and Estanislau. Early in the second half Mains got a score of his own, giving UMass a comfortable 2-0 lead.

The Minutemen then proceeded to totally dominate the action, rolling up a 23-5 advantage in shots on goal. In the closing moments of the game, Tarek Elnabli and Scott Cooper added the final coup de grace to Amherst and a flashy finish to an outstanding 7-0-1 season.

Amherst's celebrated Prince Albert Grimaldi provided a touch of class to the game with his presence, but he too was unable to help the team's cause. Playing left and right wing, he showed traces of his European soccer heritage. The Prince had good skills but seemed to lack the tenacious desire that is necessary to succeed in the American brand of soccer.

UMass coach Joel Dryer was extremely proud of the team's accomplishments.

"They worked extremely hard all season, this squad was more than a collection of talented individuals they truly came together as a team," he said.

"From the first day of practice I had two objectives. One was to beat UConn and the other was to have an undefeated season, we attained both those goals. What more could you ask for?" he concluded.

★ UM gains national berth

but not of UMass. I talked with Judith and she confidentially promised that if UMass beat Springfield, there would be a party in her room after the game. I told her that I didn't see how they could lose, judging by their talent and confident attitude.

Friday was the big day — not only for the game but for Sue Krieder. It was her birthday and she was given the best present possible — a win over the Chiefs. The defense was too much in this game and Jody Wickman and Laura O'Neil scored the big goals. Sue said it was the best birthday she'd ever had, although being embarrassed at a local restaurant by being sung to by the players.

Sure enough, after the game, there was a party in the coaches' room. There was so much celebrating that the manager of the motel came to quiet them down. But this joyous celebration couldn't be dampened or quickly disposed of. Co-captains Cheryl Meliones and Lynsie Wickman had a few words for the team before being dragged away. They momentarily reflected on last year's disappointing season by saying that they've learned a lot and that they were ready for Denver.

Walking around that night, I noticed that mostly everyone stayed in their rooms resting and healing. Mostly all of the players had minor injuries suffered from their first three games. Meliones was hit hard by the ball below the throat and was down for several minutes; Kathy Gipps' leg was swelling up; Julie Hall and Krieder suffered hand bruises; Kelley Salls had circles under her eyes from lack of sleep and had sore, hacked-up ankles. The list could go on.

The team awoke relatively early (8:30) and went to breakfast. They were very loose and ready, but not for field hockey. They were ready to rest and take it easy.

But the schedule called for one more game for which they were not ready. They'd simply played themselves out the days before. But still they came so close to scoring that it was frustrating. They controlled most of the game but didn't score and fell, 1-0.

It was a sad game to lose and most of the team scattered to their local homes near Boston after the concluding ceremonies. What was sad was that the team came together the day before and now had to lose. It didn't seem right.

But what I saw this weekend was something special. I watched this team pull together and on sheer determination overcome injury and fatigue to beat some of the best teams in New England. All the while they managed to keep their sense of humor and comfort each other when it was needed.

They played as a team and made me wish that I could feel such closeness as they must have felt to each other. Watching from the sidelines, all I was allowed to feel was pride that this was the team which represented UMass. They showed themselves well.

able to run again. Since that time we have won the Yankee Conference, placed 2nd in the New England's, and now we have won this," he said.

O'Brien's squad, by virtue of this championship, will send a full squad to the nationals in Spokane, Washington next week.

When asked how his team will respond, O'Brien said, "We're hoping for 8th-9th place in the country and I think we can do it."

Croasdale gains honors; BC game to be aired

By JUDY VAN HANDLE
Collegian Staff

Following Saturday's 19-6 win over New Hampshire, UMass cornerback Dave Croasdale has been named ECAC defensive and Yankee Conference defensive player of the week.

Meanwhile, the UMass athletic department yesterday received confirmation that Saturday's regular season finale against Boston College will be televised by ABC-TV.

Croasdale, a 5'10", 180 lb. senior from Manchester, N.H., intercepted three passes in the Yankee Conference title win. The first theft set up a touchdown.

Croasdale made six tackles, with two coming on kickoff returns. He also deflected a pass which may have gone for a touchdown.

Dave Douvadjian, a 5'9", 175 lb. senior from Greenfield, earned an honorable mention for in the YanCon picks for his play in the victory.

Douvadjian, who entered the game early in the second quarter after Billy Coleman hurt an ankle, ran for 99 yards in 17 carries.

Greg Jones, a Boston University flanker, and Leroy Shaw, a Rhode Island halfback, were named YanCon offensive and rookie players of the week, respectively.

On the television front, word was received from Boston College that Saturday's game will be aired on a regional basis by ABC.

The game, which had been slated for a 1:30 p.m. kickoff, will instead start at 4:10 p.m.

The telecast will be the second part of an ABC college football doubleheader.

On the playoff front, an NCAA conference call will take place at 10 a.m. today. The Division II selection committee is expected to make the first selections for the playoffs at the meeting.

In a related development, assistant athletic director Bob O'Connell last night that UMass, in a reversal of an earlier decision, would be interested in hosting a first round playoff game.

According to O'Connell, the athletic department said earlier this year that it was not interested in hosting a game at Alumni Stadium. But a letter was sent yesterday to the NCAA saying that the athletic department here has changed its earlier stance, and would like to host a playoff contest.

O'Connell said that all budgetary information must be in the NCAA's hands by 9 a.m. Central Standard Time today.

Stickers pulled together at Northeast tournament

Editor's Note: The following is a personal commentary on the UMass field hockey team's trip to Harvard for the Northeast playoffs.

By JIM GLEASON
Collegian Staff

I was fortunate enough to travel with the field hockey team this past weekend to their tournament at Cambridge and I must say that it was the most special three days I've spent in a long time.

I'd first met some members of the team outside their motel and joined them for breakfast. It wasn't clearly visible that they were nervous until it came time to leave for the field. Then they started to stretch and yawn nervously. The pressure was beginning to get to them.

Coach Judith Davidson led the team to Harvard Stadium where the games were to be played. There was already a game in progress when they arrived. As UMass watched from the sidelines, they fell in love with the field. The grass was mowed and the turf was level — it was the best for hockey the players have seen this year, and they were anxious to play on it.

Maine was the first team to play and fall to UMass. I couldn't believe that the Minutewomen were playing so well. The players had told me they were capable of that all year but hadn't consistently done so. Now, they were showing me. They won, 2-1, with Lynsie Wickman scoring twice.

Following the game, the formal opening ceremonies were held introducing all the teams. UMass marched proudly behind its handmade banner as the Minutewomen took up the rear of the parade. The significance of the ceremony was that it marked the first women's athletic event ever to be held in Harvard Stadium.

After the ceremony concluded, some members of the team went off to eat while others watched over tournament games. I walked around the athletic fields and noticed the conflicting scenery; the old buildings crowded with historic monuments and tradition and the new modern buildings covering tennis courts, pools and a track which seemed out of place.

At 2:30, the team was again together and limbering up for its next game with Dartmouth. Sue Kibling and Laura O'Neil scored and the defense recorded a shutout. Again, the Minutewomen played one of their best games of the season.

The team was tired and worn out emotionally. When a team is expecting to do well, a single elimination tournament can really work on your mind. But as the team loaded into the vans for the return trip to the motel, I could sense a growing feeling of confidence in each other. They weren't as nervous as before the games started.

Mostly everyone went to bed early, hoping for a good night's sleep. The local news showed some footage from the tournament

Harriers top East in IC4A's

By MIKE BERGER
Collegian Staff

BRONX, N.Y. – "Whoa Baby."

"UMass, who believes it!"

"It's been a long time since we last brought home the silverware," said UMass head coach Ken O'Brien as he clutched the 20 pound IC4A championship trophy, emblematic of the best college and university cross country team in the East.

Stetson Arnold

UMass, all season long submerged in the shadow of Providence College (ranked fourth in the nation), finally put it all together and defeated 23 teams including Rutgers University, ranked 9th in the country.

By gaining 5th, 6th, 20th, 44th, and 48th spots, UMass won the title with 123 points, just outgaining nearest competitor Georgetown which amassed 128 points. Villanova was third with 142 points while premeet favorite Rutgers failed miserably with a fourth place 182 points.

Heroes were aplenty for the harriers. For starters, Stetson Arnold and Mike Quinn, displaying the form that earned them All-American honors blazed to 5th and 6th place finishes with times of 24:39 and 24:53 over the treacherous 5 mile course.

Lou Panaccione, who just a week earlier earned All-New England honors, scored 20th place (25:14) to aid in the win.

"To ice the cake," senior Tom Wolff won the 44th spot while sophomore surprise Mike Morris, excelled with a 48th place showing.

"What can you say," said team captain Frank Carroll. "We are the best team in the East. Everyone ran clutch today. Quinnie and Stet looked the best I have seen them all year. Lou gets better and better each week, and no one at all expected the finish of Mike Morris. Unbelievable."

"Before the race," said an elated Ken O'Brien, "I felt we might have a shot. On paper, Rutgers, Georgetown, and Villanova were better, but our people believed they could do the job and did it."

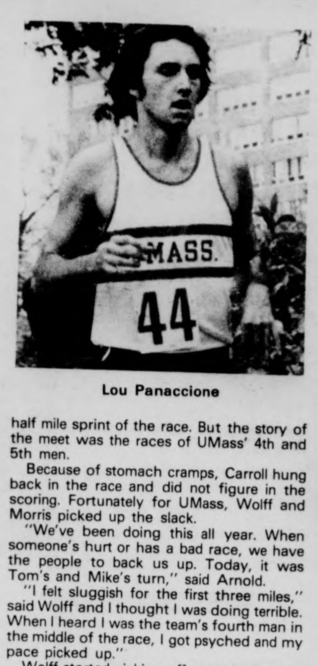
"I was the only coach that picked UMass as the team to beat us," said Rutgers coach Les Wallace. "If I was smart, I would have bet on UMass and won a lot of money."

Northeastern's Jon Flora won the race (24:17) but he had to outkick Army's Curt Alitz (24:23) and Georgetown's Jes Peterson (24:27). The three ran together for most of the race with Flora sprinting past Alitz and Peterson for the individual honors.

At the mile mark, Quinn was in the fifth spot with Arnold 9th and Panaccione 15th. A mile and a half later, the three maintained their positions, but as they hit "Cemetery Hill", the highest and steepest hill of the course, Arnold began to make his move.

Going up the steep hill, Arnold passed four runners as he began to run with Quinn for the remainder of the race. Panaccione lost four positions as the runners entered the last half mile sprint of the race. But the story of the meet was the races of UMass' 4th and 5th men.

Mike Quinn



Lou Panaccione

Because of stomach cramps, Carroll hung back in the race and did not figure in the scoring. Fortunately for UMass, Wolff and Morris picked up the slack.

"We've been doing this all year. When someone's hurt or has a bad race, we have the people to back us up. Today, it was Tom's and Mike's turn," said Arnold.

"I felt sluggish for the first three miles," said Wolff and I thought I was doing terrible. When I heard I was the team's fourth man in the middle of the race, I got psyched and my pace picked up."

Wolff started picking off runners, passing about 15 of them, and then sprinted as hard as he could to the finish line.

"I knew position was important and it turned out it was," said Wolff.

Assistant coach Arnie Morse said the coaches decided to pick Morris for the varsity because he was the JV's most aggressive runner, and, after the race, Morse said it was a good decision.

"For this race, we needed as many aggressive runners in the lineup as we had. For the JV's all season long, Mike has done that and he certainly helped us out today," said Morse.

Morris said after the race he too didn't feel that strong at the three mile mark but after hearing the positions of the first three UMass runners, felt better and immediately began to pass runners.

"I guess it was the team's conditioning but on that last hill, I ran as hard as I could and began to pass a lot of runners," said Morris.

UMass last won the IC4A championship in 1974, but O'Brien said he was happier for this year's squad because of the obstacles the team had to overcome to do it.

"This year's team and 1974's squad are very similar in talent but this year's team had to work a lot harder to accomplish this IC4A trophy," said O'Brien.

"For most of the season we were without Quinn and Arnold because of injuries and it wasn't until three weeks ago that they were

Women swimmers win; dunk two in opener

By ELLEN DAVIS
Collegian Staff

The UMass women's swimming and diving team opened its season last night with an impressive victory over Smith and Mount Holyoke in a tri-meet held at NOPE.

Led by double victories by Kathy Jurick Celia Walsh, and Deb Schwartz, and top-notch performances by the divers and relay teams, the women took the meet with 106 points. Smith came in second with 73 points, followed by the Holyoke "Sea Lions" with 52 points.

UMass was in charge the entire meet, following a victory by the 400 yard medley relay team of Jurick, Marianne Primavera, Schwartz, and Jeri Otey in the first event.

First places by Walsh in the 200 freestyle, Jurick in the 100 backstroke, and Schwartz in the 200 butterfly, along with strong performances by Lynn Lutz in the 1000 freestyle and Primavera in the 100 breast stroke give the team a 38-35-17 lead going into the first diving event.

Jurick swam her best time ever in the 100 backstroke, as she swept the field with a 1:06.8, and Schwartz 'walked away' with the 200 butterfly, with a time of 2:18.3.

UMass veteran diver Susi Strobel captured the required phase of the diving competition with 131 points, and Leslie Dumphey gave the team another three points with a third place finish in the event.

Following the diving, Otey and co-captain Lise Hembrough came in first and third in the 100 freestyle with sub-minute times of 58.8 and 59.75. Cathy Jurick earned her second victory with a 2:26.4 in the 200 backstroke, and Celia Walsh gave the team her second set of six points with a 1:07 victory in the 100 fly.

A second-place finish by Walsh in the 200 IM and second and fourth places by Schwartz and Lutz in the 500 free made the score 80-63-44 with three events left.

The optional diving followed, with two more impressive performances by the UMass diving competitors. Kris Bullard won the event with 151.15 points, and Leslie Dumphey took third place again.

Schwartz's victory in the 200 breaststroke, and a first place finish by the 400 freestyle relay of Rachel Mack, Lise Hembrough, Walsh, and Otey sealed the victory.

Despite the fact that he ended up going for a swim himself, UMass coach John Nunnelly was obviously pleased with the meet, his first as a collegiate coach. "It surpassed my highest expectations," he said. "We did terrific. The entire team performed well."

Co-Captain Mack was also amazed at the team's "unbelievable effort." Mack noted that the victory came under the "toughest conditions" – it was a distance meet, where swimming events were twice as long as usual, and it was a tri-meet.

Diving coach Doug Forsyth summed it up when he said, "It was a great way to start the season."

The team will be seeking its second victory of the season when it travels to Williams for a 7:00 p.m. meet tomorrow night. Last year the women defeated Williams, so they may be 2-0 when they take on UVM at home Saturday to end their first week of competition.

Letters of thanks

'Tis the time of year to be gracious, with Thanksgiving slightly over a week away. Now I may not be 100 per cent correct (after all, I'm a sports reporter, not a newsperson – we don't have to be right all the time), but in some people's mail this week, the following implications of sarcastic thanks may be enclosed in a T-day card.

Dear Patriots,

Thank you for a wonderful season. 5-4 is not that bad a record. It's better than 4-5 like those teams in the AFC Central division [true, they're still in contention]. I am completely consoled in the fact that if you [Pats] were in that division, you'd be in first place.

And you lost to some tough teams, the Jets and then the Bills. At least they weren't on consecutive weeks.

Don't think it was your fault you got crushed by Miami – it's obvious the Devil is against you down there in Florida. Maybe you should protest the game [too many players on the field?].

I only have one question: Now that your year is over, will you bother to show up for your next five games and if yes, why?

Cordially yours,

A Fan

Dear Mr. Shula,

Though an avid New England fan, I would like to take this time and opportunity to congratulate you on your team's success this season, especially on the heels of Miami's 17-5 victory over the N.E. Patriots.

I especially admired the last play of the game, when rather than boot the ball away, you allowed your boys to give the Pats two-points via the safety, allowing for the final margin of 12 pts.

Personally I was very fearful that the Dolphins would kick it away. Now the way the Pats were playing, they weren't going to score. They had their field goal for the day.

And I had New England plus thirteen points. I thought for sure 'there goes $100'. But then that safety.

Without that, I wouldn't have gone all out and spent 50 cents on this card. I still have $99.50 left too.

Gotta fly. The kid I won that bet from is checking out the Peter Pan schedule for the next bus south.

Your friend for life,

Rich Bettor

Dear Tommy,

Congratulations are in order for you and the Celtics in general. By defeating Milwaukee you are out of the cellar since those N.J. Nets lost.

We know the Knicks won't last for long in first place.

I can see you've got the team moving again. Two wins in a row, that's hot! The Knicks and 76'ers have got to be shaking in their Converse All-Stars sneakers when they see the standings and realize the 'men in green' are hot on their tails.

Don't let it bother you that fans aren't exactly tearing down the Garden wall for home games. The Bruins aren't drawing either. And they've won more games than us too.

Do you think it would be too much to ask –to go for three wins in a row?

Trustingly,

Red

P.S. The management has asked me to tell you that Gene Shue's application for your position will now be tossed out.

To U.N.H.:

Thanks a lot Durham footballers!!!

Here we are playing UConn at home, and you've got UMass up there. All you had to do was beat them and the three of us could've shared the YanCon title [we knew we'd smash U of C].

Just because we upset you a couple weeks earlier; it wasn't our fault. You had your chance to beat us. No, you get even this way. We played our butts off Saturday for the hell of it.

Well, we hope to do the same for you some day.

Begrudgingly,

Rams of URI

Faculty union could sue UM

By MEGAN O'REILLY
Collegian Staff

The Faculty Union (MSP) may have grounds to file an unfair labor practices charge against the administration for refusing information to the Program and Budget Council of the Faculty Senate.

Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery last night said in a telephone interview that "it is very unlikely" that the Program and Budget Council, would receive requested information regarding Full Time Enrollments, State Funds 01, 03, 0416 and Trust Funds, because it had never been requested by the PBC before, and it dealt with wages, salaries and hours which he would negotiate only with the union.

Chairman of the PBC Harvey Kline said this denial of information violates a collective bargaining agreement which specifies that rules of governance cannot be changed during the interim period of establishing the MSP contract. Kline said he had requested and received this same information from the Office of Budget and Institutional Studies (OBIS) for the past two years.

Bromery was unavailable for comment on these charges. Bromery said he will only provide the PBC with information his lawyers deem appropriate because of the changes in governance procedure brought about by the union.

"That's absurd," said Larry Roberts, chairman of MSP. "That information is public record and the chancellor is choosing not to reveal it in order to continue to frustrate the faculty. I think it's unwise that he's doing so."

Kline refuted the chancellor's denial for information because it concerned wage, salary and working conditions, on the basis of a meeting held with the chancellor on Oct. 4.

"I understood the chancellor to say that we could no longer have individuals wages and salaries, but we could have such information on a department by department basis," he said.

"If the MSP is to file a suit they must do it now before governance is eroded," Kline said. "This creates a problem because it would put the union in litigation and might take eight months to a year to resolve."

Roberts said if the chancellor continues to withhold the information the union would seriously consider filing suit.

Kline said certain faculty members speculate that the "stone-walling of the Faculty Senate" may be an attempt by the administration to set a precedent of refusing information before the contract is signed.

The final clause in the proposed contract, which deals only with wages, salaries and working conditions, states "all other governance will continue as before," thus refusing information would become law under the contract.

Kline said many members of the MSP believed this clause would be a part of the final contract.

Bromery said that this speculation would be unfounded if he had anything to do with it because "that clause won't be in the contract."

The chancellor proceeded to contradict his previous reassurances to the Faculty Senate that their role in governance, except in the areas concerning wage, salary and hours, would stay essentially the same.

"The role the Faculty Senate is to play in governance procedure is entirely an administrative decision and will be determined by the Board of Trustees and the administration, he said. It has nothing to do whatsoever with the union contract unless it deals specifically with wages, hours and salaries."

Secretary of the Faculty Senate Terrence Burke said in a telephone interview, "I have no objection to the chancellor's stance until

Hung jury result of mock trial on effects of television violence

By ELLEN PLAUSKY
Collegian Staff

A hung jury was the result of the television violence trial last night conducted by students under the direction of Prof. Brian Fontes of the Communication Studies department.

An audience nearing 100 watched the proceedings of the trial based on the widely publicized trial of Ronald Zamora. Edward Panetta, the defendant in this trial, like Zamora, had admitted guilt in firing the gun that killed the victim. Whether he was responsible for his actions at the time of the murder was the main question that attorneys of both defendants tried to disprove.

In Zamora's trial, evidence of the effects of television violence on children, one of the main arguments for Zamora's plea of temporary insanity was declared overruled and left unheard. In the trial of Edward Penatta, it was not.

Fontes, before the trial began, reminded the audience and jury that the purpose of this trial was to determine if those experts testimony could in fact have affected the outcome.

Testimony for both sides, delivered by students of Fontes' Comstu 226 class, was compiled, as one witness put it, "in the library." Still, the evidence was all drawn from actual experiments done on the effects of televised violence on children.

The question of whether television violence or Panetta was in fact on trial was the topic of much disagreement. Defense Attorney Rocco Defrucio repeatedly claimed that Panetta was on trial, while the prosecution attorneys seemed more inclined to put television itself up as the main discussion point.

After many experiments were cited with conflicting results, and occasional humor, the jury was sent out to determine a verdict. During that time Fontes, a past researcher of the effects of television violence on children, fielded questions from the audience.

Due to the evidence presented, the jury returned with three jurors declaring Panetta temporarily insane, and eight saying he was sane at the time of the murder. Following Massachusetts state laws, a hung jury was declared by the acting judge, David Donovan, a UMass graduate student.

When asked about the trial later, Donovan said he felt the trial had been a good educational experience for the students involved. He also said, "It shows that the body of literature available on the subject of television violence's effects on children is not conclusive."

When asked whether he, as a researcher felt that television intoxication, the term used for the defense's main argument, was in fact possible, Fontes said, "Television could cause violent behavior effects on some people under certain conditions, but since these can't be defined it would be difficult to prove. Basically though, it could happen."

UM trustee C. Clark dies at 58

By JIM KASSNER
Collegian Staff

A memorial service will be held Friday for UMass trustee Catherine F. Clark, who died of cancer Monday after a long illness. She was 58.

University spokesman Howard White said the service will be at 11 a.m. at Clark's Dorchester home.

Clark was appointed to the board in April of 1974, and served on the Committee for Long Range Planning and the Building and Grounds Committee. She was also an at-large member of the trustees' Executive Committee.

At the time of her death, Clark was a member of the Area III Elderly Nutrition Project, of the Division of Federated Dorchester Neighborhood Houses. The Nutrition Project is one of the largest elderly service programs in Massachusetts, providing hot meals and transportation to elderly residents of Dorchester.

Clark served as past vice president of the Dorchester-Savin Hill Civic Association, and of the Dorchester United Neighbor Association.

Clark also served on the Mayor's Committee for Boston, following the outbreak of racial violence in the city in response to court ordered busing.

UMass President Robert C. Wood said, "In three and one half years of service on the board, Kit Clark served the University on many fronts and in measureable ways. Her greatest contribution was the link she created between the harbor campus (UMass-Boston) and the Dorchester community. But her concern for services to students, her capacity to cut to the heat of issues, and her consistent insistence that the public university must truly serve the public were hallmarks of her trusteeship.

"At this time in the University's history, she is literally irreplaceable. As a friend to all her fellow trustees, and to me, she will always be missed."

Ghostwriter for Free Church faces charges

By BETH SEGERS
Collegian Staff

A Massachusetts man charged with extortion in connection with The Free Chruch, Inc. has been writing under an alias to promote that group in Outfront, a student-funded publication.

The alleged extortion stems from a Free Church, Inc. program to get parents to send their children from broken homes to boarding schools, according to Rhode Island Attorney General Julius C. Michaelson.

Louis Wilson, a non-student who founded the church, used the alias of Mark Lewis in an Oct. 25 Outfront article on the group, and wrote another article with no byline in the November issue, according to Britt Warren, a staff member of the Outfront collective.

Publication of the articles written by Wilson, who is not a staff member, was supported by the paper's staff, said Warren, although "the relationship of Lou Wilson to the collective is now in question."

Wilson could not be reached for comment this week.

Wilson faces an extradition hearing Dec. 5 on a governor's warrent in Rhode Island, where he and his wife Nancy established the church.

Allegations facing Wilson in Rhode Island include charges of issuing false checks, stealing under false pretenses, threatening in an attempt to extort $5,000, and conspiracy, according to Frederick Cass, assistant attorney general of Rhode Island.

The Free Church, Inc. was established by Louis and Nancy Wilson and Carolyn Dlouhy in Shutesbury, Mass. after moving it from Little Compton, R.I. It advocates a "religious and educational alternative" for church members and their children, according to the November issue of Outfront.

With separation of church and state as its major tenent, The Free Church, Inc. challenges the right of the state to make public education compulsory, according to Wilson's November article.

"We're not saying that Lous Wilson is right or that Free Church is the ultimate answer," Warren said. But, he added, the issue is "important and has to be brought to attention."

Outfront gets about 60 per cent of its funds from the Commuter Collective, Warren said, with the remaining 40 per cent coming from the Undergraduate Student Senate.

Wilson has access to Outfront, according to Warren, because the paper "as a community media resource, solicited articles and letters from students and non-students in the area."

Senate will hear proposal to reopen towing debate

By JON KLEIN
Collegian Staff

A motion will be brought before the Undergraduate Student Senate tonight to reopen debate on the proposal of a student-run towing service which was approved by the senate last week.

According to Senate Speaker Pat Whelan the proposal to reopen debate is based on new information that has come out since last week. Whelan said the proposal was based on the belief that the administration was not going to change its towing policies. Whelan said the administration plans to change its policies "radically."

The speaker also said the figures used by Stop Amherst Towing, the group which presented the proposal, are "questionable," and need further examination.

Another reason to continue debate, according to Whelan, is that the "discussion centered on financing, not the concept of towing."

In other business, the senate will vote to approve the selections for student observer and alternate observer. The Senate Collective Bargaining Committee has chosen Dan Salsi as observer and Gail Doyle as alternate.

The Advocacy Services Committee will recommend that the Legal Services Office work on release of all student course and faculty valuations for next year's Couuse and Teacher evaluation Guide. The committee oversees the staff and resources of the advocacy agencies. The faculty says the evaulations are personal information. LSO may attempt to obtain the information under the Federal Freedom of Information Act.

★UM denies information

he formally tells the Faculty Senate and the PBC of this."

The role of the PBC, according to Faculty Senate by-laws, is to advise the administration on matters of budget allocation. Kline said he requested the information for a mid-year budget review, which is a formal recommendation to the provost concerning the reallocation of any additional monies.

"Without this information," said Kline, "the PBC cannot continue its established role in governance procedures and protect the best interests of the faculty."

Bromery continued to offer his views on future governance, saying, "There seems to be some kind of feeling out there that the union makes no difference. It makes a great deal of difference, especially in requests dealing with financial information."

Bromery dealt a further blow to the PBC. "The MSP will be requesting a great deal of information which will heavily tax our resources," he said. "As the officially recognized faculty bargaining group, their requests will take precedence over those of the senate.

The kind of governance envisioned by the chancellor is one of dual purpose where there is no functional overlap. Bromery said the administration would try to maintain collegiality on those issues not mandatory in the contract, and cited this as a precedent over other universities where faculty had no say in governance procedures whatsoever.

At Kline's meeting with Bromery it was decided the PBC could have all the information sent by OBIS to the trustees and all the information sent by the trustees to the deans.

"This is a catch-22 situation," said Kline, "since we don't know what information is sent, we don't know what to ask for."

The final decision on the PBC's request for information is crucial to the future of the council. Kline said if they are turned down, the PBC will most likely choose one of three possible options: 1) to continue to operate and get their information through sources, 2) to quit, or 3) to move as individuals or as a group to the MSP in order to protect faculty interests.

"One morning the faculty are going to wake up and they will know what they can and cannot do because it will be written in the contract," Bromery said. "Until that day, there are going to be many frustrated faculty and Harvey Kline is one of them."

Budget surplus discovered in Southwest allocation

By SETH JACOBSON
Collegian Staff

Southwest Assembly co-Treasurer Bonnie Ward last night announced Southwest had been over allocated $4,000 by the Undergraduate Student Senate for its budget this year.

"The senate has allocated funds using this year's population as a guide, but with the funds that were held from last year's students," she told the assembly. There were no comments.

Now that the error has been discovered, the assembly is left with $432 to spend for the remainder of the year.

There has been no explanation by the student senate as to why they waited so long to inform the assembly, she said. Out of the original disputed figure of $47,675, the assembly has spent or allocated $43,808. The assembly is now $4,000 short of that difference, said Ward.

The allocation discrepancy has stemmed from what appears to be a growing conflict between area governments and the method by which the student senate may compute allocations. The area governments argue that the senate computed figures on a percentage scale, and not on a head count which would have distributed funds more equally.

The Orchard Hill Area Government filed suit against the student senate. The trial has been scheduled for Monday. If the area governments were to win the suit, Southwest would be entitled to an additional $2,000.

Also last night, three of the four candidates running for the Southwest vice-presidency, Peter Torkidson, Jimmy Rosenberg, and Bruce H. Aronson spoke after the meeting. The fourth, Tim Condron, was not present.

Torkidson, new acting vice president, spoke optimistically of his desire to see greater involvement in assembly activities.

He also said that as acting vice president he felt he was more experienced than his opponents.

Aronson focused largely on "the lack of effort to push through bills once they have been passed."

Water will be off

The Water Division of the Amherst Department of Public Works advises that alterations will be made to the water main at North Pleasant and Hallock streets tomorrow morning, requiring a disruption of water service. Repairs will begin at midnight and should be completed by 7 a.m. tomorrow. Amherst residents and businesses on North Pleasant Street between Amity and Fearing Streets should draw off sufficient water prior to the alterations, and check their tap water tomorrow morning to be sure the disruption does not leave any dirty water.

Ramones play Hatch

Punk rock will be purported by one of its original purporters tonight at the Hatch as the Ramones are scheduled to make a live concert appearance.

Fronted by lead singer Joey Ramone, the four-member band has just released its third Sire album entitled "Rocket To Russia." Included on the album is the band's hit single "Sheena Is A Punk Rocker," which is the first punk rock single to break into the American charts.

The Ramones, incidentally, are considered to be the prime influence for popular British punk groups like the Sex Pistols, the Clash, and the Damned.

Besides Joey, the Ramones include Johnny Ramone on lead guitar, Dee Dee Ramone on bass, and Tommy Ramone on drums. Despite the common surname the four boys are not related. Their sound is loud, brash, fast, powerful, chunky, crushing, dissonenting, and just about any other action-oriented adjective one can think of. They are also fun.

Although their repertoire has not been announced, the Ramones will probably be selecting numbers from their new LP, including "Teenage Lobotomy," "Cretin Hop" and the best version of "Do You Wanna Dance."

Other possible tunes include "Beat On The Brat," "Loudmouth," "You're Gonna Kill That Girl" and "Now I Wanna Sniff Some Glue." Although their emphasis seems to be on drugs and violence, it should be pointed out that the Ramones are four nice boys from Queens, and are only joking.

The warm-up act for The Ramones is Willie Alexander and The Boom-Band from Boston. Although their latest single is entitled "Hit Her Wid De Axe," it should also be pointed out that they have little else in common with the Ramones.

Speaker knocks population control

By CYNTHIA HARHEN
Collegian Staff

Terming sterilization a frequently used racist and classist method of reducing the size of the world's population, Dr. Helen Rodriguez, former director of pediatrics at Albert Einstein College, New York, last night presented a speech entitled, "Who Is Behind Population Control?"

"It (sterilization) is used against the poorest and hardest working sectors, those who represent the greatest political threat to capitalist power," she said to a group of about 80 persons at the New Africa House in a brief 10-minute presentation, sponsored by the Committee to End Sterilization Abuse (CESA), the Distinguished Visitors Program, and the Third World Women's Center.

"The rationale behind wide-scaled sterilization is the myth of population control. Population is not the basic problem now. The basic problem is the distribution of food," Rodriguez explained. "The U.S. government is not about to admit this, since equal distribution of food is tantamount to talking about equal distribution of power and imperialists don't like giving up power."

Rodriguez, a native of India and member of New York CESA and the Puerto Rican Socialist Party, discussed the ways the capitalist class constantly expands its power and control through the U.S. government in order to deny more people their rights.

She cited examples of this control including the theft of land from the Native Americans, the importation of African blacks as slaves, and the exclusion of women from democratic rights.

In Puerto Rico, 37 per cent of all women of childbearing age are sterilized under programs sponsored by the U.S. government in collaboration with the local colonial government, Rodriguez said. This extends into the United States, too, where Puerto Ricans and blacks are subject to such atrocities.

In the United states, three million women of poor white working class as well as the Third World are sterilized each year. Rodriguez regards the term "voluntary sterilization" as a "bad joke". Women are often given misinformation and misconceptions about the irreversibility of the operation and are intentionally misled or coerced into the tubal ligation operation.

Rodriguez also cited vivid accounts of forced sterilization in her homeland India. She said that in terms of race and class vision, Indians, like all Third World people and poor, are portrayed as "animal-like in their inability to stop producing large numbers." She stressed that intelligent birth control is one thing, forced sterilization is something else.

Hampshire newspaper folds; editors cite lack of support

By DEBBIE WALLACE
Collegian Staff

Hampshire College will no longer have a student newspaper.

The Climax, the college's newspaper since the fall of 1971, will retire as of Nov. 17. Of the five colleges, Hampshire will be the only school without a newspaper. Amherst College has the Student, Smith the Sophian, Mount Holyoke the Choragos, and UMass the Collegian.

The three present editors, Steve Nesich, John Parnass and Penelope Koechl, said their main reason for resigning was the lack of community participation from the Hampshire students.

The editors said they felt they were running the entire paper, and the Climax couldn't represent the college community if only a few students were expending time and energy into it.

There is no established journalism department at the college. Hampshire does have a communications department, but it concentrates on theory and not journalistic writing, said David Zatzkis last year's Climax editor and Fresh Ink's current publisher.

It is possible to design an individualized program at Hampshire, but the editors said they decided not to have a major concentration in journalism.

Nesich said, "The paper is not going out of business. It will however, remain shut down until it establishes a new editorial staff. The reasons we are leaving the Climax is due to lack of support from the student body and a lack of staff to run the paper."

The editors are full-time students and couldn't continue at the pace they have been working at since the beginning of the semester. They also said they felt it was not fair to pretend the newspaper was a student body effort when the tasks were handled almost entirely by the three editors and business manager Paul Benjamin.

Koechl said there was a lot of talk among administrators, faculty, and students about the closing of the Climax. The resigning editors will talk with the administration in hope to iron out some of the difficulties the paper was witnessing. A lack of funds, and sparse office space for the Climax are some other complaints of the editors.

Koechl said, "There are some students that may be interested in running the paper in the future." But, as it stands now, and was printed in this week's last issue, the Climax will cease for sure until the end of this semester. Possibly the newspaper will not resume next semester or in the coming years.

Parnass said the work the editors were putting in was getting to be too much. He feels in order for the paper to run smoothly, it needs to be better staffed and needs a regular source of funding.

The Climax is presently funded through the student activity fee which fluctuates each year according to the number of students. The editors have always had to fight for the money to operate the paper, they said. Most college newspapers have a permanent budget, but the Climax is given a portion of the activity fee which is not sufficient enough to run a newspaper, Zatzkis explained.

Parness said, "The ending of the Climax is not a simple thing. It is connected to different aspects of the college. We didn't come to Hampshire to teach this community why we need a newspaper. I think we did the right thing."

Rumors have been spread to the effect that Fresh Ink, the new five-college newspaper, is going out of print also. Zatzkis said, "Fresh Ink is not closing. We are doing all right, and will continue with the newspaper."

When asked if Fresh Ink's coming into publication influenced the closing of the Climax, Zatzkis said, "No, not at all. Our staff is from the five colleges, and as last year's Climax editor, the number of staff for the Climax has not been this low for years."

Nesich said, "In the past, as far as staff was concerned, the Climax always had one, two or three people running the paper, and as editors we did not want this to continue. We hope some changes can be made and that other editors will be able to get the paper going in the future."

Whether the Climax will be missed or not will be answered by the student and faculty support to reinstate the newspaper, the editors said.

Misinformation distorts drug use, distribution

This article, the first of a series of three on psychoactive [mind-affecting] drugs, attempts to give an overview of drug use and distribution in the United States.

By ROB THAYER
Collegian Staff

Misinformation, confusion, and emotionally based fears pervade popular conceptions of the world of drugs in the United States.

The true nature of drug use and distribution has been seriously distorted by a history of misinformation disseminating from government agencies and a media which has just begun to catch up with one of our nation's greatest scandals.

In modern capitalist society, the availability and promotion of drugs are artificially stimulated by the drive for profit. But the variety and extent of drug use in the United States, from drugs which enhance the impulses of the brain's neura and promote "mind expansion" like LSD, to those which slow down neural impulses, like alcohol and valiums, indicates that epidemic proportions of social anxiety and tension exist in our society.

In "The Pursuit of Loneliness," Phillip Slater describes extreme levels of social anxiety-tension as the natural condition of a competitive society in its advanced technological stage.

To the degree that a particular "personality type" is simply prone to a particular form of drug use, that individual is a product of his-her environment. And in this nation, that environment includes more than a billion dollars spent annually promoting "licit" drugs, and a stream of government and media information and propoganda concerning "illicit" drugs. So the character of drug use and distribution cannot be measured in terms of "personality types," or as an example of individuals' demand simply being accommodated by commercial interests, but must be examined with the following in mind:

News Analysis

1) politically motivated information from government,

2) profit-motivated information from the manufacturers of prescription drugs and "non-drugs" like alcohol, nicotine, and caffeine,

3) law enforcement efforts which often promote use and almost always keep profits high for established syndicates,

4) a number of physicians who have become salesmen for a superficial system of cures, and

5) a modern technological society, accompanied by extreme levels of social anxiety and tension, history's greatest consumers of psychoactive drugs.

The laws of supply and demand do not always operate in the world of drugs. Sociologist Peter Park, who teaches "Drugs and Society" at UMass, states that "in a competitive economic structure, supply often precedes demand." In the case of "licit" drugs, demand is exaggerated by massive advertising and promotion efforts. According to Park, U.S. pharmaceutical companies spent just under a billion dollars on promotion in 1972 to achieve a $1.5 billion profit, an extraordinary ratio.

Meanwhile, the effect of law enforcement has been to create even higher profits on the black market. The editors of Consumer Reports, introducing their exhaustive 600-page study of Licit and Illicit Drugs, cite "a growing conviction on our part... that the illicit drug scene in the United States was rapidly becoming intolerable." That study, sponsored by the Consumers Union in 1972, describes the effects of current policy on heroin as more damaging to the user than the drug itself. There are now more heroin addicts in the United States than there have ever been.

Conservative appraisals of anxiety-tension levels in the United States in 1977 describe a population in which at least 10 per cent require some form of mental health care. And of physical ailments, the medical profession has estimated that at least 80 per cent are dependant on anxiety-tension, yet it has opposed the legalization of one of history's oldest tension relievers — marijuana.

Few are aware that the universal symbol of the medical profession, the staff with the snake coiled around it, was originally carved from a cannabis stalk more than 2,000 years ago in China, where the Emperor Shen Nung placed it in the highest class of medicines.

Some critics of the health care industry claim the resistance of the medical profession to legalization is natural because marijuana undermines its system of cures by going to the root of human illness — anxiety and tension. Others claim this has not been a policy decision, but is rather an indication of its ill-preparedness to deal with anxiety in the first place. Critics cite the failure of the medical profession in dealing with alcoholism, the nation's number one drug problem and an anxiety-related phenomena, as evidence that a superficial system of cures exists in this society.

Racism prevails, 'Sheets' yanked off Marines

SAN DIEGO [UPI] — A year-long investigation into an interracial attack has exploded the initial denial by officials that racism in the Marine Corps had nurtured a Ku Klux Klan group at Camp Pendleton.

The fact that KKK members were active, although few in number, on the sprawling Southern California base became increasingly clear as prosecution proceeded of the 14 attackers — all black Marines.

Besides prompting investigations by military authorities, the Nov. 13, 1976 incident spawned inquiries by legislators, led to punishment of the attackers and gave the KKK publicity.

Klan activities have since expanded to other fronts including recent vigilante patrols along the Mexican border. The officially unauthorized patrols seek to turn back illegal aliens crossing into the United States.

The attack a year ago occurred on a Saturday night in a barracks room where seven white Marines were drinking beer. Six were hurt. Five of them suffered wounds that included screwdriver punctures.

Consequences included charges against 14 black Marines and disclosure of the existence of an on-base KKK den of 17 Marines — the intended victims.

Public interest soared and white, black and Chicano civil rights groups demonstrated on and off the base.

At first, base authorities denied the KKK's presence, but reporters learned otherwise. The base commander Maj. Gen. Carl Hoffman, later transferred 12 of the Marine Klansmen, some of whom protested at off-base news conferences.

The black Marines, dubbed The Camp Pendleton 14 by supporters, were ordered to face courts-martial on charges that included attempted murder.

They described the attack as a "preemptive assault" arising from open and intimidating racist conduct on the base that included the wearing of sheath knives and the display of KKK posters and stickers.

Supporters of the defendants said racial tension on the base had generated cross burnings, fights, name-calling, drug use and unauthorized absences for months before the incident.

One defendant was granted immunity in return for his testimony and one was acquitted. Eleven others were convicted by trial or as a result of pleas on charges up to conspiracy and assault, and proceedings against the last of the group were still pending on the anniversary of the attack.

Penalties included fines up to $600, up to six months confinement, reduction in rank and bad conduct discharges.

Five of the victims also drew punishment — for drinking beer in the barracks.

Something to think about

By JAMES LEWIS
Black Affairs Staff

We should be aware that there is a recent uprising of the Klu Klux Klan across the country. The Klan has not decreased, but is supported by thousands, or more probably millions.

There have been reports of Klan activities disrupting an anti-Bakke rally in Los Angeles. There have been reports of Klan persons openly parading down main streets in Boston and New York. There have been Klansmen reported protesting in Florida, and even retiring to an eating place after the protest. Klan activities have been also recently reported in Wilmington, North Carolina, New Orleans, Alabama, and in Mississippi.

Commentary

The most recent is the Klan Border Watch. The leaders of the Klu Klux Klan have organized a border patrol for any Chicanos' or Mexican people trying to cross the border into the United States. They have organized almost 4,000 people to support their patrol.

I remember watching the Tomorrow show, and listening to the leader of the American Nazi party tell everybody that he has about 10 million people who silently or overtly back his movement. Does that seem like an exaggerated figure? It shouldn't.

There are many white people who are simply afraid of Third World people, who don't know much about us, and would side with such organizations. There were reports Klan operations in Amherst. They don't come out in the open and join the R.S.O. anymore, but I doubt very much if the cross-burnings at Hampshire and UMass, at the Blue Wall Disco, were pranks by drunks.

I personally remember my next door neighbor, last semester and the semester before, having an American Nazi flag in his window. I use to pull down his shade and laugh and joke with him about it all the time.

You shouldn't forget that Cecil Rhodes, founder of racist southern Africa, got along perfectly with Africans. He smiled all the time, and was most harmonious. We should think about these things.

Demonstration on Amherst Commons this Saturday

By JAMES LEWIS
Black Affairs Staff

The New Africa House Steering Committee and The Committee for the Liberation of South Africa are planning an area wide demonstration demanding an economic embargo from the U.S. in South Africa. Schools and universities over the New England area are being contacted for this and it is to be held Saturday November 19th, at 1:00 p.m. on Amherst Commons.

The demonstration was prompted by the symbolic killing of Steven Biko, and the October 19th crackdown on the non-white peoples of South Africa, killing hundreds, imprisoning hundreds, banning almost all the black organizations, and banning the two prominent black newspapers. The world has been shocked by this reaction, for other countries, black people, and even the people within had been pressuring the Voster regime to start change for dissolving aparthied.

The U.S. House of Representatives voted overwhelmingly to demand an international investigation into the death of Steven Biko. The United Nations, under the pressure of the 49 African countries, voted a military embargo on South Africa.

Protest march to be held at White House

By NKRUMAH LUMUMBA OLINGA
Black Affairs Staff

On November 24, a group of concerned people will protest in front of the White House at 10:00 a.m. The protest will be sponsored by Dick Gregory, and the National Black Student Association. We are expecting at least a couple of car loads of students from UMass, Amherst to participate. The Committee for the Liberation of Southern Africa is also supporting this demonstration in Wash., D.C. In the next issue of Black Affairs it will be known if the Student Senate will be willing to fund transportation to Wash., D.C. The Student Senate has already funded such trips for Kent State. Some of the speakers at the Demonstration will be Dick Gregory, Nkrumah L. Olinga from the UMass Southern Africa Support Committee, and speakers from the National Black Students Association. We are asking for all concerned people to give up the Jive Turkey and support this demonstration with your bodies rather than your mouths.

If The People Unite, We Will Win.

Editor's Editorial

By ANGELA THOMAS
Black Affairs Editor

The top story of yesterday's Boston Globe (but not the Collegian), was "Black group attacked in Charlestown." Today's lead off story in Black Affairs is about the Klan's activity in general, and the Marine Corps in particular.

How many times must it be said that racism is alive and kicking? Racism not only kicks but hits with golf clubs and sticks. Ask the twelve black teenagers visiting Bunker Hill from Pine Forge Academy, a Seventh Day Adventist school near Pottstown, Pennsylvania, who were attacked by several white men armed with hockey sticks and golf clubs.

If there is still doubt, travel to San Diego, California, and ask the Black Marines there, dubbed The Pendleton 14, about Klan activity.

Let us travel South (of the Canadian border) to the Mexican border and watch the Klan border patrol, very patriotically, to say the least, keeping watch against Mexicans attempting to cross the U.S. border.

Want to bring it on home? Welcome to the Pioneer Valley where Hampshire College and the University of Massachusetts hosted two cross-burnings respectively. At the University of Massachusetts, top administrators even referred to the warnings as 'pranks.'

In economic times of stress, it is not uncommon that racist elements rise to the limelight. Their hatred, whether it be based on race, religion, or national origin, apparently provides appeal for the frustrated, especially in light of present controversies such as the Bakke decision and Affirmative Action.

The black teenagers, who were attacked in Charlestown, were quoted by the Boston Globe as saying, "No one told us anything like this could happen." At the Blue Wall a few weeks ago, Third World students dancing on the dance floor were (strangely enough) also surprised and shocked to learn that someone had burned a cross outside. Many there did not even learn of this until the next day.

What will it take before people will become aware of the basic inherent underlying trait of this society?

Before racism is sincerely struggled against, I hope that it does not have to come knocking on your door, or upside your head, or, ...

What's Happening

FREE CONCERTS

Bobby Hutcherson, nationally renown Black Classical Musician will be appearing in a free concert at the University of Mass. Campus Center Auditorium on Saturday, November 19th at 8 p.m.

Hutcherson, who has done much to revive the use of the marimba and vibraphone in progressive music, has played with such greats as Archie Shepp, Hank Mobley, and Charles Tolliver. He has played in two notable big bands, Gil Fuller's orchestra and later with the Gerald Wilson's All-Star ensemble.

Hutcherson has been widely acclaimed for his fresh, free style and the use of four mallets in some of his performances has become a notable characteristic.

This concert has been part of a series of progressive Black Classical Musical entertainment, presented by the Union Program Council, an RSO group at the University of Mass.

On Friday, November 18, 1977, Charles (Majeed) Greenlee will be in concert at New Africa House, University of Massachusetts, Amherst. This concert is free of charge, in the Lumumba Hut of the New Africa House.

High Notes

Well ladies and gentlemen, it happened. We lost the Roberta Flack concert. That's putting it lightly, really, we were snubbed. There may be rumors of a conflict in her schedule and other various factors mentioned, but no matter how you roll the dice it still comes up with us losing.

There are other diversions available though that should ease the pain of this letdown somewhat. JADE, who made their debut here in a concert for the benefit of the Craeman Gethers Defense Committee will be back in the Student Union Ballroom on Nov. 20th for the same purpose; to raise funds for the Gethers Defense Fund and to highly entertain its audience. Their stop here is part of a tour in which their backing Ms. Jean Carn. Ms. Carn, a former Black Jazz stalwart who has come into the Gamble and Huff fold at Phillie Intl. came into her own beautifully this past summer with her LP Free Love. On Free Love, Ms. Carn exhibited a very smooth and sensuous style that had remained a relative secret for so long. She's "out there" now and should provide a very pleasant show backed by Jade.

Got out to the movies this weekend and saw A Piece of the Action. The flick was good and the person I went with thought it was funny and entertaining and this person never thinks anything is funny and entertaining. I thought the movie was well done and for the production team of Cosby and Poitier it's a vast improvement over Let's Do It Again, their last venture. This one's more mature and carries more of a message. In fact, I'll go one step further and say that it's much funnier than Let's Do It Again.

Time to go now, til later, keep on keepin' on. Also keep lookin' for yours truly as I'll be reviewing a couple of discs that you may definitely want to add to your collection. 'Til then, keep warm and look out for the "Hawk"!!

Sherwood Recall Election

An important election is being held this week concerning the recall of Craig Sherwood. Sherwood is one of several white students who ran on the Third World Senate ballot during senatorial elections, however, he is the only white student who has remained seated on the Third World caucus. His presence on the caucus has aroused controversy as to the definition of Third World and who can be classified as Third World student.

The most critical issue in this election is our right to define ourselves as a Third World community. We cannot allow other groups to dictate who we are because ultimately they will decide how, when and where we are active. The Office of Third World Affairs and the New Africa House Steering Committee strongly urges Third World students to register and vote on the recall of Craig Sherwood.

Registration will be held Monday, Nov. 14 and Tuesday, Nov. 15 at the Cultural Center in New Africa House and the Bilingual Collegiate Center offices in Goodell Hall. Elections will be held Thursday, Nov. 17 and Friday, Nov. 18 at the same locations. It is extremely important ot both register and vote in this election as those who are not registered cannot vote.

Poison course in offing by Entomology Dept.

By MARY WYATT
Collegian Staff

Toxicology, the study of toxic substances, will be a new course option offered by the UMass entomology department next semester.

Prof. Larry K. Cole of the department said, "Primarily, the course will concentrate on chemicals. We will emphasize the effects of chemical exposure on people and other life forms. We will also cover plant and animal life."

Cole is primarily interested in simulated model ecosystems, which are "in essence, like terrariums." Cole said, "We need a way to quickly assess more than 30,000 chemicals. Experimentation cannot be done outdoors because the environmental balance cannot be controlled. In a model ecosystem, things can be physically controlled."

An experimental course for spring semester, Entomology 590B will look at toxic substances in detail: their variable characters, their effects in environments and fate. It will explore critical concepts such as the envisage of all ecosystems, the evaluation of their responses to a given substance and the response to all substances by all ecosystems.

Cole pointed out that the growing demand for toxicologists is due to the Toxic Substance Control Act, passed Oct. 11, 1976. The act, according to Cole, "possibly one of the most important pieces of environmental legislation in our history," authorized the Environmental Protection Agency to test all new and existing chemical substances.

"I would like to point out the immediate need for toxicologists. People don't realize how few of us there are. Toxicologists are trained even beyond a Bachelor's Degree," Cole said.

He added, "Since the Toxic Substances Control Act was passed, all chemicals must have some kind of toxicological data if they are to go on the market. There is a definite demand for people in this field. I would encourage anyone interested in toxicology to follow up with this course."

stances that suppress anxiety in lieu of the resources to deal with them interpersonally and get to the root of what has caused the condition in the first place. The majority of institutionalized mental patients in the United States are given regular doses of Thorazine, a potent tranquilizer.

The medical profession may well realize that the anxiety-tension factor is central in human illness, but another anxiety-dependant industry insists that we need an array of artificial odors, whitener for our teeth, and all kinds of cosmetics in order to maintain attractiveness and appeal – even peace of mind. The impression created is that the natural mind is an anxiety-ridden one, and that the natural body is somehow in need of drastic alterations. Lacking is the recognition that mental well-being is an instrument of physical well-being. There exists a system of ideas which has separated the mind from the body.

As long as our society has a medical profession and a system of cures which includes drugs, it is essential that the distribution of drugs and the politics of that network of distribution be understood by "the recipients of health care," the "citizens." Also worthy of scrutiny are the political implications of laws which attempt to regulate what we ingest. And even if the priorities of "legitimate" drug distribution included our mental and physical well-being, something which is hardly clear, it would be important for us to understand the substances which have the immense power of altering human consciousness. In the eyes of those who monitor mass consciousness with ill-intent, the value of certain substances might be measured not in terms of well-being, but in terms of the development of thinking as a social force that could run counter to vested interests in rigid socialization.

Historically, colonial expansion has carried with it the introduction of psychoactive drugs to cultures whose drug use had previously been determined by tradition. The colonial era witnessed the spread of cocaine and tobacco by the Spanish, marijuana from Africa by the French, and the Opium Wars of the British Empire in the Far East. But the role of the Central Intelligence Agency in the establishment of heroin distribution networks stands out as the single greatest example of drug-related exploitation in the neo-colonial era.

Tomorrow's article will examine the current heroin situation in the United States, the factors which precipitated the rise of the heroin black market in the 60s, and the effectiveness of various de-toxification programs.

Program tells 'herstory' in place of his story

By TISHA KEEFE
Collegian Staff

Women's Studies

The emphasis on the male perspective in many University course offerings may now be exchanged for some "herstory," spiced with feminist theory.

The Women's Studies Program deals with this and other women-related issues by offering both their own courses and seminars, and events sponsored by the Five-College Committee on Women's Studies.

Women's Studies, an autonomous experimental program under the umbrella of the Bachelor's Degree with Individual Concentration Program (BDIC), operates out of a small office in 508 Goodell.

The program's status is currently being evaluated by the Faculty Senate Academic Matters Council's Subcommittee on Special Programs.

The program grew out of a combination of increased public awareness of the women's movement and need expressed by a small cluster of BDIC students with concentrations in Women's Studies for a separate program.

In 1973, the Subcommittee on Women's Studies (from the Faculty Subcommittee on the Status of Women), together with two staff members from Everywoman's Center, Ann Jones and Ann McCord, pulled together all pertinent information into a program proposal. In the fall of 1974 the Women's Studies Program became a separate experimental program.

The program currently has no full-time faculty. They have a "fifth of the Five-College Women's Studies faculty member," and one teaching associate.

Women's Studies has successfully encouraged other faculty to offer courses with emphasis on women. By cross listing these courses with the regular Women's Studies offerings, they have been able to virtually guarantee the courses will be filled.

"While there is a high level of interest among other faculty to teach Women's Studies courses, there is a strong possibility that were Women's Studies not around, those courses would not be offered," said Pat Murphy, teaching associate.

Within the five-college community, only UMass offers a major and a certificate in Women's Studies. However, Women's Studies courses are offered on all five campuses.

There are over 90 courses listed in the Women's Studies course offerings booklet, roughly half of which carry automatic Women's Studies credit.

For funding, Women's Studies submits an independent budget yearly and receives money from the University Special Programs budget.

To become a Women's Studies major or certificate student, one must first talk with a staff counselor to clarify the focus in their proposed program of study. Then the student must find a faculty sponsor (Women's Studies has a list of possible sponsors), prepare a written proposal, and have an interview with the Student Affairs Committee of the Women's Studies Policy Board.

Once the proposal is approved, the student must complete 36 credits towards the proposed course of study, and introductory and advanced seminars. A certificate student must complete 18 credits and the two seminars.

Energy outlook bleak for NE, speaker says

By DAVID OLMOS
Collegian Staff

New England will be using more oil in the future, will pay higher rates, and suffer substantially as a result, according to Dr. John Neely, executive director for the Center for Energy Policy, Inc. in Boston.

Neely spoke at UMass yesterday on the topic of energy policy. "The increased oil consumption is unfortunate and inevitable," he said.

Neely began his speech with a case study of electrical utilities. He explained using graphs that showed how energy consumption is rising and how it will be met in the near future. "The New England area will have to meet these needs by oil," he said.

The reason New England will be using more oil in the future, he said, is because there are no alternatives for energy until after 1982, when additional nuclear power plants will become operational. "The cheaper fuels cannot meet energy needs so the marginal consumption must be met by oil consuming plants," explained Neely, the cheaper fuels being hydroelectric, nuclear, and coal.

The present energy policy is not sufficient, according to Neely, because there still is no real policy. The closest thing to an overall energy policy in the country, he said, is President Carter's energy statement, which he said he sees as a negative policy.

New England uses more oil to produce power than any other region and is now probably using less coal than in the last 40 years, according to Neely. "And this is under a national energy policy which calls for more use of coal," he added.

Neely said he sees a definite failure of the country to develop an energy policy, especially after the Arab oil embargo brought the problem to the attention of many people for the first time. Neely said part of the problem is that "many people still don't believe there is an energy problem."

Also, the energy legislation which is passed is not always sufficient explained Neely. He gave an example of two homes he owns that are over 150 years old and have no insulation. Yet these homes would still meet present building construction standards.

The second topic of Neely's speech was concerned with the development of an energy policy which would prevent a similar situation from occurring again.

Neely cited the possibility of a grand compromise between government and the public as a start of the solution. "There needs to be more public participation as early as possible," emphasized Neely. "Local people affected by plants need to be involved earlier," he added, concerning the decision making process.

When questioned about his view of nuclear power, Neely explained he doesn't see any choice other than building nuclear power plants, but he agrees with Carter that breeder plants are probably a dangerous and uneconomical choice.

Shah visits Carter, protesters are gassed

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Bleary-eyed in wafting tear gas, President Carter greeted the shah of Iran on the White House lawn yesterday as hordes of screaming, club swinging anti-shah demonstrators brawled with police and pro-shah crowds a few hundred yards away.

The shah, his queen and Rosalynn Carter wept and gagged in the wind-carried gas police fired during the half-hour, skull-cracking battle that erupted just as the Iranian monarch arrived for a two-day visit.

White House veterans said they could not recall any comparable disruption of a White House state ceremony, not even during the Vietnam protest era.

U.S. Park Police said at least 82 persons, including 20 policemen, were injured, most with cuts and bruises not requiring hospitalization. Hospital spokesmen put the total at 75 and said one man, a shah partisan, was in serious condition with a fractured skull.

Police said 20 persons were arrested.

An estimated 7,500 to 8,000 pro and anti-shah demonstrators had gathered on both sides of the White House overnight for rallies.

The demonstrations remained peaceful, if noisy, until the visiting monarch and Empress Farah arrived by limousine at 10:30 a.m. But then the anti-shah protesters broke through police lines and the police responded with tear gas.

The gas and the noise drifted into the White House South lawn, where the president was just starting into his welcome speech. The shah recoiled as the fumes reached him, putting his hands to his face.

Through it all, Carter tried valiantly to conduct the ceremony as though nothing unusual were happening.

Standing erect, blinking back tears from the stinging fumes, he called the shah's visit "a great honor" and "a reminder of the strong ties of friendship between your country and ours."

Ironically, his prepared speech contained a line noting there are about 30,000 Iranian exchange students in the United States and saying, "this is a wonderful opportunity for us to for us to share experiences and to plan together for the future."

In his responding speech, the shah said, "we attach utmost importance to our relations with the United States ... America has always shown a very unselfish and many times very friendly attitude towards us."

With the din of the nearby fighting nearly drowning out his words, with much of his audience choking and weeping in the gas, the shah told Carter: "Thank you very much for your words of welcome."

Inside the executive mansion, Carter told his guests, with a smile, "I have already apologized to the shah for the temporary air pollution."

The shah's visit was expected to focus primarily on oil and arms sale issues, with Carter trying to persuade oil-exporting Iran to use its influence against further price hikes by petroleum exporters, and the shah seeking more ultramodern U.S. weaponry for his already well-equipped armies.

Carter later released a statement saying he had assured the shah, in their first private discussion, that the United States will continue to help Iran meet its military "security needs" and fulfill its "economic and social development programs."

The anti-shah factions — many of them Iranian exchange students wearing colored masks — bore placards and chanted slogans accusing the shah of running a brutally repressive regime in which secret police "torture" and "murder" dissidents.

The pro-shah factions, apparently swelled by visitors from around the country, carried placards reading "The Shaw is the Answer" and "Long Live the Shah."

The demonstration became unruly when a 21-gun state salute boomed out to welcome the shah. Hundreds of anti-shah protesters gathered near the Ellipse, behind the White House, charged through police lines and attacked a pro-shah group nearer the South Lawn fence, swinging long wooden staves.

Police fired one volley of tear gas, then a second, and waded in with billy clubs, tackling demonstrators and hurling them to the ground. Brawlers tossed the cannisters back at police. Someone slammed a mounted policeman's horse to its knees with a trash can. One man fell and lay still with an apparent head injury.

Begin will meet Sadat

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The United States took a messenger's role in the latest Middle East developments yesterday and welcomed the prospect of a meeting between the leaders of Egypt and Israel.

"Direct negotiations are always useful," said State Department spokesman Hodding Carter. "Our role is as courier and conduit between the parties."

Carter referred to the fact that U.S. ambassador Samuel Lewis was the go-between when Israel Prime Minister Menahem Begin issued a formal invitation to Egyptian President Anwar Sadat for a Jerusalem meeting.

Carter said the State Department was told that Lewis then transmitted Begin's invitation to the U.S. ambassador in Cairo, Herman Eilts, for delivery to Sadat. Lewis acted as courier because Israel and Egypt do not have formal diplomatic relations.

Sources said State Department officials first suspected that Sadat's offer to meet with Begin anywhere was a grandstand play and they were surprised by the quick developments that followed.

Carter said the United States first learned of Sadat's proposal when he made it public in an address to his parliament last week.

The proposal was quickly taken up by Begin and the details were further explored when CBS-TV interviewed both leaders in a show broadcast on the evening news Monday.

Boston investigates child-molesting ring

BOSTON [UPI] — The Suffolk County district attorney's office is investigating a child molestation ring operating in the Boston area, a spokesman confirmed yesterday. The ring reportedly involves youngsters from throughout New England.

"We are investigating the matter," said John T. Gaffney, first assistant district attorney. "But, as far as the details, we have no comment on that. It's a very sensitive matter."

The ring involves rape and incest of young teen-agers, Gaffney said.

He refused to discuss other aspects of the case, saying public comments would damage further investigation and prosecution of the case. He presented some information on the probe Monday to a Suffolk County grand jury.

Gaffney also declined comment on a report in Tuesday's Boston Herald American that said the ring involves children — most of them boys — between the ages of 12 and 14. The paper said the children were brought to Suffolk County from their homes in Vermont, Maine, New Hampshire, Rhode Island and western Massachusetts.

The Herald American also said the district attorney is investigating "a number of well-known people who hold professional positions" for their reputed involvement in the ring.

The paper quoted its sources as saying the ring was uncovered last June, when police found a file containing nude photos of 54 children at the home of Revere advertising salesman Richard Peluso, 37. Sources also told the paper the ring has existed for nearly two years.

Peluso was sentenced in October to a 15-to 25-year term at Walpole State Prison after pleading guilty to charges he raped three boys and assaulted two others.

Strikers at Yale yell 'scab' at leader

NEW HAVEN, Conn. [UPI] — The leader of Spain's Communists began a 10-day visit yesterday — and promptly ran into a union leader who called him a "scab" for crossing a blue collar picket line at Yale University.

"He spits in the faces of workers," strike leader Vincent Sirabella said of Santiago Carrillo, the 62-year-old secretary general of Spain's Communist Party.

Carrillo said through an interpreter at a news conference that although he agreed with the strike by Yale's 1.400 workers which began in September," I hope that it wouldn't prevent a Spanish Communist leader from coming here to speak."

Sirabella said, "I was astonished that he came. As a Communist, he ought to have some sympathy for the worldwide struggle of workers."

Sirabella refused to talk to Carrillo.

"We are not interested in talking with a Spanish scab any more than talking with an American scab," he said.

Sirabella said that he and American Communist Party leader Gus Hall sent telegrams to Carrillo asking him not to appear at Yale, but Carrillo did not contact the union until after he arrived on campus.

Earlier this month, Sen. George McGovern, Secretary of Labor Ray Marshall and former Israeli Prime Minister Golda Meir canceled plans to appear at Yale because of the picket lines.

Carrillo's appearance is the first of a western European Communist leader in the United States since the World War II. He is in the United States on a lecture tour with stops also scheduled at Harvard, and John Hopkins universities.

"In Spain, the feeling is that the American labor movement is more to the right than the Spanish Right," Carrillo said.

He said his complaint is with American labor unions — not the American worker — and said Spanish unions expressed opposition to the Vietnam War while American unions, to his knowledge, did not.

"During the last 40 years, the strikes in Spain were strikes for liberty," he said.

On other subjects, Carrillo said he does not "consider capitalism an evil or a good. Just as feudalism was replaced by capitalism, so capitalism will be replaced by socialism."

He said that in Spain, "it could be said there is an emergency situation much like that in Europe in 1945 after Fascism was broken up. It is not enough for just the forces of the left to consolidate themselves. We need a consolidation of all forces."

Court convicts man in Seabrook trial

EXETER, N.H. [UPI] — A fourth person has been sentenced to jail on criminal trespass charges as a result of last May's occupation of the Seabrook nuclear power plant.

Rodger Cole, 22, of Hampton, was convicted in Rockingham County Superior Court Tuesday and given a three month sentence in the county House of Correction.

Cole was also found guilty of contempt of court for his role in an August 1976 occupation of the site and was given another three month sentence.

The sentences were stayed when Cole said he would appeal to the New Hampshire Supreme Court.

Three other protesters have been convicted of criminal trespass charges in connection with the Seabrook occupation. All are appealing their sentence to the high court.

S. Africa destroys homes of thousands of blacks

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa [UPI] — Government bulldozers moved into position yesterday to evict and raze the ghetto homes of black men listed by the government as single although they may have wives and children. Residents have vowed to fight with "passive resistance."

At issue is a 1960s law in which the white supremacist government ruled that the black township of Alexandra, which adjoins Johannesburg's upper class white suburbs, should allow only single blacks to live there and decreed that they be housed in huge dormitories.

The law will take its course starting Wednesday with the eviction of the first of 3,000 men and the razing of their homes.

Joas Phahlane, 52, is one of the typical victims. He has lived in Alexandra since 1945. He has a wife and five children.

His house will be one of those bulldozed to the ground. His wife is being forced to move into a women's hostel and he to a men's compound miles away. There's nowhere for his children to go.

As far as the law is concerned, all blacks living in Alexandra are single. They cannot have wives or children or houses.

The 3,000 men were single years ago and eligible to live in Alexandra. But many have since married and now have families.

Some of those, like John Masela, a married father of three children, applied to change his status to married but the application became bogged down in red tape and three years later he's still on the township books as single.

Women with single permits will be housed in hostels in Alexandra, men will go to a compound for single men on the other side of town. At neither place is there provision for children.

The Rev. Dominee Sam Buti, a senior black member of the Dutch Reformed Church in the township says, "That's an explosive thing to do in the present situation. We have appealed to the authorities, but they won't even listen to us.

"We will resist the moves. There will be passive resistance."

"Now what will happen to these people's children? And their furniture?" asked Buti. "Joas Phahlane is one of the elders of my church and he's lived here more than 30 years. What will happen to him or his wife and their five children?"

Jan Bosman, spokesman for the West Rand Administration Board which administers Alexandra and other black townships such as Soweto, on Johannesburg's southwestern edge, said the board is trying to be as sympathetic as possible towards blacks with families "but all residents of Alexandra have to be single.

Juvenile prostitution from midwest to N.Y. grows

NEW YORK [UPI] — Since 1970, the number of Midwest girls lured into Times Square prostituion has increased tenfold, a Minneapolis police lieutenant said Tuesday.

Lt. Garry McGaughey said seven years ago the Minneapolis-New York prostitution pipeline used to provide 30 to 40 Midwest girls a year. Now 300 to 400 new arrivals are selling their bodies on New York City streets, he said.

McGaughey made his remarks at a hearing of the state Select Committee on Crime where a number of officials agreed that juvenile prostitution is a burgeoning problem but differed on how to stem the tide.

All it takes, McGaughey said, is a scared, young Midwest kid — perhaps with some family problems, drug involvement and a bit of sexual experience — and a smooth-talking pimp.

"The pimps are well schooled to play the distorted psyches these women have," McGaughey said. "Through her twisted values and twisted psyche she'll accept this man as her father image.

"I've known hundreds of such women and not once did they go unwillingly," said McGaughey, who came to New York last week in an unsuccessful effort to take some of the girls off the streets and back home.

McGaughey said that once in New York, the girls go to work for the pimp who brought them or else are sold to another pimp, usually for about $1,000. Their lives in New York are marked by physical and sexual brutalities at the hands of pimps determined to keep them submissive.

He said some 200 pimps are known to be involved in the pipeline but in the last six years in Minneapolis, only 35 cases were brought against pimps because the girls are reluctant to testify against them.

While witnesses at the second day of hearings at the Chamber of Commerce Building in Manhattan agreed that something had to be done about juvenile prostitution, they disagreed as to where the problem lay.

McGaughey complained that they were run through the criminal justice system with few attempts made to place them in a "sterile environment where they could be rehabilitated."

Justice Dept. says Aff. Action does not violate Title VI

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The Justice Department told the Supreme Court Tuesday "affirmative action programs" favoring minorities do not violate the 1964 Civil Rights Act's prohibitions against racial discrimination.

The department filed its court-requested "friend of the court" brief in Allan Bakke's "reverse discrimination" suit challenging a special admissions program for disadvantaged applicants to attend the University of California Medical School at Davis.

Bakke, who is white, claims he was twice denied admission on account of his race and this violated the act's Title VI, which forbids racial discrimination in any federally assisted activity.

Bakke charged the school's practice of reserving 16 of 100 student openings for blacks, Hispanics and Orientals resulted in admissions of applicants with lower qualifications than his own — solely on racial grounds.

"The act as a whole," the department argued, "was intended to deal with the discrimination against black persons then pervasive in our society."

"At the time the act was being considered, blacks often were denied the benefits of programs supported with federal funds," the brief said. "Title VI was designed to put an end to federal support of discrimination and to assure to blacks 'the right of access' to federally assisted programs."

The brief was the second the department has filed with the Supreme Court to defend the legality of taking race into consideration to correct effects of past discrimination by society at large. It said:

"We argued in our principal brief that the Constitution does not bar the medical school from taking race into account in order fairly to compare minority and non-minority applicants.

Products containing saccharin to have cancer-warning labels

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The Food and Drug Administration yesterday issued guidelines for industry compliance with legislation requiring cancer-warning labels on products containing saccharin.

The requirement is included in a bill, passed by Congress in October but not yet sent to President Carter for his expected signature, which delays for 18 months an FDA-proposed ban on use of saccharin to sweeten foods and drinks.

The FDA guidelines published in the Federal Register call for prominent display of the warning label which will read: "Use of this product may be hazardous to your health. This product contains saccharin which has been determined to cause cancer in laboratory animals."

Congress gave industry 90 days from enactment to comply with the label requirement. But the FDA notice said, "The commissioner urges manufacturers to begin placing the warning statement on the label or labeling of food containing saccharin as soon as possible."

Under the FDA guidelines, the label warning must be in the easily legible boldface type "not less than one-half of the height of the largest type appearing in the statement of identity for the food."

Oxfam-Am depends on you

The majority of the people in this world go to bed hungry every night. Though this is not news to any of us who live in one of the best-fed nations in the world, it is something we usually try to ignore. This, unfortunately, does nothing to help solve the world food problem. Oxfam-America is an international organization that is attempting to do something.

Tomorrow, Oxfam-America will be collecting meal tickets or money at the dining commons. For every meal ticket it collects, the University Food Services will donate 70 cents. This money goes toward providing small loans and grants so farmers in under-developed countries can grow their own food and become less dependent on the three big countries whose food is never donated without political reason. Oxfam-America does not solicit government funds and is thus dependent totally on your support.

We urge everyone that is able, to donate their tickets or anything they can afford tomorrow.

U.P. employee's lament

By WENDY STEARNS

"Do I want to be rich or have fun?", I ask myself as I stand behind the counter at University Pizza on a weekend night. U.P. is the Southwest pinball and munchout hang-out.

It's not that working is so bad, but I become instantly insane when crowds of stoned and overpartied people are screaming for pizza and subs at the same time. It seems endless.

The thing that really drives me crazy is the indecisiveness of the average UMie.

A typical dialogue follows:

Me — Can I help you?

Customer — I'm thinking ..... Uh, I'll have a sub.

M — What kind?

C — Let's see, what's good? I guess roast beef.

M — What would you like on it?

C — What can I have?

M — Everything would be lettuce, tomato, mayonnaise, and onions.

C — Um, uh I'll have everything except uh — wait a minute, ... no lettuce, tomato, ... oh, and please, no onions!!

M — In other words, you just want mayonnaise.

C — Yeh, that sounds good.

Customers complain that we sound like broken records. But there's only so much we can say to get an order straight. Nine times out of ten, people change their minds after ordering. With the rushes of people it's hard to keep cool.

When closing time comes people can't understand why we're in a rush to leave work.

After a long, frustrating night I often hit McManus'. It's the only place open at 3:00 a.m. I'm probably one of the few people who sympathizes with their graveyard shift workers.

Customers complain that we sound like broken records. But there's only so much we can say to get an order straight.....

I know this article sounds like a sob story for the working class student. Please don't feel too bad for me, because my misery pays off when I pick up my check every Wednesday.

Grease for squeaky wheels

By 5067872

"If you don't exploit the school we will exploit you," said the director of orientation to a room full of bewildered incoming freshmen. We had all been uneasy that summer worrying about the size of UMass and leaving behind our high school friends and with them some sense of security. But now this man was giving us an additional worry. Our education was our responsibility and the school was letting us know it right from the start. Neither he nor any other administrator from that day forth would care if we cut D block to smoke with our friends or go to the beach. As long as we paid our bills we could take advantage of the programs on campus or we could sit in our rooms for the entire semester. How ironic that what we considered freedom in high school could turn into exploitation here.

But how does one keep from being exploited? I didn't even know where the dining commons was. I did know that just about everything was offered in one course or another but because of the vast numbers of students it was not easy to find or be enrolled in them.

No student escapes the anguish of seeing "oversubscribed" on his or her pre-registration card and I was no exception. To enroll in a course once one is excluded is difficult, since one must persuade a computer, as well as all too many bureaucrats. A computer can't know or care that I've been waiting all my life to study a certain course with a famous visiting professor. No matter what friendly, cute name we call him, Oscar still calls us 5067872 and his answer is most definitely "oversubscribed." If a student does not get the courses he wants or cannot convince an administrator to help him he is not taking advantage of the school; he is being exploited. This must be the "exploitation" the man at orientation was talking about.

Tangling with the system takes time, a commodity too precious to waste on bureaucrats. Understanding the system well enough to use it for your own benefit takes time. Most students don't know what to say, or whom to say it to, until they are juniors or seniors. By then they are thinking of getting out of school and become acquiescent. Also, when students are busy with school work, they simply don't have the time to follow up on their requests and the administration takes advantage of that.

Very rarely is a complaint taken seriously the first time it is made on this campus. I waited for a doorknob to our Sylvan suite for five weeks. Our head of residence called in the complaint many times, each time being assured the doorknob was coming. He got nowhere. I decided it was time to fight fire before fire. Somehow the fire department got involved and when someone mentioned the knobless door constituted a fire hazard the knob magically appeared early that very afternoon. Need I say more?

Upperclassmen owe it to freshmen to pass down their acquired knowledge. So don't despair, there is an appropriate way to deal with bureaucracy. Everyone develops his or her own method of getting what she wants. One man I know was waiting in line for assistance with many other noisy students in the library. The room was in utter chaos. He wrote down what he wanted and passed it to the librarian and made an ASL sign for "thank you." She helped him immediately and sent him on his way. He made the sign for goodbye. This man is not deaf, just clever.

Here are some strategies that worked for me. Always try to speak to someone with the authority to help you get what you're after. If you go to a lower level bureaucrat he can only say no or send you to someone else. You rarely get a positive answer at this level. It is a good idea to know the name of the person with whom you are dealing. Then you aren't stuck when the bureaucrat across the desk says, "Who told you our office was sending your clearance card through?"

Above all, make noise. Bureaucracies pride themselves in running things smoothly. There are just so many requests the administration can get to in a school this size but if you are persistent and maybe just a little annoying they will take care of you and send you on your way. Remember, (the English Achievement Test would call it cliched) the squeaky wheel gets the grease.

Denton 'failed at responsible journalism'

To the Editor:

Excuse me while I take my brown nose out of my Organic text to write a letter to the editor. Let it be known that I intend to make no categorizations, nor make frequent use of the words "generally" and "typical." Instead my attack will be specific in its target. I don't intend to cast aspersions on all Collegian editorialists; I simply want to point out that Frank Denton, the ex-premed author of "Preemies — red eyes and brown noses," is, pre-medically speaking, an anus. His editorial of 11-14 should have been flushed rather than published.

I do realize that the editorial was an attempt at humor. The competitive atmosphere of getting into med-school is a worthy topic for satire. However, I question the existence of any humor in the statement, "With few exceptions, one might conclude that the preemy's existence is altogether vile, churlish, and despicable. It is." I conclude that Mr. Denton used to be a pre-med "twit", but has now seen the light and is in a field much more valuable to society — stereotyping various groups by writing hack editorials in the Collegian. Can we expect next week's editorial to deal with the burning issue of the "typical" business major? And perhaps the next week Mr. Denton will proceed to evacuate an editorial with remarkable insights on the "typical" Black.

I sense the "sour grapes syndrome" in Mr. Denton's editorial. He used to be an aspiring doctor, but for some reason dropped out of the competition. Now he writes as if becoming a doctor is a goal strived for only by "toadies" and "turkeys".

I first thought that the editorial must have been written by someone who failed to get into med-school. But I don't have the facts on that matter. All I know is that Mr. Denton failed at responsible journalism.

Letters Policy

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian welcomes all letters to the editor. They must be signed and include the author's address and phone number. Organizations may submit letters, but they must include a name and phone number for reference purposes.

Letters must be typed, double-spaced, at sixty spaces per line, and no more than two pages. They should be sent to the Excutive Editor, c-o the Collegian, or dropped off at the Collegian office.

All letters are subject to editing for either content or space according to the judgement of the editors. Due to space limitations, there is no guarantee that all letters received will be printed. Letters for a specific publication date must be submitted by 4:00 p.m. the day preceding that date.

Lord of the SATF's

bill sundstrom

Then Maurice pretended to be the pig and ran squealing into the center, and the hunters, circling still, pretended to beat him. As they danced, they sang.

"KILL THE PIG. CUT HER THROAT. BASH HER IN."

Ralph watched them, envious and resentful. Not till they flagged and the chant died away, did he speak.

"I'm calling an assembly."

—William Golding, Lord of the Flies

Golding's 1954 novel is a sort of pop sociology experiment in which a plane full of young boys crashes on a deserted island — their formation of a social system and "culture" is traced through to its ultimate conclusion of decadence, savagery and murder.

Now picture the fourth floor of the Student Union, where a number of young people have been located and left to their own devices. There they spend their idle (?) hours attending assemblies and ritualistic meetings. Of course, there is a basic difference between Lord of the Flies and the UMass student government — at the end of Golding's work the boys are miraculously rescued from themselves by a ship. But who is to rescue our student politicians from their own self-destructive tendencies?

Actually, it's a little inaccurate to describe student government as self-destructive — after all, the course description guide does get out every semester, the co-ops do stay in existence, and the Student Senate — well, the Senate meets faithfully every Wednesday night to map out the defense of the students' interests. Self-defeating is perhaps a better word for the consequences of factionalizing, power politicking, corruption and-or ego-tripping, depending upon who you talk to.

To be sure, the corruption and backstabbing in the SGA is hardly at the Watergate level, but it certainly exists and no one on the fourth is willing to deny it. Misuse of business phones and minor indiscretions in dealing with the local press may sound petty, but they reflect a definite lack of scruples on the parts of student politicians whom one might have hoped were ethically superior to their "real world" counterparts.

Consequently it behooves us to figure out just what the political structure of the SGA is, and why it is that open hostilities sometimes dominate and perhaps hinder the operation of the "students' advocate."

With any analysis of an unfamiliar system, the researcher runs the risk of viewing the culture from the "outside" and never learning what the real dynamics and motivations are for the group's members. This column is no exception. One student senator suggested that I spend a week on the fourth floor (where the politicians hang out) before writing this piece so that I might get a better flavor of the situation. Valuing my sanity, however, I respectfully declined, and at least my effort here will be relatively untainted by involvement in whatever ideological struggles may be present.

The traditional analysis of UMass student politics is to make a division along pro- and anti-student union lines, with an intermediate faction that can be swayed on particular issues. This is an appealing interpretation because it suggests the old liberal-conservative dichotomy, and it is also largely erroneous, since some supposed "right-wingers" have been known to declare their support of "the union," and everyone has their own definition of what a union is supposed to be anyway.

Another theory says that many of the tensions in student government result from the gradual narrowing of the power base along ideological lines toward a unified student union front. This seems an equally unlikely possibility, since the present confusion on the fourth floor indicates anything but a political focusing.

Neither would one wish totally to credit some abstract "hunger for power" with the present state of affairs, in spite of the grandiose egos that float about the S.U. Rather, UMass student politics seems to be dominated by personality conflicts and a stability of distrust — "if you won't trust me, I won't trust you." Some of the old splits on issues are still present, but one gets the distinct feeling that were the politicians less intent upon suspecting each other of "manipulation" and more willing to tackle the issues, some sort of unity of purpose might result.

As long as the present self-serving attitudes persist — and they won't be changed by structural alterations in the SGA — students will continue to be manipulated by an administration and state government that can present a much more unified front. Student politicians would be better off dropping their bogus internal power struggles and personal grudges to get down to the business of the students — creating a real union in theory and practice to confront the major issues upon which most of us agree.

Return from the twilight zone

jim paulin

If there were to be a Pulitzer Prize awarded on the UMass campus, this year it would have to go to "On The Other Hand — A Course and Teacher Evaluation Guide," published by the Academic Affairs Committee of the Student Senate, along with all the students, faculty, etc. whose participation made it possible.

In the past, completed student course evaluations vanished into the academic departments. The evaluations never again saw the light of day, and for all the authors of those evaluations knew, could have been immediately placed in the circular file (waste-basket) or disappeared into The Twilight Zone.

This past semester however, with so much public discussion focusing upon open meeting (sunshine) laws, full disclosure, investigations into the abuse of power and information by the FBI and CIA, and the evil of secrecy in general, UMass students decide to pool and publish their opinions on the quality of instruction here.

Perhaps the most interesting aspect of the Guide was the publication of the faculty's salaries. They do okay. History Professor Dean Albertson is an example; his first words to his students reportedly are "capitalism sucks." I wish it would suck $26,356.72 into my pockets. Or our socialist economics professors Bowles and Gintis, who make 26 and 23 grand annually. And this is for nine months work. You don't see those kinds of big bucks being earned by the Physical Plant workers.

Collegian Columnist Paul Yanowitch, however, begged to differ on the CATE issue. "Unfortunately," he wrote Monday 11-14, "what has emerged is the most damaging blow to student-faculty relations since Yahoo." He neglects to consider the fact that many faculty helped with the guide and almost makes me feel that I'm like the children in communist countries we used to hear about who would inform on their parents.

Actually, I think that CATE is the best thing that's happened here since Yahoo, the defunct humor magazine. There is a definite need for a humor magazine here. There certainly is no lack of subject matter. And it should be distributed with the Collegian.

I can imagine, though that some professors don't think CATE's too funny. I remember reading a memo posted in Bartlett Hall for the English department faculty concerning course evaluations which reassured them that, as I recall, "these are only student evaluations," i.e., it doesn't matter so much if they like you, what counts is if we like you. Maybe some of them are scared that we're impinging upon their academic freedom not to teach very well if they don't feel like it.

I remember reading a memo in Bartlett Hall for the English department faculty concerning course evaluations which reassured them that, as I recall, 'these are only student evaluations,' i.e., it doesn't matter so much if they like you, what counts is if we like you.

Mr. Yanowitch evidently feels that CATE lacks a "certain level of decorum and civility," and it's probably his wet dream that CATE join Yahoo in The Twilight Zone, and that we all act like bland diplomatic, cautious lawyers, and walk around in three piece suits every weekday and Sunday.

The graphics were generally amusing, sometimes hilarious, and occasionally, crudely and rudely stereotypical.

Hopefully, CATE will continue giving the faculty feedback, intravenously if necessary, and maybe the Senate will contact Rod Serling in The Twilight Zone and offer to swap Yanowitch for Yahoo.

Jim Paulin's column appears every Wednesday in the Collegian.

B'nai B'rith Hillel sponsors speaker from Hebrew University

Dov Friedlander, director of student counseling services at the Hebrew University in Jerusalem, will be speaking on Study Opportunities at Hebrew University tomorrow at 4 p.m. in Campus Center 176.

Dr. Friedlander received his doctorate in Clinical Psychology from Queen's University at Kingston, Ontario in 1965. Before 1970, he held various counseling positions including a position with the Israel Defense Forces from 1953-1956.

Since 1970, Friedlander has been the full-time director of student counseling services at the Hebrew University. He is also a lecturer in clinical counseling. He has published extensively and served on numerous projects and psychological consultations. He is presently a member of the Israeli Psychological Association.

Friedlander's task, sponsored by B'nai B'rith Hillel is free and is brought here as part of Israel Awareness Week.

Graduate Women's Program holds Resource-Social hour

The Graduate Women's Program is sponsoring a Resource-Social Hour for women graduate students tomorrow from 4 to 6 p.m. in the 6th floor lounge of Thompson Hall.

This will be an opportunity for women graduate students to learn about the services available to them on campus. Representatives from the Legal Services Office, the Community Development Center, Everywoman's Center, the Graduate Student Senate, Women's Studies, the Graduate Student Union, the University Health Services and the Ombudsman's Office will discuss the various services offered by their offices.

The Resource-Social Hour is also intended as a chance for women graduate students to meet other women working in similar fields and departments and to talk with other women about the experience of being a woman graduate student at UMass.

This is the first even sponsored this year by the Graduate Women's Program, which is funded by the Graduate Student Senate and run jointly by Everywoman's Center and the Women's Studies Program.

Ian Mettarg, landscape planner will speak in the Campus Center

Ian McHarg, internationally acclaimed landscape planner and author of "Design With Nature," will be speaking on planning the ecological landscape tomorrow at 12:20 in the Campus Center Auditorium.

McHarg is an outspoken critic of the notion that urban development must be imposed on the landscape, regardless of the ecological consequences. He is a proponent of a balanced development approach that recognizes the human race's dominion over the land and seeks to make it the earth's "Good Steward," rather than its rapist.

McHarg is founder and chairperson of the department of landscape architecture at the University of Pennsylvania, and is a partner in the office of Wallace, McHarg, Roberts, and Todd, architects, landscape architects, and city and regional planners.

The Amherst Dog Pound still has available residents

The following dogs are at the Amherst Dog Pound, (Wagner Farm, 217 North East St., 253-7294), and may be either claimed or adopted:

— Male collie mix, tan with white on chest and black tail markings, picked up on a complaint on Bridge Street.

— Male labrador mix, black with some tan in coat, picked up on a complaint at Wildwood School.

— Female shepherd puppy, tan and fuzzy, turned in from UMass.

— Female setter mix, half black and half white, a puppy picked up on a complaint on Dickenson Street, at Hampshire Veterinarian Hospital, University Drive.

Five College Board will meet at Smith College

The Five College Coordinating Board will meet tonight at 7:30 in the Common Room of Wright Hall, Smith College and invites people interested in student interaction among the five area colleges to attend.

The board has most recently established the Five College Information Phone, 545-FIVE, a daily information resource on activities at the five colleges. In the past it has established the Five College Bus System, the Five College Residential Exchange, and a freshman orientation program.

The board, which holds weekly meetings, also functions as a forum for student issues that involve more than one institution.

Tampa Bay gives ulcers

[UPI] – So you thought a game between the lowly New York Giants and the even lower Tampa Bay Buccaneers was meaningless.

"This will go down as the worst week of pressure I've ever experienced," Giants' coach John McVay said.

The Giants didn't lose, but it's hard to call their 10-0 win a victory.

"If we'd have lost it I think a lot of careers were on the line," Giants' free safety Jim Stienke said.

That's how it is every week now for Tampa Bay's opponents. The Bucs' have lost 23 straight. The Detroit Lions are feeling the pressure this week.

"It's something to really concern ourselves with," Lions' Coach Tommy Hudspeth said. "I'm sure the players feel the same way. We don't want to be the first ones to get beat by them."

At least Tampa Bay coach John McKay still is providing some funny lines.

After the loss to the Giants he said, "we couldn't score against a strong wind."

On what Tampa Bay fans expected of him: "Well, they expect of me as they expect of every coach. When you take over something, in our case an expansion team, they always say, 'You probably won't win a game' and then they laugh. And as soon as you lose the first one, they're kind of angry."

On being funny: "It's hard to be funny because I speak quickly and people down here listen slowly. Still I haven't gone over as much of a comedian and you don't have a lot to be funny about basically."

On Tampa Bay officials recently giving him a vote of confidence: "It must mean they're thinking of firing me ... I think people forget that I wasn't looking for a job. I had a good job. I kind of anticipated what would happen and I think our owner did. I think he's willing to wait. Now if I'm wrong you can call me and I'll be in Newport, Calif." ...

Bowlers roll

The UMass Bowling Teams bounced back this weekend at UConn after a poor showing in their first tri-state tournament a month ago.

The men's team turned in a steady performance despite the absence of several regular members. The men averaged a fine 179 per cent while taking fourth place overall in a field of 14 schools. Fine games were turned in by Chuck Bond (210, 203), Mike Berard (215, 201), Dave Tursky (215) and Tim Welch (204). Also turning in fine performances were Kirk Peters and Jeff Nelson.

The women's team also bowled well as shown by its third place finish. Competing for the women were Beth Schneider, Jane O'Neil, Gina McEvoy, Sue Iverssn, Jackie Cashin and Cyndi Adams.

The next tri-state tournament is Saturday at Worcester Tech where the bowlers hope to continue their marked improvement over recent weeks.

UNH buries JV gridders

By KIRK MACKEY
Collegian Staff

The UMass junior varsity football team closed out its season with a disappointing 34-0 loss to UNH Sunday at Alumni Stadium. Blessed with excellent field position from the start, UNH quickly capitalized with three touchdowns in the first half, and put the game away.

Although the loss was painful, coach Clarence Brooks went in with the plan to use as many people on his 65 man unit as possible. Every player saw action, and some of the results were very pleasing to the JV coach.

The defense, which has been the strong point all season, was like the varsity, the hard hitting group which has become its trademark. Defensive backs Jack Mula and Tony Jesi and linebacker John Allen lead the rest of the unit as strong contenders for next year's varsity positions.

Likewise on offense, QB's John Atkinson and George Scullane displayed strong performances. Running back Steve Milkiewicz and receiver Keith Lombardo also showed that those varsity positions are very much up for grabs on next year's teams.

So, in ending up with a 2-3 season, Brooks has to be disappointed with the outcome, but pleased in terms of finding out who may be key personnel for the 1978 Minuteman squad.

NUCLEAR POWER: BOON OR BOOM?

Many people have opinions on this subject, but few really have the facts to support their positions. Next term, Physics 117, Nuclear Energy, will explore nuclear energy in the overall context of our energy problems. No prerequisites, 3 credits, MWF, 10:10. For further information, consult the course description guide or contact Professor Gerald Peterson, Graduate Research Center 322, 545-2008.

Your Birthday

By Stella Wilder

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 16

Born today, you have the character traits of one capable of earning a great deal of money: determination, tenacity, joy in work, imagination, elasticity, and a genuine talent for spotting the successful enterprise. You have a kind of sixth sense that will keep you from overstepping the bounds, beyond which profit is impossible. You accept a challenge eagerly, but you never risk what is unreplaceable: health, for example, or love.

Because you do not work well alone, you would be wise to enter into a partnership which will give you the companionship and expertise of others. You like to think of yourself as highly independent, but this is idle and erroneous, and may also be dangerous, causing you disdain help you need. Listen to your own analysis of your needs, not to vacillating emotions.

You are happy with fewer material goods than many others. You enjoy life's luxuries, but do not need them. You would far rather give to others than receive from them. This is very well known, and you will have to be careful of those who might take advantage of your generosity. Though their claims may be untrue, you are likely to find them irresistible.

To find what is in store for you tomorrow, select your birthday and read the corresponding paragraph. Let your birthday star be your daily guide.

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 17

SCORPIO(Oct.23-Nov.21) - You should increase your earning power by a good bit today if you can spot the right contacts.

SAGITTARIUS(Nov.22-Dec.21) - Unless you can organize your own house emotionally, make fewer demands on another to do so.

CAPRICORN(Dec.22-Jan.19) - A good day for ordinary gain. You will be disappointed if you expect "big" things, however,

AQUARIUS(Jan.20-Feb.18) - Partake in a child's endeavor to succeed where friends have failed. Help him build character, maturity.

PISCES(Feb.19-March 20) - Don't sit back and allow others to work for you; you will receive no blame, but also no credit.

ARIES(March 21-April 19) - This is a good day to demonstrate your new-found ability to handle people with tact and authority.

TAURUS(April 20-May 20) - You will receive much praise by late today. Don't offer unnecessary explanations.

GEMINI(May 21-June 20) - Show your feelings; today is excellent for reopening communications with the young. Exert yourself.

CANCER(June 21-July 22) - A race for the finish may cause some hard feelings between you and your opposition.

LEO(July 23-Aug.22) - Invention is the way out of your difficulties today. be willing to try new methods.

VIRGO(Aug.23-Sept.22) - Be willing to take more than one step toward independence, and this could be a great day. Keep a promise.

LIBRA(Sept.23-Oct.22) - If your criticism of another's work is negative you might do well to keep your views private for now.

UMass's Mark Hodgdon

Goalie has a tough job

By JACK ATKINSON
Collegian Staff

The position of soccer goaltender is not an easy one to master. Often the goalie is like a duck in a shooting gallery, facing an average of 12 opposition shots per game.

Having to defend an area large enough for a small blimp, he must have tremendous agility and reflexes to prevent enemy goals. When his team wins, everybody congratulates the scorers; when they lose, it's usually the goaltender who gets the blame.

Which brings us to Mark Hodgdon.

Mark Hodgdon, for those who are oblivious to talent or just don't like soccer, is the starting goaltender for the UMass soccer team. This year, he hasn't had to worry about ducks in shooting galleries or losing teams, because he has nothing to do with either.

With the aid of a solid crew of defenders, Hodgdon has quietly been leading the Minutemen to their most successful season ever. Already, along with the help of Larry Aronson, Ed Niemiec, Pat Veale, Mark Vassalotti, and Mike St. Martin, Hodgdon has broken the school shutout mark of five with his sixth blanking of the season last Saturday against Providence College.

So the question arises, "How did Mark Hodgdon, of the Moorestown, N.J. Hodgdons, rise to such heights with the Minutemen this year?"

First, some background.

"First of all, I wasn't always a goalie. I started playing soccer in the sixth grade as a halfback. I wasn't as strong or as big as the others, and there were some football players on the team, so I was second string because of my size," Hodgdon said.

Second string would come to be an unfamiliar place for him over the next several years.

He switched to goaltending in the eighth grade, and it is there that the real success story begins. A starting goalie in his sophomore year in high school, Hodgdon was all-state his junior and senior years. Soon he was to receive an athletic scholarship to Penn State, and bring his talents to the Nittany Lions.

Unfortunateey, he hurt his knee, and Penn State pulled back on the scholarship. It was a low move, and one which isn't allowed any more.

Down but not out, Hodgdon instead attended Gloucester County College, and continued his string of success. Showing no ill effects of his knee injury, he made the All-Garden State team his freshman year. In his two years at Gloucester, he would make the All-East and All-American teams for junior colleges. In addition to soccer success, he also wrestled in his junior college days.

Upon leaving Gloucester, Hodgdon had the choice of three schools: UMass, University of Maryland, and Penn State. Of course, he chose UMass.

"My brother (Jim, a former UMass student and wrestler) promoted the school. Cap

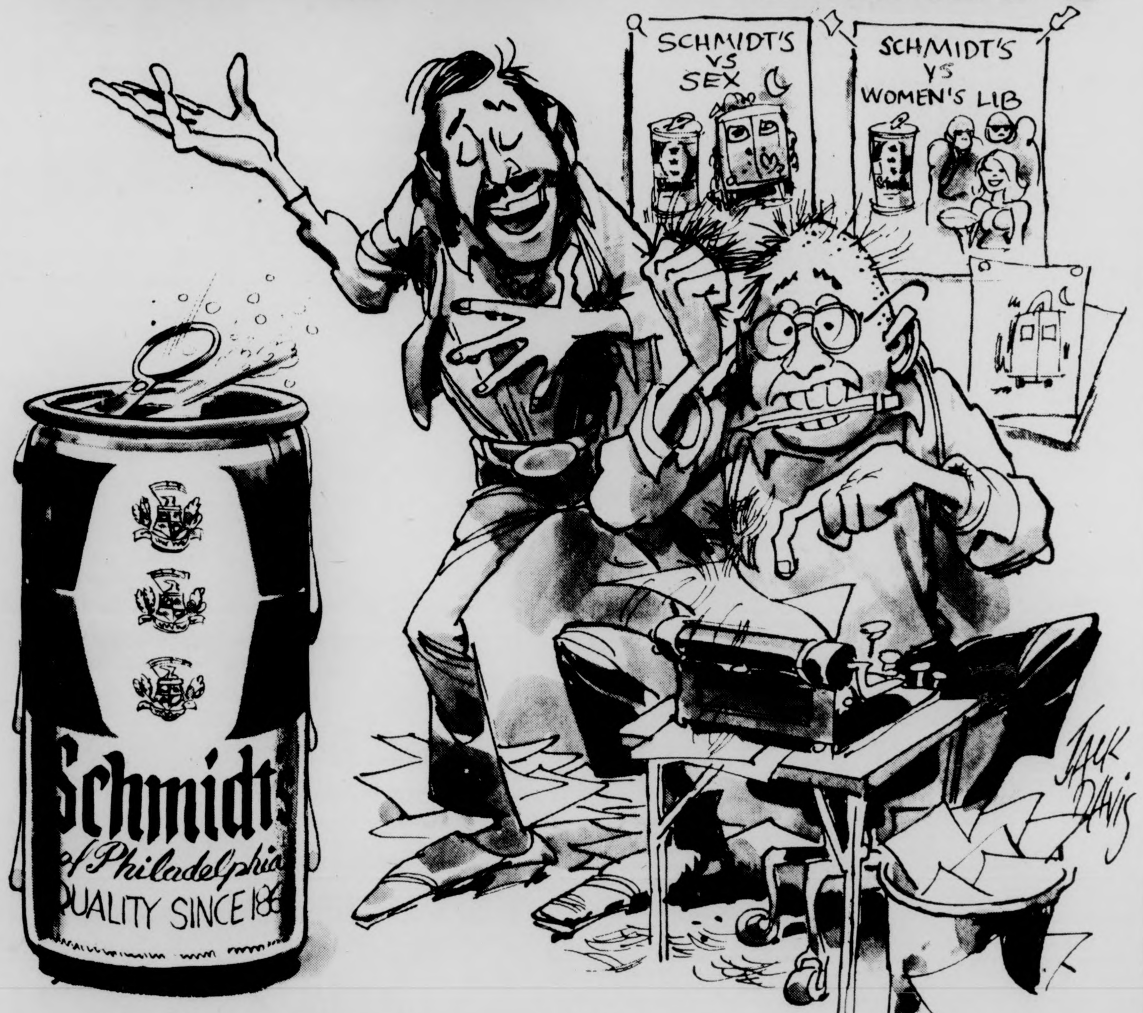
SCHMIDT'S VS. TEMPORARY INSANITY



Let's say there's something you've got to do right away (like writing this ad). And there's a person who's keeping you from doing it (like a co-worker who'd rather Bs. about his love life).

Either you can shoot, stab and hang the offending party (and take your chances with the justifiable homicide laws).

Or you can split for a Schmidt's.

What the hell, I'll write the ad later.

Neil paces subs

By KEVIN McCAFFREY
Collegian Staff

BRONX, N.Y. — Senior cross country runner Bobby Neil, suited up in a familiar red uniform for perhaps the last time, used a machine-like stride to power his way to victory in the St. John's Invitational Monday.

The race, run in the wake of UMass' jubilant triumph in the IC4A's, involved sub-varsity teams representing colleges from the Eastern United States.

The defending champion Minutemen, placing their scoring five in the top 20, tabulated 51 points en route to the runner-up trophy. Rutgers, finishing three runners in the top seven, copped the team title for the first time in the meet's three year existence.

"I know UMass has a big crowd like us," commented Rutgers coach Les Wallack, "I don't know of any deeper squads in the country. A healthy program such as theirs insures successful teams."

Bob Neil

Kevin McCusker, dropping down to the JV ranks for the first time this season, shared the lead at the halfway point of the five mile course before falling back to a third place finish.

"When I took the lead at the mile mark I felt confident," said McCusker. "To run a good race I knew I had to bust in the back woods portion of the course. When I reached the level ground I tried to stay with Neilsie but he was just too determined to win the race."

"Neilsie" is the nickname given to the shortest member of the cross country team, Bob Neil.

"That's the best I've ever felt on these hills," commented Neil. "I planned all along to take it out early with a fast pace. At about 3 ½ miles I knew I had it won. Van Cortland is more my course; the longer, the harder, the better."

Individually, 10 of the first 20 finishers belonged to either UMass or Rutgers. Stevie Hilyard, displaying a kick Coach Arnie Morse described as "animal-like" finished the race in 14th, as he went from 35th to his finishing spot in the last ½ mile. Mike Dorion, returning to early season form, crossed the line after the leaning Hilyard in 15th. Sophomore Glenn Lyle, in a tight pack of runners, finished 18th only two seconds behind freshman Dorion.

First year harriers Craig Arnold and Matt Anderson rounded out the Minutemen's top seven in impressive fashion, with 23rd and 26th places, respectively.

"Bobby ran out of his mind today," commented Morse. "His time of 25:29 is the second fastest run by any JV on this course. I'm pleased with all the performances. McCusker ran up to his potential, Lyle ran gutsy and it was a super race by Dorion."

Three years ago the IC4A committee abandoned the sub-varsity title race because of financial reasons. St. John's University, in an effort to revive the meet that determined the "best JV team in the East," picked up the tab for the trophies and medals awarded each year to the outstanding teams and individuals.

Although the meet has been renamed, Morse's forces end the 1977 season with the knowledge of being the second best sub-varsity squad in the Eastern United States.

★Hodgdon a stopper

(UMass coach Russ Kidd) did an active recruiting job. It had a good program. So I decided to come here. I've been very satisfied," he said.

In Hodgdon's first season here, 1976, he was a back-up for Marc Hanks. Hanks is one of the co-holders of the shutout record, tying it in '76. Although Hodgdon found himself in a substitute role, it was obviously an experience from which he profited greatly, judging by his present statistics.

Now we are back to 1977, and it's the most successful soccer team in UMass history. Says Hodgdon, "Team attitude, unity, and pride have been the key reasons for our success. Larry and Eddie (Aronson and Niemiec, the co-captains) have done an excellent job. It's a big disappointment that we didn't make it (to the NCAA tournament). It's been something we've set our sights on all season long. If we play the way we can, then we can win the ECAC tournament." (The Minutemen just learned of their selection to the ECAC tourney on Monday.)

Outside of soccer, Hodge, as he's referred to by his teammates, is a Hotel, Restaurant, and Travel Administration major who has maintained an average in the B range; although he does admit that socces does take a lot of time away from his school work.

Looming on the horizon is the possibility of a professional soccer career. He has upcoming tryouts with two members of the North American Soccer League: the Washington Diplomats and the Dallas Tornado, of Kyle Rote Jr. fame.

Hodge also has a hobby in which he's become involved since his arrival here. "I like to ski. I just started since I came up here. It's one of my major endeavors," he revealed.

Hodgdon, who will turn 21 later this month, has no regrets over his choice of schools.

"I think UMass has been a good choice over the others and I've enjoyed the New England area," he said.

The finest words about Mark Hodgdon come from his coach. When Kidd speaks of Hodgdon, he won't gloat over statistics. Those can be deciphered by the reader.

Kidd sums it up: "He's been everything I thought he would be. He's a hell of a kid, one of the greatest guys I've ever know. He has outstanding skills, an outstanding kid, also a good student. Never any trouble, he's always there. He's just a sweet, sweet kid."

Last weeks winner was Bruce Burnett, 26 Hayden St., Orange. Burnett picked 11 out of 12 games, and was only six points off on the UMass-UNH score.

Rough day for quarterbacks

NEW YORK [UPI] — Broken bones and other painful things plagued the quarterback position last Sunday in the National Football League.

Three quarterbacks suffered broken legs, another fractured his collarbone, a fifth sprained his ankle and a sixth bruised his shoulder. Three other players suffered serious injuries in what had to be one of the most hazardous Sundays in NFL history.

The most noted injury was Minnesota Viking quarterback Fran Tarkenton's fractured right fibula against Cincinnati. Cleveland quarterback Brian Sipe fractured his collarbone against Pittsburgh. San Diego backup quarterback Bill Munson broke his left fibula after starter James Harris severely sprained his ankle against Denver. The Steelers' Terry Bradshaw bruised his shoulder but is expected to play Sunday against Dallas.

Other serious injuries included San Francisco offensive tackle Cas Banaszek's broken right leg, Houston defensive end Elvin Bethea's broken right arm and New Orleans' defensive back Jimmy Stewart's knee injury that required surgery on Monday.

Tarkenton, who says he will return for the playoffs, received a formal apology from Gary Burley, the 262-pound Cincinnati defensive end who fell on his leg.

Tarkenton said of Burley's tackle, "it wasn't a dirty play."

Nonetheless, Burley sent this note:

"Dear Fran,

"My first season in the NFL, I was injured and out for the season. In your 17-year pro career, you have missed but one game. In my aggressive play Sunday, on a day in which you were superb, I injured you.

"Fran, I am truly sorry, for you have contributed so much to the National Football League. I wish you a speedy recovery and the best of luck in your future play.

Sincerely,
Gary Burley,
Cincinnati Bengals." ...

Gridders to host game

UM in playoffs

By JUDY VAN HANDLE
Collegian Staff

It's official.

The UMass football team yesterday received word that it has been chosen to represent the East in the NCAA Division II playoffs.

In addition, the Minutemen will be the host team for the first round playoff game. UMass will take on an opponent yet to be determined Nov. 26 at Alumni Stadium. Starting time will be 12:45 p.m.

"We're thrilled. It's beautiful," UMass coach Dick MacPherson said last night. "There's no sweeter trip we'd rather take than from Boyden down to the stadium."

The selection committee, which met yesterday, chose UMass, North Dakota State, and the University of California at Davis as participants in the fifth annual Div. II football championship. The other two schools will also host games on their campuses.

Five more teams must be selected for the eight-team tourney, which will begin at four sites on Nov. 26.

They will have been chosen by Sunday, according to NCAA regulations.

The selection of UMass came as no surprise, since it had been stated last week by an NCAA official that the winner of the UMass-New Hampshire game was a sure bet to be selected.

"The players love it. They're thrilled," MacPherson said of his team's reaction after hearing of the selection. "There's no place we'd rather be.

"In fact, we had a lousy practice today after we told the team," MacPherson continued. "We took 20 minutes out of practice to tell the team about the selection beforehand. But they were so keyed up they couldn't keep their minds on the practice."

Three of the nation's top Division II teams — South Carolina State, Nevada at Reno, and Boise State — are ineligible to compete in NCAA-sponsored post-season events. As a result, they will not be considered for the tourney.

From the East, other strong contenders for a playoff berth include Lehigh and Delaware. Should the latter win its final game of the season Saturday against powerful Colgate, the selection committee may give the Blue Hens the nod.

But if they lose, Lehigh may get a bid.

"We'll be moving into our third season," MacPherson said of the playoff spot. "Our first season was the first seven games of the season, while the last three were our second."

In their post-season appearance, the 1972 Minutemen defeated UCal-Davis, 35-14, in the Boardwalk Bowl. The win gave UMass the Division II East regional championship.

Mac's men 2nd in poll

In the final NCAA Division II poll of the season, the UMass football team has ended up second in the country.

The Minutemen garnered 56 votes to move up to second place in the final rankings. They were ranked third last week.

North Dakota State was named the top team in the nation. It earned the spot by defeating Northern Colorado, 27-3, in its last game of the season. It collected 60 votes.

ND State had been ranked second last week.

South Carolina State slipped to fourth in the final poll due to a season-ending loss to Wofford College, 39-21. The Bulldogs had been ranked first.

The University of California at Davis moved up to third from its previous eighth ranking.

1. North Dakota State (8-1-1)
2. Massachusetts (8-1)
3. UCal at Davis (9-0)
4. South Carolina State (8-1-1)
5. Boise State (8-2); Northern Arizona (8-2); Nevada at Reno (8-2)

Nevada at Reno fell from fourth to a tie for fifth as it lost its last game of the season.

Northern Arizona and Boise State also shared the fifth spot.

By MICHAEL McHUGH

The UMass Minuteman hockey team will be kicking off its 1977-78 season tonight at 8:30 against the New England College Pilgrims at Everett Arena in Concord, New Hampshire.

The Minutemen will be seeking to improve upon last year's 8-11-1 record in Division II and 8-13-1 overall. All the pucksters' opponents this year will be Division II teams, according to Sports Information Director Dick Page.

The Pilgrims are coached by first year mentor Bill Beaney, who replaced the Colby-bound Mickey Goulet. According to UMass hockey coach Jack Canniff, Beaney has been encouraged by his team's scrimmages this year, one of which pitted the Pilgrims against Division I powerhouse New Hampshire.

The Pilgrims, said Canniff, "have two outstanding goaltenders — junior Ricky St. Laurent from Lewistown, Maine and senior John Stevenson from Concord, N.H."

As far as UMass is concerned, Canniff said, "We're ready mentally, but physically we could be better-off. Bob White (right winger and newly-elected co-captain) hasn't skated yet. He's got badly strained ligaments that will only be healed by rest and optimistally speaking, he won't be ready to play until after Thanksgiving.

"We've got to stay healthy because we've got a very tough schedule ahead of us. We play nine games before the intersession and seven are on the road. If we can keep our heads above the surface in the first nine games, we'll be in a good position to play the next 11."

Canniff thinks that the line of Bill White (left wing and newly-elected co-captain), Don Murphy (center) and John Peters (right wing), "have the potential and talent to be a very productive line this year. Although Peters and White didn't have good statistical years last year, I think with Murphy in the middle they'll make a good combination. Murphy is a very talented playmaker."

"Defensively, our strength is depth. I'm going with six defensemen tomorrow night (tonight). Sophomore Jamie Benelli is a solid two-way defenseman to keep your eyes on."

Benelli will be paired with Ron Valencenti on the defensive corps. The other members are Dean Liacos paired with John Lowey and Barry Milan paired with Brian Kitteridge.

"I'm bringing three goalies to the New England game and I'm dressing Riley (John) and McCann (Paul)," concluded Canniff.

REDLINE RHETORIC — Unfortunately for the Minutemen, both goaltenders that are dressing for the New England game, Riley and McCann, are two of five seniors on the 1977-78 squad. There are five juniors, eight sophomores, and three freshmen. ... Division II has been divided-up this year into two divisions — East and West, with approximately 18 teams in each division. UMass is in the Western Division.

UMass wins 'The big one'

Injured New Hampshire tight end Bill Wharff stood by the temporary press box at Cowell Stadium Saturday afternoon.

After he finished talking with a UNH fan, Wharff grinned and said, "We'll see you in the playoffs."

But Wharff made that statement before the opening kick off. After he saw the UMass defense in action and the offense put the necessary points on the board, he must have wished that he could eat those words.

UNH is going no place. It is the 'other guys,' the UMass Minutemen, who will represent the East in the NCAA Division II playoffs.

All season long, all we ever heard about was Bill Burnham. Number 36, UNH's sure-shot All-American. The guy who gained over 100 yards in every Wildcat game this season except one. The man who was to lead UNH to another post-season berth.

Sure.

Of course, Burnham's impressive career statistics (3,692 yards gained, 21 touchdowns) could not be overlooked. And Saturday afternoon, he gained another 81 yards and scored one TD.

But when it came right down to it, when all the marbles were on the line, he was stopped.

The scenario: third quarter. UMass 6 UNH 0. The Wildcats have the ball on the Minuteman one.

Third down, Burnham into the line. Stopped cold.

Fourth down, Burnham into the line. No touchdown. No longer New Hampshire's ball.

The UMass defense had rejected him again.

End of UNH drive. End of momentum. End of the Wildcats' best chance.

UNH had finally met its match. This was no Springfield College, no Central Connecticut, no Northeastern. This was the University of Massachusetts, no easy W.

And, as it turned out, no W at all.

So much for that game, THE game, of the 1977 season will stick out in my mind ...

The first time UNH got its hands on the ball, it had a third and 10 facing it. So there goes Burnham, slicing through the left side of the line on a perfectly executed draw.

First down after the 28-yard gain.

Visions of a Burnham-dominated afternoon flickered through my mind. But then, when UNH's Billy Coleman was nailed in the backfield on the next play by Steve McInnes for a five-yard loss, those thoughts suddenly were tempered with the realization that this UMass defense wasn't going to let it happen to them.

Sure enough, Mr. Burnham settle into a routine afternoon of two-to-three yards a carry. Routine for the UMass defense, maybe, but not for Bill Burnham.

And while UNH's vaunted rushing attack was being held in check, Mike Fallon was grittilly directing the UMass offense to three scores.

The first was set up by a superbly executed bomb to Kevin Cummings on the Minutemen's second possession.

Cummings flashed the form which has made him one of UMass's top receivers by beating his man deep and hauling in the on-the-money toss to bring the ball down to the New Hampshire eight.

Billy Coleman soon busted in for the score. 6-0.

Then seconds into the fourth quarter, Hank 'The Tank' Sareault broke loose for the second touchdown. 12-0.

Six minutes later, Fallon shocked the crowd when, on a fourth and one from the UNH 21, he hit a wide-open John Romboli for the icing on the cake. 19-0.

Although Jeff Allen tried to lead the Wildcats back in late desperation drives, Dave Croasdale took care of Allen's efforts with a big, big interception.

As Cliff Pedrow was stopped on the last play of the game, the UMass faithful rushed on the field, celebrating the Beanpot's return.

UMass had won the big one.

Legal office to sue University

By JON KLEIN
Collegian Staff

The Undergraduate Student Senate last night instructed the student-funded Legal Services Offices to sue the University under the Freedom of Information Act for information in the student written course and teacher evaluations (CATE).

The Senate also after lengthy debate voted 39 to 37 to remove former Attorney General Paul Yanowitch to the Faculty Senate Academic Matters Committee (AMC).

Topics such as student towing and a dorm lease were not discussed by the senate last night because of the time taken up in the debates over CATE and Yanowitch. A 10:30 quorum call revealed that not enough Senators were in the room to continue the proceedings.

Former senate speaker Brian DeLima proposed that the senate initiate an "issues campaign" to stir up student concern over the CATE issue. Although the primary objective of the campaign is to obtain the evaluations, DeLima said he also wanted to use the issue to help promote the proposal for student unionization.

The issues campaign would not only include the LSO suit but would also attempt to pressure faculty members into making public the information; publicize how some departments have already made their CATE public; and involve other advocacy agencies like Student Organizaing Project and Student Center for Educational Research, in the issue.

"The Ramones" hit the Hatch last night, and so did the crowds. Hundreds jammed the room and stood outside the doors and windows to hear their "punk rock". (Staff photo by John Anderson)

The charges against Yanowitch were that he did not attend Student Senate Academic Affairs Committee meetings, which was part of his responsibility as AMC student representative. The two other charges were that Yanowitch "neglected to attend a crucial AMC meeting for unexcusable reasons", and that he allegedly said he was accountable to "no one".

Yanowitch said he missed only one Academic Affairs meeting. The "unexcusable reason" for Yanowitch missing the meeting stemmed from his duties as Vice Chairperson of the Academic Matters Committee.

The faculty committee sends its vice-chairperson out to buy beer, said Yanowitch. Yanowitch said he went out to buy beer about one hour before the 7:30 meeting. He claimed he was detained, and missed the 7:00 academic affairs meeting.

Yanowitch said he was "more than willing" to attend the Academic Affairs meetings. He said he resented the view which, according to Yanowitch, says "I'm their lackey who runs out to the package store, puts the beer at their feet, and says 'Whip me! Whip me!"

Yanowitch stated that he never said he was accountable to anyone. He said he was accountable to the student government association.

When asked if he always votes as the senate instructed, Yanowitch said "not necessarily". He said that during a debate he would use all information available to him, and would "vote his conscience".

Shortly after the vote, a motion was made to reconsider the Yanowitch issue. The motion passed, and a quorum was called. Not enough senators were in the meeting to continue the session, however. Some senators said they were upset that towing and the dorm lease question were not discussed during the meeting.

Earlier in the meeting, Yanowitch was also questioned about his support of the practice of requiring a deans signature to be exempted from University rhetoric requirements. Yanowitch said he supported the move in order to allow more freshman into the course, thereby relieving the backlog of courses. No decision was made on the issue.

Drowning site fence construction to begin

By JOE MAGLITTA
Collegian Staff

University officials say construction of a permanent chain link fence separating North Village apartments from a nearby swamp, site of the Oct. 30 drowning death of an infant girl, should begin next week.

Director of the Office of Resource Management, Robert C. Campbell, yesterday said the six-foot-high green fence will extend for about 1,000 feet along the west end of the university-owned housing complex.

The fence will adjoin existing fences currently running east to west along North Village property boundaries, and will close off all access to the swamp, he said.

Director of the Physical Plant, George A. Norton, said he has requested price quotations from several local contractors, and that he expects the contract will be awarded by tomorrow. Norton said construction should be completed by December first.

Public attention was first drawn to the swamp on Oct. 30, after the 20-month-old daughter of a visiting UMass researcher wandered away from her parents nearby apartment, fell into the swamp, and drowned.

Robert L. Woodbury, vice chancellor for student affairs, said yesterday labor and material costs for the new fence, previously estimated at $15,000, would come from housing trust funds; an account in which all university housing rents are placed.

"The important point is that we shouldn't be sitting around twiddling our thumbs when something like this is needed," Woodbury said.

Woodbury said the University "has made a committment" to complete the project. Funds for the construction at the 240 unit complex will probably have to be repaid by the office of residential resource management, he said.

North Village tenants, many of them parents, said yesterday they were relieved over the decision to build a permanent fence. A temporary wood snow fence was constructed two days after the drowning.

"We are overjoyed," said Paula S. Wagner, a UMass Health services employee and North Village parent presently organizing an area tenant group.

Campbell said the decision to build the fence, which will run across a narrow access road near the complex, was "a response to the tragedy." Physical plant and fire personnel will be able to pass through a gate, he said. He commended Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery for his efforts to obtain immediate funding for the project. Bromery, out of town on business yesterday, was unavailable for comment. Woodbury said yesterday the administrative system is not always able to handle "the millions of demands" placed upon it.

Stockbridge vice prexy resigns

By MARTHA KIMBALL
Collegian Staff

Stockbridge Senate vice president, Fred Thompson, unexpectedly resigned from his post, and freshman, Lindsay McMurty, was elected unopposed to fill the post at last night's meeting.

Stockbridge Senate

Senate President, Geoff Macduff, read a written resignation submitted by Thompson which asked for his resignation to be effective immediately. Thompson cited "reasons beyond his control" which he said made him unable to meet his responsibilities of vice president and Land Operations major representative. He was not present at the meeting.

Newly elected, Lindsay Mc Murty, said, "I plan to promote student recognition of the school, and its potential through the high school counseling program being instituted by the Educational Qualities committee."

Macduff announced last week's Stockbridge Alumni Phonathon raised $9,900 for the Alumni Association. He expressed hope for closer contact between the current student body and the alumni in future years.

Macduff stressed the necessity of club representatives to submit their club reports no later than Monday prior to senate meetings.

The next Senate meeting is scheduled for Nov. 30th at 8 p.m. in C.C. Rm. 168-172.

Hampshire to host journalist, author

By KELLY BROWN
Collegian Staff

Wilfred Burchett, noted war correspondent, author of numerous articles and over 25 books published in two dozen languages, will be speaking today at 3:00 in Franklin Paterson Hall in Hampshire College as part of his first U.S. speaking tour.

An Australian, Burchett began his journalistic career during the 1930's covering the China-Japan war for such authoritative publications as the London Times. He was the first Western journalist in Hiroshima after the A-bomb attack; he was stationed in North Korea throughout most of the Korean war; he met Ho Chi Minh during the battle of Dien Bien Phu; he was stationed subsequently in the USSR, Cambodia, Algeria and other countries until the early 1960's when he was the first journalist to report from the National Liberation Front base areas in South Vietnam. He was the only Western correspondent admitted to Saigon after the Provisional Revolutionary Government took over on April 30, 1975.

A prolific writer, Burchett is also the biographer of Nordom Sihanouk and Ho Chi Minh and has interviewed Chou En-lai. In more recent years, he has reported from China, reunified Vietnam, Portugal, the Middle East, Mozambique, Angola, Japan, North Korea and Laos. Today at Hampshire he will speak on Mozambique, Angola's second war of independence and the prospects for revolution in the rest of Southern Africa.

Women's Media Project recruits new members

By MOIRA CAMPBELL
Collegian Staff

Susan Terrell, Treasurer of the Women's Media Project, (WMP) is working on a multimedia project on women she calls "shopping bag ladies;" ladies who wander through the shopping malls and the streets of the cities, New York, Boston, Springfield, Greenfield, all over the Northeast. They live from shopping bags and seek warmth and sustenance from the city. Susan plans to interview these women and to visit a home set up by five nuns in New York City which serves as refuge for them. Her plans for the project include a radio broadcast interview on the "Women's Hour" program, a video tape for general use, and a taping for Cable TV Channel 3.

The WMP, still in its organizational stages, held its second meeting last night to recruit new members for the project and others that the current and new members would like to present. Six new women voiced their interest in starting or working on WMP sponsored projects.

All the new members showed interest in learning how to approach the radio media through WMP's radio program on WMUA and in other media which the WMP is willing to try.

Projects which the WMP is currently dedicated to include beginning a women's news show which they could incorporate into WMUA's evening broadcast, a women's video series, a video newsletter and a women's media conference sometime in the future.

The project, begun in 1973, gained acceptance as a recognized student organization last spring, and since then its members have been trying to synchronize their plans with a workable staff and budget. With their plans set, and an expanded staff, the project hopes to be able to solve some budget problems soon.

Project director Joan Scoville said the group is hassling with financial difficulties brought on by a temporary SGA-imposed freeze in their budget. The freeze prevents the women from starting any projects and in fact was the reason why an already started video series fell through, she said.

Once the budget is operative again, the WMP has outlined plans to sponsor women in their individual projects such as drama, poetry, or music, she concluded.

New course on cancer begins here

By BRIAN CONDRON
Collegian Staff

You are half way to victory once you begin to know and understand your enemy, and one of the biggest enemies of mankind has been cancer.

Through a new course called "Cancer: Its causes, nature and treatments," Prof. Albey Reiner of the microbiology department wants us to begin to know and understand the enemy.

Eighty to 90 per cent of all cancer is environmentally caused, for example through smoking, diet, pollution and radiation. Cancer has always been on the rise, but Reiner says he feels that "without a tremendous change in our lifestyles, we can cut cancer in half."

A major problem with the disease being environmental is that following exposure it can take 20 to 30 years to show-up in the body. In the late 1960's, cancer began to show up in factory workers who in the 1940's worked with a plastic called Vinyl Chloride, and throughout this 20-year span the use of the product was constantly increased.

That is why the Food and Drug Administration now labels elements that cause cancer. They must test a back log of 30 years of industrial chemicals that range from flame retardants to hair dyes.

A curious twist to this is that once the elements are found to be carcinogenic, the industries will still fight to keep their money making products on the market and very often they stay, defeating the purpose of cancer education.

How does cancer work? Reiner says that in a multicellular body, such as the human body, if any cell forgets that it is part of a larger body and grows on its own, that larger body is in trouble.

"If you can picture the body as a society, it has cells acting as police looking out for the deviants," he says. The cancer cell criminal is only interested in its self, the body must police this. Cancer results when the 'police' are swamped.

"Cancer," says Reiner, "is a tremendously intellectually challenging problem. Even though cancer is guaranteed to go up in the next 30 years, if we tackle it now we can hope to peak it by 1997."

Cancer: Its causes, nature and treatments, is a Micro 160 E core course that will be offered three days a week for three credits. There are no prerequisites and you don't have to be a science major to take it, just show an interest. Through it is a science course, it will focus on many social aspects of cancer.

According to Reiner, "It will be a whole different view of the disease, a consciousness raising course on the idea that cancer is basically an environmental disease."

This same course was introduced at Harvard University two years ago with an enrollment of 15. It now has an enrollment of 300.

Reiner, a molecular geneticist and winner of the Distinguished Teacher Award for 1975, says he feels well qualified to teach such a course because cancer and genetics are strongly related.

Due to an administrative problem, students pre-registering for this course must register for Micro 150 instead of Micro 160.

Corrections

The woman quoted in yesterday's page three Collegian story on sterilization and birth control was Suman Bohm, and not Dr. Helen Rodriguez. Bohm, shown in the photograph, is a member of the Northampton-Amherst Committee to End Sterilization Abuse. Also, according to figures provided by Alice Moore, another committee member, 1.3 million poor white and Third World women are sterilized every year in the U.S. As indicated in the article, Bohm criticized forced sterilization, not all forms of population control.

Universities can help energy cause

Bromery; schools must lead way

Randolph W. Bromery (Staff photo by Christopher Schmitt)

By CHRISTOPHER H. SCHMITT
Collegian Staff

SPRINGFIELD — Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery told an audience here last night universities must join in the fight against an impending energy crises, and assume a leadership role in that fight.

Bromery made his remarks as the last in a series of speakers sponsored by the Springfield Adult Education Council.

Bromery, in a prepared speech, told an audience of 100, "the modern university must assume a leadership and a cooperating role with the scientific and technical community," to work on solutions to the energy crisis.

He said present efforts to conserve energy resources and to make more efficient use of energy resources will not be sufficient to solve the energy problem.

"Infinite human expectations" for material goods must be transferred to "infinite human expectations" for non-material goods, Bromery said.

"Organized properly, the energy crisis could result in an extension of our very successful land-grant philosophy," Bromery added. "We must utilize important components of our university to join in the attack on our so-called energy crises."

Land grant universities were established beginning in 1862 under the provisions of the Morrill Land Grant Act where the federal government gave land to states to establish agricultural schools. Following establishment of the Land-Grant schools, agricultural production increased. UMass was founded as a land grant school.

Bromery said if universities delved into the energy problem the way they did into agriculture in the 1800's, the professional schools and the science faculties would be "capable of training the professional scientists needed to work on solutions to the energy crises."

He also said "we're only going to be able to achieve so much with increased efficiency" and "the most optimistic use of conventional approaches to conservation will only narrow the gap between supply and demand — it will not eliminate it."

But, Bromery said, those measures "will not solve the problem; it will merely delay the inevitable."

Bromery told how many people in the United States "are caught up in the struggle to gain the material things" that they have "lost the ability to enjoy good music, to appreciate art, to relax and enjoy the theater, to sit and meditate, and to discuss philosophical concepts."

He said in many cases "striving for material possessions" has replaced "concern for our human relations."

Following his talk, Bromery fielded questions from the audience on subjects ranging from nuclear energy to urban problems.

When asked his position on nuclear energy, Bromery paused, and said, "I better think about this one, I have 25,000 students to go back to."

Early in his speech. Bromery told of his boyhood in Maryland, growing up next to the main line of the Baltimore and Ohio and Western Railroad. He recalled how he used to walk down to the tracks with his brothers to pick up pieces of coal that fell off the passing trains.

"In those days," he said, "everyone banked their fires in their stoves and furnaces at night to conserve fuel."

Heroin addiction increasing in country

Heroin was first marketed in the United States by the Bayer pharmaceutical company in 1898 as a remedy for various ailments. But the passage of the Harrison Narcotics Act in 1914 drastically altered the nature of opiate use in the U.S. by giving rise to the heroin black market. According to the Consumers Union report on "Licit and Illicit Drugs," published in 1972, the effect of that act was to "protect the black market from the last vestiges of low-priced legal competition."

In February of 1977, almost six years after Nixon declared his "War on Drugs," the House Select Committee on Narcotics Abuse and Control estimated that between three and four million Americans used heroin occasionally. Even more startling, the panel believed that the number of addicts had doubled to about 800,000 since 1973. It was in that year that Dr. Robert DuPont, chief of Nixon's Special White House Action Office on Drug Abuse, predicted that "In a few years, drug addiction will be down to pre-1965 levels of under 55,000 addicts."

In Newark, New Jersey, one-third of adult males under the age of 25 are currently addicted to heroin. According to official estimates, heroin cost the city almost one-and-a-half times the annual municipal budget in 1976.

Only recently have the myths surrounding the true source of U.S. street heroin begun to be dispelled. In his State of the World address in 1972, President Nixon announced that "we have worked closely with a number of governments, particularly Turkey, France, and Mexico, to try to stop the illicit production and smuggling of narcotics." But the world did not realize that, as he spoke, the vast majority of heroin on the U.S. black market came not from those countries, but from the "Golden Triangle of Laos, Burma, and Thailand.

Figures on the dramatic increase in addiction which occurred both in the U.S. and in Europe in the 1960's reveal a close parallel to the increased U.S. military presence in Indo-China. According to Frank Browning and Banning Garret in "The CIA and the New Opium War," "the international traffic in opium has expanded in lock step with the expanding U.S. military presence there."

But the role of the U.S. military presence in Indo-China was not limited to toleration of organized crime. In Laos, according to Browning and Garret, "opium was the economic cement binding all the parties together much more closely than anti-communism could." The authors describe the process by which the Meo tribesmen, principal growers of Laotian opium, were motivated to fight the Pathet Lao guerrillas, in part, because it guaranteed transport of their product aboard United States and Royal Lao aircraft.

While the inter-relationship of war and narcotics in Indo-China has never been detailed by the news media, the allegations of these authors have been substantiated by a number of authors in books and magazines. Alfred McCoy, in "The Politics of Heroin in Southeast Asia," highlights the cooperative relationship between the CIA and organized crime in the establishment of "air logistics for the opium trade" during the Vietnam era.

Available documentation of the role of official government agencies in the facilitation of narcotics distribution is limited to the Vietnam War era. But the "Golden Triangle" is still the principle source of U.S. black market heroin. Recognizing that a primary motivation of the U.S. presence in Vietnam was the maintenance of an economic order conducive to corporate interests, and recognizing that opium, according to U.N. figures, is a bastion of U.S. commerce, it should hardly be surprising that, for a time, war and opium were inseperable in that part of the world.

Not only was the opium trade an economic windfall for U.S. interests in Indo-China, use of the drug itself was deemed compatible with maintaining an effective military force by many in an official capacity.

Estimates of the number of users among U.S. ground troops ranged as high as thirty-five percent, and as many as fifteen percent were addicted. Incredibly, new recruits received extensive warnings on marijuana use before being sent over to fight and very little on heroin.

The United States is no longer waging war in Indo-China, but the heroin that war brought home remains. The nature of the heroin black market has not changed.

Tomorrow's article will examine the effectiveness of various detoxification procedures, the current status of marijuana and its medical applications, concluding with a synopsis of drug use and distribution as it exists today in the United States.

Court rejects Third World member definition

By ROSEMARY CONWAY
Collegian Staff

The Student Judiciary last night unanimously rejected the Undergraduate Student Senate's definition of the Third World constituency for student government elections.

A Third World spokesperson said after the decision they will "definitely appeal."

The decision came after the three-member judiciary deliberated for 90 minutes over testimony heard in a 45 minute session.

Student Attorney General Jeff Lutsky defended the senate motion; Advocate Louis Capponi represented Craig Sherwood, who filed the complaint against the motion.

The motion describing the Third World constituency was passed by the senate in October after three whites had been elected on the Third World ballot in a recent senate election. Two of the whites resigned before being sworn in as senators, but the third, Sherwood, remained a senator until he resigned last night.

Although he filed the compalint against the motion, Sherwood did not attend the session and could not be reached for comment. He was reportedly in Boston.

The senate motion declared "void" by the judiciary reads "Third World people are African-Americans, Asian-Americans, Latinos, Native-American and Chicano peoples, and other people of color" in the United States who suffer "political, economic and cultural exploitation."

The judiciary decision said while believing there should be a definition of the UMass Third World community, it found the senate definition in violation of the Student Government Association constitution.

"It is not the job of this court to redefine the present definition but only to review for legality and conflict with the SGA constitution," the finding read.

The three members of the judiciary, Joseph D. Levens, Lee A. Radwill and Donna E. Cohen will not hear the possible appeal.

Lutsky said he will appeal the case on "miscarriage of justice." Capponi, saying he is pleased with the decision, said he will prosecute again.

"As of now, Lutsky said following the decision, "the (Third World) constituency is anyone and everyone. It is undefined."

Capponi during the hearing said the senate definition does not include needs of other minority groups.

"Why should people of color be represented specially over other minorities?" he asked. "Eliminating some instances of racism and not others is a step sideways and not forward."

Lutsky said the Third World community have "vastly different" needs than those of the white majority on campus.

"The Third World community cannot depend upon the traditional form of getting into the senate," he said.

Joan Baez

Folk singer Joan Baez, who refused to come to Spain as long as it was a dictatorship, appeared on national television Tuesday night and dedicated a song to Communist Dolores Ibarruri, "La Pasionaria" of the Spanish civil war.

Baez was featured on the most popular entertainment program of the government-controlled television network.

The song she dedicated to the 82-year-old president of the Spanish Communist Party was "No Nos Moveran" (We shall not be moved), which was popular with republican troops who fought Generalissimo Francisco Franco's right-wing rebels during the civil war.

In a news conference, Baez said she refused to visit Spain during Franco's authoritarian rule because "I could not have said nor sung what I wanted."

Warren Burger

Chief Justice Warren Burger, trying to work through a pile of legal briefs from a hospital bed, has received an expensive bottle of wine and a fifth of Scotch to make his hospital stay more bearable.

"Someone sent me a bottle of Chateau Lafite 1966, Baron Rothschild's best wine," the chief justice told a well-wisher Wednesday. "That's worth staying in the hospital a week."

Another friend sent Scotch not realizing Burger doesn't drink it.

"I just blew my old back again," Burger told a friend. "If you sneeze the wrong way, you can blow it out."

The chief justice is in traction at Arlington Hospital and receiving physiotherapy. He has had back trouble virtually all his life.

Andrew Young

American U.N. Ambassador Andrew Young arrived Tuesday for a four-day visit on an invitation offered in June after Young had described Swedes as rascist.

At an airport news conference Young said he was looking forward to his meetings with foreign ministry officials for discussions on such topics as development aid and southern Africa.

Olga Korbut

Olga Korbut, who won the hearts of millions of television viewers with her dazzling gynastic performances in the 1972 Munich Olympics, is suffering from an "acute attack of influenza" at her home in the Soviet Union and will not accompany the Russian gym team on its exhibition tour.

A spokeswoman for the Forum in Inglewood, where Miss Korbut was to perform Sunday, issued a brief statement which said the Soviet men's and women's gymnastic teams will appear as scheduled at the Anaheim Convention Center Saturday and the Forum Sunday.

Juan Carlos

King Juan Carlos of Spain said Wednesday his country can bring centuries of experience and a new drive to the European Common Market.

In an apparent appeal for support for Spain's bid to enter the European Economic Community, Juan Carlos said his country's contribution could be "1,000 years' experience and a new drive which may be also necessary to complete the picture ...of what this new Europe can and should be."

Norman Mailer

A six-member federal jury Wednesday deliberated in a $1 million libel suit pressed by a local prizefighter against writer Norman Mailer and Playboy Magazine.

Former heavyweight fighter Elmo Henderson, 42, claimed he suffered mental anguish as the result of a Mailer article, entitled "The Fight," which appeared in the May 1975 issue of Playboy and identified him as a former patient of a Nevada mental hospital.

Playboy admitted the statement was in error and apologized in its August 1975 issue.

Mailer was writing about the 1974 Muhammad Ali-George Foreman fight in Zaire. Henderson was a sparring partner for Foreman when he trained for the fight.

Mailer testified during the three-day trial that Terry Lee, another Foreman sparring partner, told him that Henderson had been in the mental insitution.

Gerald Arpino.....

Talking to Gerald Arpino is like talking to a friend. The words come naturally, and there is no pretentiousness. Only Gerald Arpino has the distinction of being one of the world's most respected artists, associate director, teacher, and chief choreographer of the Joffrey Ballet.

Arpino recently spoke of the changing trends in student attitudes, from the 60's to now. In the late 60's he spent 3 years teaching at Berkeley College, and it was from there he developed his keen interest in young people.

He said "students in the 60's were very much into dance-it was like as an answer to many of their searchings. The students now are more discerning. They respond to life more organically and openly. They really turn me on!"

The process of starting and financing a ballet company was a difficult one, and Arpino recalled "Just to pay for lessons I had to work as a bank clerk, teacher, and waiter! I've always had to work very hard to make it possible to give a concert. Although the company is called the "Joffrey" Ballet, it is really the product of Joffrey and Arpino. I was the builder, and always have been."

Gerald Arpino has danced for 15 of the 21 years that the Joffrey has performed. Those were the times when dancers not only danced, but also put down their floor, set lights, and did just about everything in preparation for a performance.

However, times have changed, and now the company is without those demands.

Several of Arpino's ballets reflect a new awareness of the male role in the dance. He said. "You must realize, for a male to dance, he usually starts training later than a girl. Many times he gets no support, and it's also very expensive. I, per say, Gerald Arpino have done much to project a change in attitude to the male dancer. I've worked with a point of view to liberate the male in dance."

The ratio of men to women in the Joffrey company is 1 to 10, Arpino explained it is harder in this country to get male dancers, due to the family structure, and society's values. Unlike countries such as Russia and Denmark, where ballet reigns supreme, America does not have state run schools.

Arpino discussed women in the dance, stating "Today it has become necessary to get an early start in training. Because the goals of a dancer are so demanding, it's important for a girl to begin lessons at 8 to 10 years old. It's easier only for a man to start later. However, the woman outlives the man in dance."

Arpino described the Joffrey as reflecting a whole new way of ballet theater. During its 40 week season of touring, the company performs what is characteristic of the Joffrey repertoire — variety.

In describing his source of inspiration, Arpino said "My whole life is dedicated to the creative process. I'm constantly observing and I'm always aware of what's happening in my country. I'm very American and place-orientated. I'm different from other choreographers. I don't know what they're weaknesses are, or their strengths.

They think of themselves. I think of the country's resources, and how it will promote a strength in the dance."

Bernard Bell

The scholarly study of Afro-American literature in the United States has been hampered in the past by the lack of detailed biographical information on black authors.

But the future for Afro-American scholars finally is beginning to look brighter, according to Bernard Bell, a professor of English at UMass.

Bell's optimism is based on the results of a conference of literary scholars, both black and white, which met recently in Durham, N.C. At the conference, sponsored by the University of North Carolina and the National Endowment for the Arts, he said, a long-term project to develop extensive biographical material on black authors was planned by academics from all over the nation.

Robert Stern

UMass music professor won an award from the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers in recognition of his performances and compositions.

Robert Stern, a professor in the University Department of Music and Dance since 1964, received an award of $500 from the society. Stern specializes in musical composition.

John Conway

Professor John Conway has been appointed Five-College Professor of Canadian Studies at UMass under a grant from the William H. Donner Foundation. The $77,500 Donner Foundation grant will fund a program of study in all facets of Canadian history, culture, government, and literature under the guidance of Conway, a distinguished professor of history and advisor to the Canadian government.

Justice dept. checks protests about Iran

[Compiled from Wire Services]

The Justice Department is checking the financing of bloody demonstrations near the White House by supporters and foes of the Shah of Iran to determine if the sponsors violated federal law, a spokesman said yesterday.

Joel Lisker, head of the Justice Department's registration unit, said in an interview:

"If we detect violations of the Foreign Agents Registration Act, we'll recommend appropriate action."

Meanwhile, President Carter and the Shah of Iran concluded two days of talks as police tightened security around the White House and demonstrators massed for protests in other areas of the city.

A heavy contingent of police stood by at the executive mansion to prevent any recurrence there of large-scale violence between pro-and anti-shah demonstrators such as occurred Tuesday. Those clashes left 124 persons injured and 12 persons under arrest.

By mid-day yesterday, police reported three arrests for disorderly conduct resulting from minor scuffles.

Hundreds of demonstrators, most of them opponents of the shah's regime, gathered near Embassy Row and on Capitol Hill to stage protests at two functions the shah was scheduled to attend before leaving Washington.

Some of the several hundred pro-shah demonstrators who turned out allegedly received up to $100 spending money, and free travel and lodging during the two days of marches.

Justice Department officials said it would be difficult to prosecute the demonstrators under the registration act because the "influence on public opinion" of their individual actions would be questionable — although the larger groups might have an impact.

The target of any department review will be the "middle men" who might have passed money or paid expenses for the demonstrators while trying to conceal their relationships with the Iranian government or anti-shah factions by holding jobs such as consultants, the sources said.

If money was passed to demonstrators directly from the Iranian government through its Washington embassy, however, the Iranian officials involved might be protected by diplomatic immunity, department officials said.

Lisker said if organizers of the anti-shah rallies represented political factions in Iran or neighboring countries, they also could be subject to the registration law.

FDA asked to reclassify pot

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The Food and Drug Administration was asked yesterday to endorse the use of marijuana for a number of medical research purposes, including treatment of cancer patients.

At a hearing in suburban Rockville, Md., leaders of the National Organization for the Reform of Marijuana Laws asked an FDA advisory committee of scientists to urge reclassification of marijuana from the strictest category of the Controlled Substances Act.

The advisory panel made no decision and scheduled another meeting on the subject in two months.

Currently, marijuana is categorized as having no known or accepted medical uses in the United States and of posing a high potential for abuse among its users.

In a five-year court battle, NORML has attempted to force the Drug Enforcement Administration to reclassify marijuana to permit its medical use for treatment of glaucoma, of nausea for cancer patients receiving chemotherapy and of asthma.

If the drug is reclassified, the FDA could approve wideranging projects to research its medical utility. In instances where marijuana was found effective, the FDA would then presumably approve it for use with a doctor's prescription.

Peter Meyers, NORML's chief counsel, told the FDA panel:

"The continued classification of marijuana in Schedule I the strictest category will deprive hundreds, and perhaps thousands of persons of legal access to a drug which could relieve their suffering, and will continue to inhibit scientific and medical research into marijuana."

He said marijuana is being explored as a treatment for epileptics, alcoholics and as an anti-depressant. White House adviser Peter Bourne said recently marijuana also might be of use as a pain killer.

One witness, Robert Randall, Washington, is losing his sight because of glaucoma and has received federal court approval to smoke government-supplied marijuana to slow his blindness. The government is sponsoring a Howard University research project to determine its effectiveness in treating others with glaucoma.

The DEA has final authority for classifying marijuana. The U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia agreed the agency has authority to control under an international treaty the United States signed with about 100 countries.

But the appeals court suggested marijuana and its components — such as its leaves and juices — could be rescheduled to permit medical uses.

South Africa speech tonight

Bheki Langa will speak on "The Crisis in South Africa — Origins and Prospects" at 8 p.m. on Thursday, Nov. 17, in the South Lounge of Prince House, Southwest Area.

Langa appears as part of the continuing Master-Director's Series.

Langa will give a broad historical context for the current tragic events in South Africa and will identify likely future developments in the crisis. He was born in South Africa and has been active with student organizations and liberation movements since 1961. He was exiled to Swaziland in 1963. He worked in Guyana from 1970 to 1973 as an economist and teacher. Since 1973 Mr. Langa has been a graduate student at UMass, and an organizer with South African liberation groups.

Sadat confers on Israel trip with Syria

DAMASCUS, Syria [AP] — Egyptian President Anwar Sadat huddled yesterday with Syrian President Hafez Assad, seeking the backing of his skeptical ally for his proposed visit to Israel.

Informed diplomatic and Syrian sources said they believed the Egyptian president was trying to allay Assad's fears that Sadat would make private deals on the first-ever visit of an Arab leader to Israel.

Sadat was likely to tell Assad that any trip to Israel is "meant to change the Israeli mentality about Arab intentions, and to show the world who is serious about peace and who is not," one Arab diplomat said.

Charlestown tourists go to grand jury

BOSTON [AP] — A group of pacifist black tourists were called before a Suffolk County Grand Jury yesterday to describe an attack on them by club-swinging whites at the Bunker Hill Monument.

Suffolk County Prosecutor Lloyd MacDonald said no indictments have been returned against the three men charged in the Monday attack. He said the completion of testimony may take several days.

Califano criticizes U.S. health system

LONDON [AP] — Joseph C. Califano, Jr. said today the biggest obstacle to a national health system in the United States is money and he called U.S. hospitals "incredibly obese and profligate."

The U.S. Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare met with reporters after a three-day visit to study Britain's state-run National Health Service.

He said U.S. hospital costs are doubling every five years — increasing 2½-times faster than living costs — and inflation in hospital costs is rising at $1 million an hour.

Idi Amin's angels track Ugandans

Her Say News Service — The London Sunday Times said the latest world leader to get into the cloak and dagger game is none other than Uganda's President Idi Amin.

The Times said to keep tabs on dissident Ugandans outside his country's borders, Amin has set up an all-female spy network.

Sixty highly-trained women — at least six in New York alone — are observing the movements of Ugandans away from home, said The Times.

Favoring minorities allowed, said Court

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The University of California is telling the Supreme Court, regarding the Allan Bakke "reverse discrimination case," that Congress has approved voluntary programs favoring minorities even if there is no earlier discrimination to correct.

In carrying out the 1964 ban against discrimination in federally assisted programs, government regulations specifically permit consideration of race "even in the absence of prior discrimination," Donald Reidhaar, the university's general counsel, said yesterday.

R. Catholic bishops stand on taboos

WASHINGTON [AP] — Roman Catholic bishops yesterday condemned a report that urges an easing of religious rules on sex and concludes church taboos such as adultery, pre-marital sex, homosexuality and masterbation can be condoned in some circumstances.

Divestiture can be a valuable tool

By KELLEY BROWN

Directions: choose the one best answer. The question is "Why should college students demand that their school sell stock it owns in U.S. corporations that do business in South Africa?"

A) Because colleges professing humanitarian ideals should not share in the super-profits made at the expense of blacks in S. Africa.

'How little we really own, Tom, when you consider all there is to own.'

B) They shouldn't unless it can be shown that the corporations which the school holds stocks in are committing specifically discriminatory acts.

C) They shouldn't, because a college exerts more influence by voting its shares for resolutions against investment inside the company than by selling its stock.

D) They shouldn't because corporate business in S. Africa is beneficial to blacks in S. Africa.

E) They should because the over $1.5 billion in direct U.S. investments, along with the other Western investments, are the key props in the reproduction of the system of forced labor and racism known as apartheid. The selling of stock has an immediate political effect and an eventual economic one.

To answer our question, we must first articulate our position on the apartheid system in S. Africa. If students genuinely oppose apartheid and support majority rule, they must develop a strategy that corresponds to real and not imagined needs of the struggling black majority. The leaders of the national liberation movement in S. Africa have spoken clearly and succinctly on the issue of Western investment. They have stated that Western investment should be withdrawn until a government of the majority decides to invite them to return. This position has been put forward by every major organization in S. Africa, including the African National Congress, the Pan-African Congress, and the recently banned South African Students Organization.

In a UN Security Council meeting of Nov. 4, a representative of the ANC-SA was highly critical of the U.S.-led Western veto of economic sanctions against S. Africa. He stated:

> The three triple vetoes confirmed in the clearest terms that whatever the Western powers pretend to be doing in support of our struggle is calculated in terms of pounds, dollars, francs and Deutschmarks and not based on principles. Our people have once again been told that economic sanctions and the withdrawal of investments would harm the economies of the Western countries...
> We are in a war situation. We may be excused if we use as our criteria for judging friends or foes what people do either to strengthen our striking power against the enemy or to strengthen the enemy's striking power.

As U.S. investment has gone up over 500 per cent since 1960, repression has only deepened for S. African blacks. After the June, 1976, Soweto rebellion, a consortium of N.Y. and Boston banks gave large loans to S. Africa and began marketing the Kruggerand gold coin, a major source of foreign exchange for S. Africa. What has this aid to the S. African economy meant to the black majority? It put the government in a position to ban virtually every black organization and to imprison, murder and ban thousands of black leaders.

On the face of this, it would seem that a rather tortured logic would be needed to uphold answer (D), above. In fact, this is still the argument of our government, and a little closer at hand, it is the argument of the Amherst College trustees to the modest proposal of Amherst students to vote for withdrawal inside corporations for two years, and when that fails, to sell the stock.

This question of "which strategy" is not an abstraction for those concerned about S. Africa, because students and administrations have taken definite positions on our little quiz. Smith College has sold nearly $700,000 of stock for reason (B), above. Mt. Holyoke student government has diluted last years total divestment demand to include only those corporations which have not acted "responsibly" in any divesting action.

The problem with answer (B) strategies is that the question of corporate involvement cannot be posed at the level of the individual firm. It does not matter whether a corporation is acting "responsibly" or not because the contribution corporations make to the maintenance of apartheid takes place at a structural level. The taxes, the repatriated profits, the goods and services provided, the economic and political credibility that these banks and corporations lend to S. African system are the key factors, not discrimination by individual firms. Besides, can we take seriously claims by corporations of "equal employment opportunity practices" in a land where inequality is the national creed and where laws enforcing inequality exist in every sphere of life?

Answer (C) is only acceptable as part of a long term strategy, as at Amherst College. It must be recognized that these share-holder votes for withdrawal are both practical and political failures. The votes in Texaco and other corporations have gone about 99 to 1, because big share-holders find the very high profit rate obtained in S. Africa a little too juicy to pass up. Also, next to no one ever hears about such votes so it only goes to relieve guilt, not to produce effects.

Answer (A) is right, but somewhat shortsighted. Selling stocks to wash one's hands of "dirty" profits only passes them on to someone else. As you probably have guessed, answer (E) is the best answer. If students are sincere in their opposition to apartheid, they must employ a strategy which puts increasing political pressure on corporations to withdraw from S. Africa and on the government to support an economic embargo of S. Africa. Only this strategy corresponds to the stated needs of the S. African black liberation movement. The movement for divestiture politically and forcefully targets these twin supporters of apartheid. This movement is the first since the Vietnam war to mobilize so many students to oppose corporate and government foreign policy. It has already received wide publicity (see Boston Globe, Nov. 13, pg. 1) and it has only just begun.

Divestiture is one of the most valuable tools the movement to oppose apartheid has. It is a way of mobilizing mass pressure on corporations that no current alternative offers. Students must help to lead this fight to knock away this crucial crutch of investment from the apartheid regime in S. Africa.

Justice in America

By TOM DEVINE

Three recent events have had me thinking a little bit about what it means to be a law-abiding citizen in America today. These events — the deal made by the Justice Department in the perjury trial of former CIA Director Richard Helms, the recent furlough of former UMass student Craeman Gethers and the circumstances surrounding the cancelled Yippie Smoke-In in Amherst — provide much food for thought.

In the first case we have Richard Helms, former Director of the CIA, who through a deal worked out by the Justice Department (with President Carter's approval) managed to escape a jail sentence for lying to a Congressional Committee. The excuse given by the government for this negation of justice was that it was feared that, in a trial where Helms could face a prison sentence, he might feel compelled to start blabbing national security secrets in the course of his defense. He only iied in the first place, Helms claimed, in order to protect the national interest.

Unfortunately, the facts tell a different story. First of all we can't forget that Helms first lied when testifying before a committee investigating his fitness to serve as an Ambassador. The later lies he told before other committees were necessary to keep his story straight. Therefore he lied not to protect national security as he claimed, but rather to protect his nomination for Ambassador to Iran. Not even our Congress, dim-witted though it may be, would have confirmed Helms for the job had he told them the truth about the CIA's activities in Chile, as he was asked to do.

Truth Justice and the American Way.

Secondly, what reason do we have to believe the government when it tells us that there was absolutely no way that Helms could be placed on trial? When you consider the extremes that have been gone to in the past to insure trials for American dissidents (the Chicago 7 for example) you wonder why such extremes were not employed in Mr. Helms' behalf. Couldn't any testimony dealing with security matters have been given behind closed doors? Besides, the question was not whether Helms was involved in some dirty dealings in Chile (as later information revealed he was). The question was, did Richard Helms lie to save his Ambassador to Iran. Not even our Congress, dim-witted though it may be, would have confirmed Helms for the job had he told them the truth about the CIA's activities in Chile, as he was asked to do.

Secondly, what reason do we have to believe the government when it tells us that there was absolutely no way that Halms could be placed on trial? When you consider the extremes that have been gone to in the past to insure trials for American dissidents (the Chicago 7 for example) you wonder why such extremes that have been gone to in the past to insure trials for American dissidents (the Chicago 7 for example) you wonder why such extremes were not employed in Mr. Helms' behalf. Couldn't any testimony dealing with security matters have been given behind closed doors? Besides, the question was not whether Helms was involved in some dirty dealings in Chile (as later information revealed he was). The question was, did Richard Helms lie to save his Ambassadorship in Iran? To those charges he pleaded no contest (read: guilty), yet walked out of court a free man. Adding insult to injury, the taxpayers were forced to pay for Helms' legal expenses.

Unfortunately, others who have been found guilty of far lesser crimes than Mr. Helms have not been so lucky. Take for example the case of Craeman Gethers, a UMass student who was convicted of robbing an area McDonald's restaurant. Mr. Gethers is still in jail for that robbery, and although there were peculiar circumstances surrounding his conviction, it appears he will remain in jail for some time to come. Both Gethers and his alleged accomplice in the crime, Earl Jones, insist they were innocent. If that's true then they wouldn't be the first to serve time for a crime they didn't commit. But whether they are guilty or not is irrelevant. Mr. Gethers is in an iron cage, while Mr. Helms is free to sip cocktails at Washington luncheons. What has it come to in this country when it's more of a crime to rob McDonald's than to betray a public trust?

Finally there is the matter of the Yippie Smoke-In, where all the students (myself included) who claim to be so concerned about the repressive dope laws in this country, were all scared away once the police said they wouldn't tolerate any public display of defiance. Only one person had the courage of their convictions to go down to the Common that day and, through his subsequent arrest, put all the rest of us loud-mouthed radicals to shame.

Here of course is the reason why the law as it is presently enforced seems to work contrary to the interests of justice. If we don't care enough about what's right to actually put something on the line for it, then how can we be surprised when abuses like the Helms fiasco take place? Yet it may come to pass that you or I become the victims of our warped legal system, and then perhaps we'll wish we'd been a little more active about correcting the injustices of today.

Conference explores women's roles

jerry rogers

A loosely organized coalition of Right-to-Lifers, Ku Klux Klan members and other politically conservative women is threatening to disrupt the National Women's Conference which begins tomorrow in Houston. It is unfortunate that a conservative backlash began forming during the summer at the state women's conferences. It is even more unfortunate, however, that the press will cover the presence of these women and the conflicts they will have with the more liberal majority as the major story of the conference.

The conservative backlash and the willingness of the press to lend it credibility, as evidenced by the type of coverage accorded the state conferences, are rooted in many of the same fallacious arguments advanced against the Equal Rights Amendment.

The conservatives, and many of their husbands, insist very wrongly that they are directly threatened by the liberal majority. Also, they speak as if the liberal majority is in reality a large group of extremely radical feminists, which it is not.

International Women's Year celebrations, held world wide in 1975 under the auspices of the United Nations, spurred former President Gerald Ford and Congress to commission the 56 state and territorial conferences and the culminating National Women's Conference.

Conference consideration of homemakers' rights, basic health and reproductive issues, child care for working women and the Equal Rights Amendment hardly seem worthy of attack from anyone. The liberal majority of women that will be considering these issues is composed of housewives, working women (single or otherwise), elected politicians and others, including more radical feminists.

The inclusion of some lesbians, feminist separatists and other radical feminists is conducive to broad based discussions, as is the inclusion of some Right-to-Lifers, fundamentalists and other conservative women who support the status quo. While the two groups may be at odds, only the latter has denigrated the former and taken up the dialectic of fear in its arguments. It is also interesting to note that the majority of the delegates fall into neither of these categories and should not be forced into aligning themselves with either extreme through the portrayal of the conference as a battleground for extremists.

Most men and many conservative women do not understand feminism and mistakenly assume it to be synonymous with Women's Liberation. This assumption does justice to neither concept and may in part explain the actions of the conservative women who will be at the conference.

I do not pretend to have more than a basic understanding of feminism, but it is useful to look at a few of the basic differences between feminism and Women's Liberation.

Feminism can be differentiated from Women's Liberation in that it is a more personal form of politics. It is a political philosophy rooted in physiological, psychological and sociological concepts exclusive to women, and its embodiment is more individual than class.

Women's Liberation, however, is a class response to capitalist exploitation and oppression of women, and its embodiment is externalized political action.

The two concepts are not mutually exclusive, however, and each may foster the development of the other. Feminists certainly support the liberation of women, and in turn, Women's Liberation may free more women to become feminists.

Both concepts serve to enhance the status of women, and at some point will remove men from their position of dominance throughout society. This removal is a societal shakeup the National Women's Conference will serve to advance to accurately gauge the conference, however, we must monitor the work of the liberal majority and discount the disruptions, rooted in fear, that the conservatives will cause.

Dog don dashing duds

steve dubin

PeopleSkins Unlimited is a fashionable boutique catering to the wealthy and those aspiring to such. The soft whinings of the "Golden Retrievers" filters through the speakers mounted on the wall.

The two salespups stand at attention in anticipation of a customers demand. Grossie, the well-dressed, slightly built French Poodle wipes his brow and sees to another patron. Poo Poo, the stylish Chihuahua, straightens his lapels made of pure sunburned Saphardic awaiting a command.

Packs of shoppers prance by the display of Arien wineskins and chess sets of carved index finger to inspect other items.

Grossie approaches a Collie and Irish Setter couple (interbreeding is becoming accepted) browsing in the expensive jewelry area. He displays for them several wisdom teeth necklaces and polished toe nail rings.

Across the shop Grossie spies a sharply dressed Doberman, a menacing character, pawing an Afro-stole. Grossie hurries over to point out his new shipment of Italian made caucasian skin shoes and leaves the Doberman to ponder them.

Poo Poo is beckoned by a well-groomed German Shepherd. He offers up a wide selection of Pygmie tennis shirts and Mickey Man sport jackets.

An old and puffing Basset Hound couple browse among the brunette poney-tailed cravats. After much fondling they choose a bushy black eyebrow scarf for their son in military school.

The Collie and Irish Setter couple wait at the cash register to buy a matching set of Virgin Wasp luggage. Poo Poo rings up the sale and the couple's servant, a uniformed mongrel, carries the purchase to the car.

Across the shop Grossie spies a sharply dressed Doberman, a menacing character, pawing an Afro-stole.

At the end of this hard day Grossie and Poo Poo head for an upper-middle class bar mostly frequented by loud and obnoxious beagles. Tired, after working like human beings, they toss down several drinks. Most of the women are bitches so they tip the barpooch and return to their bachelor pens.

Validity questioned

To the Editor:

We were heartened by Paul Yanowitch's criticism of Nov. 14 of the Course and Teacher Evaluation. We, like Yanowitch, objected to the manner in which the data for the booklet was collected. The validity of such an evaluation is to be questioned.

We were most surprised to see the demeaning gross stereotyping of the various major departments, especially in the area of languages, where particular groups of people were characterized by offensive drawings that have nothing to do with the people, their language, or their culture. We feel very sorry for the artist [?] in question, who most likely suffers from some psychological problem[s], and is obviously severely lacking in education.

Finally, we did not find the Helen Keller quotations inappropriate for this type of handbook, but rather we feel that her brilliance is on a scale far beyond the level at which this Course and Teacher Evaluation was written. What a shame that our funds are wasted on such offensive and dehumanizing literature!

Racism a disease

To the Editor:

Racism — from its most miniscule level, to its grossest form, is a terrible disease within our society, which we all must cure ourselves of.

An example of racism, in its unintentional form, lies in this example: my mother is a typical Jewish mother and she loves me very much, and because of this she advises me, "Honey, I want you to be happy and marry a nice Jewish doctor". If I should bring home a nice black doctor, she would pull me aside and whisper, "He may be nice dear, but he's not for you." This twisted society disease in your mind that even your worst enemy shouldn't think of doing. has created the situation that someone who loves you, impregnates the ugliest

After looking at this, try multiplying it by one million and you get Apartheid in South Africa. There you have a situation in which per capita income for blacks is $117, for whites it is $2,373. Laws state that blacks cannot hold jobs supervising whites and that black trade unions are illegal. Blacks cannot be elected to Parliament. Blacks must pay for their education while for whites it is free and of higher quality.

There is one doctor for every 415 whites, while blacks have only one doctor for every 100,000. One consequence of this is a 53 per cent mortality rate for black children to the age of five. As people have become more aware of this, the situation has grown even worse. As of three weeks ago the government has banned the last black political organizations, arrested 50 political organizers, and forbidden the two black newspapers. They have taken away the last source of power the blacks have: the power to unite!

This world is so malignant with racism that the U.S. makes money from the horrendous disparity that exists in South Africa. In fact, the legalized exploitation of black labor helps the corporations that are invested there make a 17-19 per cent return as opposed to a world average of 11 per cent. That's probably why the U.S. is the second largest investor there.

Racism can be found in every institution in our society and we all have to work really hard to rid ourselves of this mental and emotional plague. The reason we don't do something about it collectively is that we are falling into their trap and fighting against each other. We are also blinded by the bright flashing neon lights of capitalism. Well pretty soon the music is gonna stop playing, and the world will stop turning, if we don't start doing something to clean up our acts!

There is going to be a demonstration and an organizational meeting about S. Africa on Saturday, November 19, 1977. Please come and hear Greg Williams, Dove Affazi and others speak about S. Africa. Show your support! Down with apartheid!

Cathy Jo Shuman

School for All Seasons seeks students, teachers

School for All Seasons has free courses in conversational French and German once a week for eight weeks in either Amherst or Northampton. For further information call Douglas Warner at 256-8403, or write Box 212, Amherst.

The school is looking for teachers. Any interested senior citizens who think they have talents to share with others should call Warner or write.

Opportunity available to study on Nantucket

Applications are now being taken for the spring semester of the Nantucket Program. Students enrolled in the program will live on the island and study its distinctive history and culture, earning 15 academic credits. This unique program provides a limited number of undergraduate students with opportunities for fieldwork in American Studies.

One of the world's leading authorities on maritime history, Edouard A. Stackpole, teaches the three-credit course, "The History and Culture of Nantucket." Staff members from the UMass Biology Field Station at Quaise Point teach the three-credit course, "The Natural Environment of Nantucket," emphasizing the ways in which the island's natural environments influenced its human history. And the director of the Nantucket Program, who is a UMass-Boston faculty member, leads the three-credit seminar, "Methods of Humanistic Research," a course which includes periodic contacts with visiting scholars from the University.

In addition, students complete a major Independent Study Research Project for six credits, the focal point for the semester's academic work.

Any University junior or senior in good academic standing may apply for admission to the program, regardless of college or campus affiliation. Approximately 15 students will be accepted into the program. Additional information and application forms may be obtained from the English Undergraduate Studies Office, Bartlett Hall 252.

Democratic candidates speeches air on 'Focus'

WMUA, (UMass radio, 91.1 FM) will tonight at 6 air remarks of three Democratic candidates for statewide political office in the 1978 elections. They are Boston City Councilor Lawrence DiCara, an unannounced candidate for State Treasurer, and Boston State Representative Michael Connolly, an unannounced candidate for U.S. Senator — both of whom spoke before the Young Democrats in Springfield Sunday; and former Massport director Edward J. King, an announced candidate for Governor, who addressed the Amherst Democratic Town Committee last week.

Legislative Task Force plans meeting today

Your Birthday

By Stella Wilder

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 17

Born today, you believe strongly in the dignity of man. It is impossible for you to sell anyone short — even your enemies. You believe that Man will ultimately prevail, regardless of seemingly insurmountable barriers. You also believe that man as an individual will ultimately triumph. You believe in the need for challenge, and that every individual's possibility of success is honed on the experience gained in working out problems and slowly wresting wins from losses.

You expect a great deal from those who work with you: above honesty and loyalty you expect a better-than-average grasp of the business and an extraordinary problem-solving intelligence. You have no patience with those who are frightened by hard work, and especially with those who are able but unwilling to do the work. You will readily go to the aid of anyone in genuine distress; you refuse to take on someone else's responsibility because of his sheer laziness.

There is something of the melancholy about you. You have periods of sadness heralded by a withdrawal from the company even of loved ones. On the other hand, you do not tolerate easily the moods of others. You expect them to be on an even keel emotionally and are inclined to become annoyed when they are not.

To find what is in store for you tomorrow, select your birthday and read the corresponding paragraph. Let your birthday star be your daily guide.

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 18

SCORPIO (Oct.23-Nov.21) - Conditions on the home front may be such that you will feel the need to get away from it all this eve.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov.22-Dec.21) - Should you become convinced the present project is doomed, quit at once. Don't fall behind.

CAPRICORN (Dec.22-Jan.19) - Things should go your way today if you are quick to decide which way you wish them to go!

AQUARIUS (Jan.20-Feb.18) - Don't be confused by many options this morning. Choose what you wish to do and do it! Don't be distracted.

PISCES (Feb.19-March 20) - You could be the victim of a practical joke you won't soon forget. Stay alert all day.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) - Don't look back. Be sure of your ability and all should go welL. The future is what counts.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) - Your decisions this morning have great bearing on your distant future. Select companions wisely.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) - A system of entrances and exits worked out efficiently improves your view of things at home.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) - Don't vent your frustrations on another. Take personal inventory again today. Be kind to children.

LEO (July 23-Aug.22) - You are lucky to be offered an opportunity for gain, however small. Be concerned with another's ill behavior.

VIRGO (Aug.23-Sept.22) - Beware you don't offend young people by word or deed. Make your attitude one of calm receptivity.

LIBRA (Sept.23-Oct.22) - A carnival atmosphere at work may make gain impossible. Be concerned with results, not appearances.

Face top seed

Booters in tourney

By MARK MARCHAND
Collegian Staff

The UMass soccer team will pack up its act and travel south to Garden City, New York tomorrow morning to prepare to face top-seeded Adelphi University in the first round of the ECAC playoffs at 10:30 Saturday morning.

Coached by second-year mentor Russ Kidd, the 10-4 Minutemen are seeded fourth in the four-team field which also includes second-seed Oneonta College (11-1-1) and third-seeded Boston University (10-5-2).

If the Minutemen can get by powerful Adelphi on Saturday morning, they'll face the winner of the BU-Oneonta game on Sunday morning.

"Adelphi could be the best team that we've played all year," said Kidd. "They're a scholarship outfit and have a lot of class players from the Long Island area."

Coached by Dr. Mel Less, Adelphi finished its season with an impressive 8-2-2 ledger that included a tie against national powerhouse Hartwick College. Two years ago, Adelphi was crowned as the national champion in Division II soccer before going over to Division I last year. One of the major threats for Adelphi is forward Ron Attanasio, who is considered by many to be a top pro prospect.

"They've had one of the best offenses in college soccer for the past couple of years," said UMass co-captain Larry Aronson. "They're definitely going to be tough but we feel pretty confident that we can give them a good game."

This week, several of the Minutemen received honors for their play during the season from both the Yankee Conference and the New England Intercollegiate Soccer Association. Both Tasso Koutsoukos and Joel Mascolo (second and fourth in the final YanCon scoring race) were named to the NEISA All-Star team. Named to the Yankee Conference All-Star team were goalie Mark Hodgdon, Mark Vassalotti, and Koutsoukos.

Back from an injury that sidelined him for most of the season, co-captain Ed Niemiec saw action in last Saturday's win over Providence College and will be starting in his midfield position against Adelphi Saturday. His reinstatement back on the roster should bolster the Minutemen's attack.

Also, freshman Mike Shannon should be back in action as the Northampton scoring ace is just recovering from an ankle injury that he suffered in a game against Boston College.

Members of the UMass team say they're looking to do well in the ECAC's and possibly come away with the title to prove that they should not have been overlooked by the selection committee for the Division One New England Tournament. A good performance will make that committee look bad and announce the arrival of UMass a New England soccer powerhouse.

UM grapplers open vs. 3 top-rated powers

By STEVE BUCKLEY
Collegian Staff

The UMass wrestling team will open its 1977-78 season tomorrow, as the team travels to Kingston, Rhode Island for a tough quad match with URI, Michigan, and Syracuse. Coach Dave Amato will take fifteen grapplers for the three matches, but one notable omission will be team co-captain Kevin Griffin.

"He has a really tough lab schedule," said Amato of the 158 pound New England champion who is a Food Science major. "We had a long talk and decided that it would not be good to let him wrestle right now. He has only been practicing about twice a week and he really isn't in top shape. I don't want to risk hurting him."

Amato will replace Griffin with two freshmen, Dave O'Brien and Mike Cunningham, for the matches. Amato had planned on using O'Brien at 167 pounds, but since each wrestler has a five pound weight allowance for weigh-ins he will try him at 158. Steve Joyce will go at 167 pounds.

In the 118 pound class, Amato plans on taking Dana Rassmussen and Tony Perry. Rassmussen has been sidelined with a collarbone injury for much of the semester, but appears ready to go.

"I feel pretty good," said Rasmussen, "I don't think my shoulder will give me any problems."

Dave Krase will be the only wrestler at 126 pounds, but Amato may pull a surprise and use Rassmussen or Perry in this class.

Larry Otsuka will be the only 134 pound wrestler to go on the trip.

"Larry is one of my most rugged wrestlers," said Amato. "He's always been injury free, so I don't think he'll have any problems."

Charley Rigogoliso and Mike Carroll will go at 142 pounds.

"They had a wrestle-off a few days ago," said Amato, "and they were so close that I decided to take them both on the trip."

Co-captain Timmy Fallon will wrestle at 150 pounds, along with freshman Steve McLarney.

Steve Whitman will make his UMass debut at 177 pounds. A transfer student from Boston State, Whitman did not wrestle with UMass last year, although he practiced and trained with the team.

The only question mark so far is at 190 pounds. It was thought that Bob Radiwitz would be going at this weight, but he has not been feeling well this week. If Radiwitz isn't ready, then Amato may go with newcomer Bob Clancy, a freshman who has been playing JV football.

Amato will take both of his heavyweights, John Allen and Marty Rogers, on the trip and each is expected to see action.

As for the competition, Amato does not expect UMass to come away with any real victories, but is more interested in the individual performances of his players. Last year, Michigan was ranked 5th in the nation, Syracuse was ranked number one in the

NBA—from the sidelines

By STEVE ZACK
Collegian Staff

With the exception of Atlanta, Cleveland, Denver, and Portland, NBA teams are off to slow starts thereby warranting the following analysis of each team based on their performance to date (11-14).

Eastern Conference
Atlantic Division

New York (7-5) — to decipher this situation is to Reed between the lines.

Philadelphia (6-5) — Too much one on one seems to spoil the Sixer fun, so they hired the Kangaroo Kid to get them hopping.

Buffalo (6-6) — After seeing the Braves lose to the Celtics at Boston Garden, it is time for them to shuffle off to Buffalo and say Good Knight, Billy.

Boston (3-8) — This team is like A&P's Price and Pride campaign, Auerbach continues to stick with Celtics' Pride and now he's paying the price.

New Jersey (2-9) — The owners got Hillman and King, two Porters (Howard and Kevin) to carry the Nets' excess baggage (the rest of the team).

Central Division

Atlanta (8-3) — Someone forgot to tell John Drew and Co. that they were supposed to be winless.

Cleveland (8-3) — The Cavaliers are ready for a long crusade.

San Antonio (8-6) — The Ice Man is beginning to heat up.

Houston (6-6) — Riding off into the sunset.

New Orleans (6-7) — The Jazz are singing the blues.

Washington (4-6) — Here's a case where eleven Bullets turned out to be blanks.

Western Conference
Midwest Division

Denver (8-5) — A mile high and still climbing.

Detroit (6-5) — As Paul Simon, "Detroit, Detroit. Got a hell of a hockey team.

Chicago (7-6) — You guessed it. Full of Bull.

Milwaukee (6-6) — The Bucks stop here or everyone's passing the Buck(s).

Kansas City (6-8) — The Kings have abdicated the throne.

Indiana (3-8) — "God didn't make little green apples, there'll be no title in Indianapolis come the summertime."

Pacific Division

Portland (9-2) — Blazing a trail of glory behind lumberjack Bill Walton.

Phoenix (6-5) — The land of the rising Suns and the Kamikaze Kid.

Golden State (7-7) — Warriors' chief, Rick Barry, and the tribe take to the Parrish with a Ray of hope for success.

Los Angeles (6-6) — Heavyweight boxing champ, Kareem Abdul-Jabbar is due to return to the ring.

Seattle (4-10) — The Supersonics go boom — right on their behinds.

East, and URI was the top team in New England.

"It's good for our team to face some of the big schools," said Amato. "I think that the exposure will do our kids a lot of good and help the program in terms of recruiting for the future."

The loss of Griffin will certainly be a big blow for UMass, but as Amato explains, "These guys are here to go to school first. That's the important thing."

Former UMass wrestling sensation Dennis Fenton rejoined the team this week, in the role of assistant coach.

Fenton, who captured four consecutive New England heavyweight crowns while at UMass, had been working for the football team as defensive line coach. He will also be working in the Housing Office and plans on taking some graduate courses next semester.

"This year's team looks really good," said Fenton. "They have a lot a strength, and seem to be a lot more balanced than last year."

Fenton will probably be doing a lot of work with Marty Rogers and John Allen, two young heavyweights who have replaced him.

"They're both tough kids," said Fenton. "Marty and John have both worked pretty hard, and even though they will face a lot of opponents I think they'll both win their share of matches."

UMass will travel to Kingston tomorrow afternoon, and face Michigan at night. On Saturday afternoon the team will be pitted against host team URI, and will face Syracuse on Saturday night.

Of the fifteen grapplers Amato is taking on the trip, he is not sure who he will use.

Celts win third in row, top Hawks

BOSTON [UPI] — Rookie sparkplug Cedric Maxwell netted seven of the first 13 points and added 10 third-quarter points last night to drive the Boston Celtics to a runaway 131-105 win over the Atlanta Hawks.

The Celtics, with only one win in their first nine games, have since won three straight. The Hawks, winners in eight of their first nine games, have lost their last four.

Maxwell, Boston's top draft choice from the University of North Carolina at Charlotte, finished the game with 20 points. He shared team high scoring with Tom Boswell. Dave Bing scored 17 and Dave Cowens and Jo Jo White added 16 each for the Celtics. Cowens got 20 rebounds.

Atlanta's John Drew led all scorers with 23 points.

The Celtics opened up their fast break at the first period tap-off, jumping to a 7-0 lead. Maxwell began the scoring with a three-point play by connecting on a rebound underneath the basket.

The Boston lead mounted to 30-22 at the end of the first quarter and bulged to 14 points, 40-26, 3:35 into the second period on a driving layup by Bing. They led 64-46 at halftime.

Women swimmers beat Williams

By ELLEN DAVIS
Collegian Staff

WILLIAMSTOWN — The UMass women's swimming and diving team, coming off an impressive double victory in its season opener Monday, defeated Williams last night here in its first away match.

By a score of 76-55, the Minutewomen glided past the purple and gold Ephwomen to bring their season record to 3-0.

The UMass women took first place in nine of the 15 events, and three swimmers — Maryanne Primavera, Kathy Jurcik, and Deb Schwartz — set personal records.

Primavera, a freshman, swam a 1:18 in the 100-yard breaststroke, but had to settle for second place behind a Williams opponent. Schwartz swam a 1:06.8 in the 100-yard individual medley, while pursuing Williams record-holder Karen Walker. Jurick knocked .05 seconds off her personal best time she swam Monday, with a 1:06.3 first place in the 100-yard backstroke.

Jurick and Schwartz were also double winners, with Schwartz hitting the wall first in the 500-yard freestyle and 100-yard butterfly, and Jurick winning the 50-yard backstroke, as well as the 100.

As was the case in Monday's victory over Smith and Mount Holyoke, the UMass team was ahead throughout the entire event.

Starting with a victory by the 200 medley relay team of Jurcik, Primavera, Schwartz, and Jeri Otey, the team kept the pressure on and the score after six events showed UMass on top, 28-24. Other top performances at the beginning of the meet were turned in by Celia Walsh, who swam a 2:08.7 in the 200 freestyle, Primavera and Nancy Podger who took second and third in the 50 breaststroke, and Otey and Lise Hembrough, who finished second and third in the 50 freestyle.

Up against only one Williams opponent, the UMass divers took first and second in the required diving event, with Leslie Dunphy was first with 139.9 points, followed by Suzy Strobel.

Among those adding points to the UMass total when the swimming events resumed were Hembrough and Otey with first and second place finishes in the 100 freestyle, and Walsh and Kim Murphy, who took second and third in the 50 fly.

In the optional diving competition, Suzy Strobel came back to win the event with 164.95 points, with teammate Martha Fink following in third.

"I love it," were the words of coach John Nunnelly after the meet. "It's like music to my ears. All the hard work has been paying off.

"They are a surprising bunch of young athletes with tremendous spirit," he added.

Nunnelly also felt the team's depth was an important factor in the victory. "A lot of seconds and thirds made the difference," he said. "Williams just had a few stars."

UMass will be seeking its fourth season victory Saturday, when the Minutewomen face the University of Vermont in a 1:00 home dual at NOPE.

Pucksters win opener; top New England, 4-1

By MIKE McHUGH
Collegian Staff

CONCORD, N.H. — If last night's UMass-New England hockey game is any indication of the Minutemen's caliber of play, then co-captain Bill White's prediction that the pucksters "are going to surprise a lot of people" just might be true.

The Minutemen, thanks to third period goals by Frank Pycko and White, outmuscled and outeverythinged the Pilgrims, 4-1, last night before a noisy crowd at Everett Arena here.

Pycko added breathing room for goalie John Riley by giving UMass a 3-1 lead in the early moments of the third period. It was a brilliant individual effort by Pycko as he skated all the way from center ice to beat New England's goaltender Rick St. Laurent.

White added an insurance tally at 16:25 to put the icing on the victory.

UMass coach Jack Canniff was reserved in victory. "We played poorly especially in the second period, and we were lucky to come out of the second period no worse than we went in.

"We were overtrying," said Canniff. "It was a hard-fought game, but fortunately we got our wheels spinning."

New England broke the scoring ice early in the first period as Lee Villiger from Calgary, Canada came flashing down the right wing and fired a rising wrist shot over Riley's left shoulder.

UMass broke onto the board at 6:18 of the opening period as defenseman Chris Lowey fired in a 90-foot slap shot from the left point. John Peters and Dean Liacos assisted on the goal.

The period appeared headed to end in a tie but Don Murphy managed to slip the puck past St. Laurent with only 22 seconds left to give the Minutemen a 2-1 edge.

Riley and the Pilgrims' St. Laurent guarded their creases magnificently, as both did their Ken Dryden acts, with lightning quick saves at point-blank range. Riley handled 21 shots, while St. Laurent was bombarded with 40 shots from the Minutemen.

Both teams displayed good clean two-way hockey throughout the contest, especially in the first period when only six penalties were called and there were very few whistles.

ABC fills athletic coffers

The UMass-Boston College football game's starting time on Saturday has been moved back from 1:30 to 4:00 in order to accommodate the needs of the ABC television network. But no one at either institution is whispering a complaint.

You see, for the right to telecast the game, it has been reported that ABC will fatten the athletic coffers of each school to the tune of $200,000. For that type of money, both institutions would probably have agreed to schedule the game at midnight.

UMass knew before the season started that its game against Harvard was going to be telecast regionally, and probably already spent the stipend it was going to receive.

But news that this week's game was going to be aired came as a complete surprise to both schools. It is Santa Claus deciding to show up a month early. It is an inheritance from a long lost uncle whom you never knew. It is Jed Clampett discovering that the property he owns has the potential for a million barrels of oil. It is a bonanza.

The type of bonanza that this school's athletic department desperately needed. UMass will receive almost $400,000 from ABC for its coverage of the football team. That money, according to assistant athletic director Robert O'Connell, will be funneled into the George H. Barber athletic scholarship fund.

Luckily ABC has taken an interest in UMass because, although the football team has been a success on the field, it has been a disastrous year for the team at the gate. All five of the team's home games were played under less than ideal weather conditions, and subsequently, the largest crowd at Alumni Stadium this season was 10,500.

Only a small proportion of fans actually pay at the gate, so outside revenue from fans, other than students who have already paid their athletic fee, was off.

Who cares, you say?

Well, consider this: The football and basketball teams at UMass are supposed to be money makers in order that they may defray the costs of other less revenue-producing sports. The money to send the field hockey team to Denver can't be raised at a bake sale.

Therefore, the athletic department depends on alumni contributions and gate sales at basketball and football games to finance a quality athletic program. Unlike major league baseball which gives the traveling team a certain percentage of the gate at every game, the Yankee Conference, according to O'Connell, lets the home team keep all gate receipts.

Thus if you're going to make money, you've got to do it at home. UMass didn't share the gate at New Hampshire and it won't share the receipts at BC either. What ultimately saved the football team this year was ABC and that is an unhealthy situation.

With the football team making the Division II playoffs the possibility of raising even more money from television exists. But, according to O'Connell, the probability of receiving another $200,000 is unlikely.

The quarterfinal round games will not be televised by the network. But the semis and finals, should UMass make it that far, would be carried. However, O'Connell said that playoff coverage is handled in a different manner.

"The post season television sum is a flat figure and the money goes into a pot," said O'Connell. "Everyone who participates gets to take a cut of the pot."

Along with television revenue, the Division II playoffs will raise money from gate receipts and program sales. Thus students who attend the November 26th quarterfinal game will have to pay a $2.00 entrance fee along with presenting student ID's.

"We are not guaranteed any money," said O'Connell. "The only guarantees are that you get expenses. Anything above that would be your share of the final pot after expenses."

O'Connell said the NCAA takes one-half of the net right off the top. The remaining money is divided into 34 shares and the team which eventually wins the playoffs will receive eight shares of that, or about one-quarter of the profits.

Paris in the Thirties

THE SECRET PARIS OF THE 1930's
photographs and narratives
by Gyula Halasz Brassai
Pantheon-Random House
186 pages - $8.95

Here the photographer Brassai presents a collection of photographs and short narratives on various aspects of the seamier side of Parisian nightlife in the 1930's. The book is a very good example of what can be accomplished with the proper combination of good photographs and short yet well-written accounts of the subjects therein by someone who is not only interested in but familiar with these subjects. In this instance Brassai's intimacy with and his knowledge of the world of the Parisian night is fully manifest.

In his introduction Brassai states that his very reason for becoming a photographer was his desire to 'translate all the enchanted me in the noctrunal Paris I was experiencing." He was a man fascinated by the underworld nightlife of Paris, this Paris at 'its least cosmopolitan, at its most alive, its most authentic...', as he puts it. He shared this fascination with his friends Henry Miller and (French poet) Jacques Prevert, who often accompanied him on his strolls through the areas of Paris where " the lure of sinister things" could be found, to quote Prevert.

Within this book one finds all the elements that made up this Paris de la nuit, this Paris of whores, pimps, rough gangs, mobsters, hobos [clochards], sewerpumpers, lovers of all sexual persuasions, gypsies, fortune tellers, hustlers, hucksters, eccentrics of many types, bar owners, madames, dealers in vice, patrons of vice, and sleazy dance halls, brothels, cheap hotels, all-night cafes, game rooms, small communities of clochards camped under bridges under the Seine, wild, bawdy festivals for graduating college students, the whole panorama of this special world that was reserved for those who were truly drawn the noctunal proliferation of crime, vice and danger, of sex and drugs, and the sort of eager indulgence which one never finds in 'proper' society. The lack of curious bourgeois and tourists in these districts of Paris [les arrondissements, quoi] during the thirties testifies to just how 'secret' this festering underworld was.

Yet in order to photograph the people and places which make up this secret Paris, Brassai had to gain the confidence of many who lived within it. He would spend months in order to convince certain gang members, mesdames, or clochards that he was not an informant for the police or an agent from another gang sent to disturb or endanger the clandestine lifestyles of these people. A good part of these societal outcasts were held in the utmost disdain by proper society and were pursued (though not always that actively) by the vice squad. Brassai's recounting of various experiences he had when trying to become acquainted with those of the underworld impress upon one the intrigue and the danger that lurked in the dark, dirty neighborhoods. He became good friends with a number of these people in time, and was therefore able to gain their assistance in helping him to photograph scenes of surprising intimacy; those pictures taken in the brothels and in the sleazy pimp-filled bars could not have been taken without help from the mesdames or without an acceptance (grudging though it may be) of these pimps. (Brassai tells us that Parisian pimps were often given the names of fish and theat macareau (mackerel) was the most common. [Macareau is now used throughout France). This is one of the many interesting details of Parisian nightlife which Brassai recounts, and the book is full of such information. The description of the lower-class Parisian dialect is particularly interesting. This dialect was and still is extremely rich in describing some of the more visceral aspects of life; terms for food, money, and sex are so numerous that most of them would confound anyone but a person raised in a certain stratum of Parisian society.)

Among what one finds in this book is a recounting of the nights that Brassai and his young assistant spent following the city's sewer cleaners through their disagreeable, dangerous work, and their means of relaxation after a night of such work. The photographer chronicles his investigation of a heavily bejeweled older woman whom he captures in some pictures that give a remarkable feeling of spontaneity, and he tells of the great history of Parisian outdoor urinals and their importance as meeting places for homosexuals. Brassai is able to convey the warmth with which he is greeted by a clochard who is camping under one of the bridges under the Seine stroking a black cat, and his account of his conversation with this old soul shows him to be a man of indominatably good spirits and fortitude. He shows the sleazy cheap thrills of open-air street fairs and the eerie sort of warmth that permeated Paris as one could see it from the top of Notre Dame at night. In both photographs and words he presents the life of the prostitutes who plied their trade around certain seamy areas of Paris with a genuine human compassion for them and those who sought their services. These are but a few of the subjects covered in this marvelously insightful book. Throughout it one sees the true love that Brassai had for Paris and the celebrants of the night life within that great city, yet this love is not simple and naive, he is not enamoured of the beauty or visual attractiveness of what he photographs, rather this love comes out of a realization of the complexity, the danger, and even the sadness that was there; his compassion for this underworld seems to be engendered by a recognition of the brutal honesty of it, its lack of pretentious bourgeois morality and false comraderie, its energetic pursual of sensual gratifiacation and its proud defiance of restrictive social ethics. It is this same part of Paris to which Henry Miller and Jacques Prevert were drawn, both these writers share with Brassai a certain love of the grimy, seedy underworld in which elemental human desires strive and compete without being corseted by proper societal standards of politesse, morality, and ethical business practices. This book serves as a valuable chronicle of this life in Paris in the thirties and would make a particularly interesting document for anyone who had ever read Miller's Tropic of Cancer or any of Prevert's poems.

By combining photographs that capture the detachment, excitement, and empathy with which Brassai viewed the 'secret' Paris of the thirties, with narratives written with the informative ease of someone truly familiar with his subjects, the author provides us whith a unique look at what transpired in some of the darker corners of one of the world's great cities during the period before the war, the Vichy government, the Marshall plan, and the Cinquieme Republique. Though these parts of Paris still have their shares of whores, pimps, and various and sundry small criminals and game rooms and cheap hotels, much of the charm that this Parisian underworld held has been lost to the onslaught of modernisation; most of the clochards are gone, tourists in double-decker buses now roll through La Place Pigalille, the street fairs are things of the past, and most of the poets and artists that made up such an important sector of Parisian society have since fled, and most Parisians will tell you that Paris' 'ne'est plus celle qu'elle etait," as they point to the American-style skyscrappers that are shooting up in many areas around Paris. Some of this 'charming' character still remains, but much of it is vanishing. Mais enfin c'est la vie. This book serves as a reminder of the gritty charm which certain parts of Paris had in the thirties, and is an excellent work of photography in its own right. It should become a classic in its field.

New Programs for the Retarded

Group Homes For The Mentally Retarded

There are more than six million persons in the United States who are mentally retarded. Very few of these people are able to live independently. The traditional way of solving the problem of where the retarded live is through the State Institutions for the retarded, like the one in Belchertown. However, it has been claimed that these institutions are actually "warehouses" for the retarded.

The institutions, say critics, don't give enough time to the retarded as individuals. The retarded are left to stimulate themselves, rather than having their energies channeled into productive areas.

One alternative is the Group Home. Group Homes, through better staff-patient ratios are able to devote more time to the retarded as individuals. Staff members are generally young, 20-25, and most are just out of college. The pay is very poor ("No one is here for the money," says Joel Rosenhaus, the social worker for the State Street Home in Northampton). The average stay is one year. In the summer there is an almost complete turnover because of the "Burnout Factor." Because the nature of this type of work requires such intense giving and caring, it is hard to continue to do it for a long period of time, as people tend to get "burnt out." As Joel Rosenhaus says, "You can't give all of yourself for too long, and there are always people willing to do something like this with fresh energy."

In this area there are three Group Homes, one each in Belchertown, Northampton and Easthampton. They correspond to the three levels of retardation-intermediate, severe, and mild, respectively. If a child has advanced enough, then he or she might move to the home on the next level. This helps to keep people on the same levels in the same home.

The Northampton State Street Home (for the severely retarded) houses eight children between the ages of 11 and 21. The Home, established in 1972, sends its children to special classes given by the Hampshire Educational Collaborative (HEC). The HEC classes are provided for by Chapter 766-which states that any child 0-21 has the right to an education and that any special physical, mental or emotional requirements that enable him/her to get that education must be met. The Homes are coordinated by a president, Peter Bittel, and each has a house manager, a social worker and other staff members.

The houses themselves are perfectly ordinary, aside from the fact that they are large. There are no large signs warning people away. They try to keep a low profile and stay out of the limelight.

There is an alarming amount of ignorance regarding the retarded and Group Homes. People avoid the retarded because they are made to feel anxious or uncomfortable. Because of this, they shy away from any contact or information dealing with the retarded. I talked to twenty of the neighbors from the State Street area. Of these people, fourteen didn't know what the house was, and some were very shocked to find out that it housed retarded people. ("Oh my God!" said one.) Of the six who knew about the Home, there were only two who cared about its existence. Clearly something must be done to dispel the myths about the retarded and to educate the public.

Most people tend to view the retarded as violent. Actually, says the staff of the Northampton Home, the retarded, as a group, are very passive. The typical image of a retarded person is one of a rampaging Frankenstein monster, out to pillage towns, molest children kill people, burn fields, steal cows and rape women. Most of these people claim to have "reasons" for denying the civil rights of the retarded, their chief complaint is that it would lower their property values.

Another common complaint is that kids would "escape" from the Homes. There have never been any "escapes" from any of the Homes in this area, and if one of the children were to wander off, he couldn't get very far without being noticed. There are very effective security measures to prevent someone from wandering off. There are always at least two people on duty at all times, and the house managers sleep in the houses, in a separated apartment in the rear of the house. There are buzzers that sound whenever a door is opened. All children wear ID bracelets with their names, the address of the Home, and other important information. At the Northampton Home, the children are not even aware enough to understand the concept of leaving. This is their home, it is where they live. Onewaytodispellthesemythsisthrough communitization, the mainstreaming of the retarded into regular situations. The staff, through volunteers and visitors, tries to expose the children to as many non-retarded people as possible. The staffs try to teach about money, taking busses, what is and

RasTapunk's NAZI-HUNT®

WINNERS ANNOUNCED IN RASTAPUNK NAZI-HUNT

RasTapunk's great NAZI-HUNT for the valley crossburners has finally and officially come to a close and judging by the plethora of entries we received, it turned out to be an even greater success than RasTapunk himself had anticipated. After careful scrutiny of the entries and a painstaking process of verification, cross-referencing all possible sources, we feel it is time to announce the winners.

In order not to offend the sensibilities of many on this campus nor the technical morality of most, we have decided not to publish the winners' names in the paper. Many entries were sent in by "professional confessional but non-repentant" racists seeking only headlines and a free record and would be very pleased with any coverage we gave them, positive or negative. Some of these peoples' friends, too, had submitted entries "in all confidence," and publication of their names would undoubtedly jeopardize their own safety and well being here in campus.

In an effort to minimize future racial violence at UMass and to protect not only the safety of our winning entrants but the lives of RasTapunk and his immediate friends and family and all those who participated in the contest, we have decided to seal the entries in an envelope to be placed in the Chancellor's safe in the event that these names are ever needed. Copies will also be sent to the Governor and entrusted with the Collegian's Editor in Chief.

We are not so idealistic as to think that just because we have identified the valley cross-burners, all racists in the valley will discontinue fanning the flames of racial hatred. Quite to the contrary. The smokescreen of racial hatred will continue to get thicker as our economic crises get worse. If this contest accomplished anything, it was to open the doors of perception to the racism around us.

The Deans and Administrators on this campus were willing to see the crossburnings dismissed as pranks and swept under the carpet. Many students preferred it that way, too, as its incidence has already disturbed the mellow-acracy here at UMass. The only real voice that came out and addresesed itself to the issue was the sincrere but naive remark by a certain Rabbi on campus who, in a letter to the Collegian, declared the whole incident a "black mark" on our valley. This, to you nitpickers, is more than just a matter of semantics; it in fact demonstrates the extent to which racism has permeated our society, including our language.

If RasTapunk did anything with his NAZI-HUNT, it was to keep the dirt out from under the carpet. Has anyone wondered why no one, despite all the sentiment, has even bothered to attack RasTapunk or the contest in the Collegian editorial pages throughout the duration of the contest? One hundred and four entries and not one single editorial or poison-tipped letter! Amazing! And do you know why? Because everyone and anyone who had something to say about it refrained from doing so because to do so, in the public's eye, would be tantamount to supporting cross-burning.

We had hoped that this contest would have blown the liberal veneer of rhetoric right off of the contemporary racist position as well. We hoped all the "we have mixed feelings about Affirmative Action" people would scream outrage and the "I believe in equality for everybody not just the blacks" crowd would scream fraud. We were even hoping that the John Birch Society, in response to our first ad, would have written a letter to the Collegianexplaininghow they don't burn crosses. If you can get anyone to defend themselves out of necessity against these charges, you're doing OK.

As it stands, we have three winners; people, who either out of a burning hate of racism or a burning desire to receive free records, have correctly identified the valley crossburners. As I have stated earlier, their names are unpublishable as their collegues in Van Meter would, in all likeliehood, clobber them. They have been notified by phone and should receive their prizes by mail within a couple of days.

Finally, and in the main, the objective impact that this contest has had on this campus was to turn thousands of record-hungry students into veritable "Spys Against Racism" by offering material rewards for humane and socially responsible committments. Records as carrots are nothing new but what the contest proved was that there is nothing wrong with fighting racism with reward. Many whites have no idea and no possible basis to understand why being against racism is in their own self-interest. By making such self-interest immediate, we have circumvented the long and elaborate process of explaining scientifically the benefits of white anti-racist behavior. Maybe now that the doors of perception are open, perhaps we can see some real anti-racist education begin on this campus instead of the usual moralistic garbage the University always tries to ram down our throats in their "chess from both sides of the board" approach to social control.

Crashing footsteps down the street.
Violent young bearded eyes flash.
Someone cues his man
& there's a surge
'neath the store sign
Bloody bottle breaks,
Back surge and crash,
footsteps running,
Cued man got hit,
said his line,
he's got for good.
Bloody bleeding breaks.
So the pistol shots & rats cringing on the corners under papers & pounding feet and yells, white shirts screaming...
& a curtain blows out into the street.
(a woman weeps on a man, her curtain dress billows & someone drags her into the alley,) Ah who can speak,
the scream is caught in our evading eyes, locked to our fingers
clenching teeth,
we still watch the news,
shut the windows waiting for the glass to break armed madness blasting fire at the night.
(the youngest rush for safety,
only the cab that's there, hasn't got doors and arms and legs hang out.)
the buildings reek of ash, people crouch on the doorsteps, hiding
& the yellow smoke
wavers around their eyes.
a firetruck is broken,
over some street sign,
black-capped dream riders scattered on the ground
& it's all rain, letting loose,
crashing at the years,
men beating & windows smashed.
Ah, our people are crying & crashed & wasted on the corners like dazed deer, waiting for the execution.

AFTERIMAGES

by Arlene Croce
1977 New York
Alfred A. Knopf Publishing Company

Arlene Croce, founder and editor of Ballet Review, dance reviewer for The New Yorker, and contributor to several other dance publications, has published a collection of her writings, spanning a period of about ten years, in a book entitled Afterimages.

The book is organized in four parts, with each part representing a different frequency in writing; that is, Part One contains writings "By the week" from 1973-1977, Part Two, "By the month" from 1969-1971, Part Three, "Quarterly" from 1966-1972, and Part Four, "On occasion." These differences are a result of writing for different publications and deadlines.

Croce possess a keen, knife-edged perceptivity, a talent for producing apt, evocative, to-the-point descriptions of dances, dancers, situations -- anything, and a wealth of experience and knowledge of dance.

In every selection in every part of the book, Croce's craftsmanship and artistry as a dance critic are evident; not only does she describe in acute (not minute) detail the particular performance at hand, she also delves into and interrelates all other pertinent aspects of a performance, such as a choreographer's or a dancer's background, the image source for a dance, the characteristics, development and direction of a dance company, and the relative influence of certain social, political and historical events. In many of her selections, she probes even deeper raising and commenting on various problems encountered in the serious consideration of dance -- the criteria for quality, the relationship of critic to dancer, and the nature of the avant-garde in dance, for example.

To quote a few passages from the book itself: In reference to trockadero ballet, or ballet in which men take women's roles and satirize the classice, Croce points out, "Drag ballet provides one answer to the question of why men impersonating women are funny, while women impersonating men are not; it has to do with gravity. (A heavy thing trying to become light is automatically funnier than a light thing trying to become heavy.)"

In relation to the nondance concerts of the seventies, she writes, "Implicit in all this seems to be the idea that unless dancing can be taken back to an embryonic state... it cannot be done. The only trouble with this is that the embryo never grows.... The embryo never grows because the dancers do not build on one another's accomplishments -- they work on as if nobody had ever done anything."

Of "Deuce Coupe", a pop ballet choreographed by Twyla Tharp for the Joffrey Ballet, she writes, "But the restlessness and pain of American children are in it too. The end of the ballet -- the long, slow crescendo of tossing arms, lunges in plie, and backward bourrees on point, with here and there a fall to the floor -- is half truth, half myth. It sums up a kind of schmaltzy romanticism that young people love to wrap themselves in..."

Croce's rather high-brow style of writing assumes a reading audience familiar with dance, and in particular, with the dance scene in New York City. For example, she frequently uses ballet terminology and refers to certain famous ballets, roles, dance companies and even theaters without fully explaining who or what they are. This is not a fault; it is merely an indication that this book might be a frustrating one for those who are not already familiar with dance. But for those who know and love theatrical dance, Afterimages provides an informative, profound insight into the dance world, as seen by one extraordinary critic.

GATES OF EDEN

by Morris Dickstein
300 pages, $11.95
Basic Books, Inc.

The sixties are a much misunderstood decade. Those who choose to ignore the lessons of the sixties are legion. There are others who misinterpret them, and see in the savage contortions of those years many signs of decay, giving an excuse for a retreat into the shelter of a book-lined study. Still others are ambivalent about the sixties, accepting it's fruits, rejecting its subtle poisons.

In Gates of Eden, Morris Dickstein proves to be a trenchant literary critic and astute commentator on the changes wrought by a turbulent decade. He has decided to study those changes as they were reflected in the prose of the sixties' best writers-Donald Barthelme, John Barth, Kurt Vonnegut, Thoman Pynchon, Joseph Heller, Norman Mailer- and the words of its most influential "thinkers", such as Herbert Marcuse, Paul Goodman, and Susan Sontag.

This approach is not without its drawbacks. A reader may question the accuracy of Dickstein's thesis that the social wrinkles of the age must necessarily show up in a litery fabric. Also, in his attempt to validate the decade intellectually, he runs the risk of slighting the sixties' feel. It might have been better had he turned his keen eye on the direct actions of the time, and not those actions as filtered throught the novels then being published.

However, Dickstein is an academic; hence, he responds to the play of ideas and the imaginative use of words. He leaves the facts to the journalists, and concentrates on high art (in a decade which tried to destroy all notions of such spruious categories). It is ironic that a review of such an anti-intellectual age, an age which claimed Marshall McCluhan as one of it's gurus, should depend so heavily on literature.

Dickstein shows how writings in the late 50's, such as Mailer's The White Negro" and Goodman's Growing Up Absurd, were the first stirrings of the national psyche, which was to explode in the next ten years into a strange mixture of spirituality and polyemics, solipsism and communality. Dickstein correctly identifies Allen Ginsberg as the epitome of that duality, for Ginsberg was an early cultural insurgent who endured. His rebellion against form and manner in life and art laid the groundwork for much bad poetry and exciting thought.

Dickstein also offers one of the best analyses of Norman Mailer I have yet read. He distinguishes between the nonsense and self-dramatization, and the peculiar genius of Mailer's insights into America.

A brief look at rock music centers on discussions of Dylan, the Beatles, and the Rolling Stones. Dickstein doesn't seem to take the Beatles seriously, preferring to explore the dark nights of Dylan's soul and the Stones' satanic pretensions.

Gates of Eden is essentially the unleashing of one man's unique perceptions. The sweep of Dickstein's intellect and the breadth of his interest keeps the book from being just another self-serving academic treatise. Another reviewer dismissed Gates of Eden as "the Greening of Morris Dickstein", but this charge is only partly true. Dickstein does occasionally refer to his own experience, but this is valid if one accepts the premise of the sixties that self-conciousness is crucial to an understanding of the outer world. Dickstein mirrors the sixties zeitgeist as well as anyone.

Labor Reform

LABOR REFORM AND LEGISLATION

Almost any way you look at it these days through the eyes of working people, the U.S. economy is in big trouble. Massive layoffs in steel, continued high unemployment for Blacks and youth, cutbacks in unemployment benefits to laid off workers, are only symptoms of the real problem: the total crisis of capitalist production in this country. For people who punch the clock, sweep the floors, face unsafe and often deadly working conditions every day, this reality has been coming on more and more the past few years. Meatless meals, (and not by dietary choice), coming home to a cold house after having worked in a drafty and damp factory all day, frustrated expectations, increased alcoholism, mental illness, suicide are all evidence of this capitalist economy in crisis. As always in the history of working peoples' lives it is they who bear the brunt of the crisis not the owners of the means of production, those who created the mess in the first place.

What makes matters even worse is that the national leadership of the American Federation of Labor has put its efforts into trying to patch things up with a legislative reform program. Reforms are not automatically bad. Reform efforts that point out the inequities of the capitalist system, that locate the source of workers problems in the profit drive, that educate masses of organized and unorganized workers in the whys and hows of political struggle are crucial at this time. However the AFL strategy to date has been mostly the opposite. Lets's take a look at this strategy more closely.

Key areas of reform announced by president of the AFL George Meany over the summer included streamlining National Labor Relations Board procedures, minimum wage increases, repeal of 14 B of the Taft-Hartley Law (14B allows states to pass laws forbidding mandatory union memebership clauses in contracts and is used in the South to break union drives) and legislation to prevent runaway shops.

On the surface, at least, these proposals could in fact heighten working class consciousness, could challenge the capitalist system directly and force changes that would lead to the further growth of working class political and economic power. But the AFL strategy for winning these demands blunts this possibility right from the start. The AFL Executive Council, before the battle began, decided that the fight would be waged on the floors of Congress not in the union halls and the thousands of unorganized factories throughout the country. The government will solve the problem of organizing the unorganized by passing a more favorable organizing law; the government will solve the runaway shop problem by raising import tariffs to low wage nations, like Mexico; the government will stop exploitation of low wage workers by raising thier pay. All of this is supposed to be accomplished by workers writing to their legislators in Washington D. C.

These proposals and the reliance on the government to enforce them shows that AFL officials continue to view the government as a neutral arbitrator of capitalist-labor conflicts. This is in keeping with other points in US labor history when union leaders traded away the right to strike for some immeditate economic gains. Reforms of this type, those lobbied for and granted by Congress, do not create rank and file awareness of the fundamental contradictions that exist between labor and capital. But since the early years of the 20th century top union officials made 'peace' with the government and top monopoly corporations. In return for these corporations recognizing labor unions, labor leaders agreed to keep the rank and file in line. This has led to the sell-out over and over again of workers' demands from the shop floor and in representative local union meetings. It has constantly led to money being made the cutting edge of any strike demands, not the building of a class conscious union. It has led to and perpetuated deep divisions in the working class between Blacks, Hispanic, women and unskilled workers on the one hand and white skilled workers on the other.

To date the legislative package proposed by AFL officials has not done well at all in what is supposed to be a pro-labor Congress. Reform of some aspects of national labor law will make it a bit easier to fight companies like J.P. Stevens who have used loopholes in the law for years to block union organizing drives. Minimum wage increases have been only minimal and do not effect all workers or take very many workers' hourly pay above the poverty level. And the question of runaway shops has not been dealt with at all. A direct challenge against them would require that the AFL recognize why wages are so much lower in places like South Korea, the Phillipines, Latin America, Mexico and Puerto Rico. The importation of 'cheap' goods from these countries is not the fault of the workers. It is a result of the United States' multinational corporations' control of these economies backed by the power of American finance capital and the military. No legislation is going to change this.

On the brighter side though, there has been an upsurge of rank and file activity in almost every major union across the country. Mines, steel mills, auto and aircraft plants, on the docks and in the offices workers are becoming more militant and are challenging for control of their unions. The struggle to democratize the unions, to end racism and sexism in the union hall and on the shop floor, the battle to put more power over decision making in the hands of shop floor workers through their elected representatives is going on at an accelerated pace. Reform efforts fought in the context of the larger battle to identify the real source of working class misery, production for profit, are extremely important. Such organizing efforts are far different from the AFL legislative record of the past few years.

I KNOW ABOUT THE LIFE:
CHARLES MAJEED GREENLEE

"Mr. Majeed has a unique voice on his instrument, one which falls within the line of a great tradition of poets--Tyree Glenn, J.C. Higginbotham, Quentin Jackson, and Benny Morton. Besides the sound, Brother Majeed's compositions--Miss Toni [Miss Barbara] and El Sino are an integral part of the literature."

Archie Shepp

Spanning three decades, Charles Majeed Greeenlee has played with every major band in the country except that of Count Basie. Of the early big bands he played with the Floyd Ray Band, the Lucky Millander Band, the Benny Carter Orchestra, the Lionel Hampton Orchestra, Gene Ammons, the Duke Ellington Orchestra, the Yusef Lateef Sextet, the Maynard Ferguson Band and the Slide Hampton Octet. In this recent period he has performed, toured and recorded with saxophonist Archie Shepp. In the mid-forties he played with such greats as Thelonius Monk, Walter Brown, Max Roach, Charlie Parker, J.J. Johnson and Dizzy Gillespie who were major influences on his musical career. This rich heritage and experience will permeate the compositions and arrangements to be performed by Greenlee in concert on November 18th in the New Africa House on the University of Massachusetts campus. This 8:00 pm concert is free and open to the public. Material presented at this concert will be recorded soon on a Japanese label. Artists slated toperform include Bill Hardman on trumpet, Ernie Wilkins on saxophone, Beaver Harris on drums, Cameron Brown on bass and Art Matthews on piano. Music for this concert and the new album was "influenced by Tad Dameron...One tune I did for his octet and that was during my most prolific period. I was really stretching out then." Another tune was first played with Philly Jo Jones after he had just left Miles Davis' Band. It was recorded but has never been released.

Greenlee's compositions and playing can be heard on recordings by Dizzy Gillespie, Gene Ammons and Roland Kirk of the late forties-early fifties. He recorded with John Coltrane in 1965 on Africa Brass. Up until 1975 he had never recorded a disc of his own in the United States. In discussing probable reasons for this, Greenlee explained, "In 1965 I recorded with Charles Mingus a truly Black Classical piece of music, "Half Mass Inhibitions." This was an Afro-American symphony which involved western harmonicand melodic content and included such greats as Max Roach, New York Philharmonic musicians. It was a beautiful piece of music. Mingus told us that this was something that he had composed twenty years earlier and hadn't had a chance to record it before this." He added. "Business mechanisms...and how they approach marketing has something to do with the fact that many musicians who should be recorded have not been recorded." In other cases recording companies may do an album, "but they seem not to try to sell Afro-American instrumental music." By perusing albums available, it is noticeable that the percentage of Black instrumental artists who are promoted are relatively few to the actual recorded output.

Greenlee's compositions are recognized in Europe and Japan. "Although my work is not known in this country, I've recorded extensively in Europe and though I've never been to Japan, the Japanese people know my work. Also my work circulates in South America and Africa." Stan Kinard and Kwaku Gyata, students at the University of Massachusetts, "recognized Majeed as a known artist. We felt that he should be recorded in this country." They raised the money, formed their own company, Kwaku-Anance's Web, and produced the disc, I Know About The Life. The lyrics to the title cut were written by Aisha Rahman and the music by Archie Shepp. Rahman subtitled her poem, "The Genius of Charles Greenlee". This album features Archie Shepp, Joey Wilson and Jean Carn. The record is presently being distributed in Japan and negotiations are pending on distribution rights in this country.

Greenlee arrived in the Amherst area after Archie Shepp was appointed Associate Professor of Music with the W.E.B. Dubois Department of Afro-American Studies at the university. He had been working with Archie Shepp since the early 70's and his distinct trombone sound can be heard on Money Blues, Things Gotta Change, Attica Blues, The Cry For My People, Trumpet In My Soul, Sea Of Faces and U-Jaama. Greenlee recalls, "Archie expressed that he would like to get all the guys in the band in this general area so we could get tighter musically and grow as a group. At the time I was working with the Collective of Black Artists based in New York. We did concerts and workshops at major music schools throughout the east coast region. We played in a concert at the university, "Ritual" which was a history of Black music. For once I had a few dollars left and I stayed over. Archie asked me if I'd be interested in going to school here... that same evening I met the woman I would marry--so all these things added up to a very attractive proposition. Plus New York was kickin' my ass." Charles Majeed Greenlee enrolled as a University Without Walls student and graduated in two and a half years with a B.A. cum laude.

Black Instrumental music, so-called "jazz" or Black Classical music is Greenlee's medium of musical expression. He composes and orchestrates by "sitting at the piano for long periods working on every note of every passage before I put it on paper. This is not the ideal way to write. A person should be able to visualize the sound, hear it and put it on paper. It is a creative process. It is a craft too." He differentiates between his generation of musicians and those of today. "Only a few from this generation look at the study of music as something to be pursued diligently and seriously. It seems that certain periods gave rise to very false notions which include the attitudes of do-your-own-thing; that one need not study music, that all one needs is talent and ability; or, that one need only to spend time with an instrument to create an art form. This is not true...When you find a genius it is usually accompanied by a kind of dedication. I've met musicians with a tremendous amount of talent, but they haven't done anything with it intellectually or scientifically, which they somehow have come to believe if they did, it would detract from what they are trying to create musically. Music is a lifelong study. If you listen to Dizzy's music or Charlie Parker's, you hear growth. You hear dedication. The music of Max Roach, Woody Shaw, the late John Coltrane, and among others, the unheralded giant, Frank Foster, reflect these same qualities."

Charles Majeed Greenlee traces his commitment as a musician "from the very first time I heard musicians play those kind of extended long lines, the altered harmonies and the excitement that this music generated." He continues to "stay open to different kinds of sounds."

He links his aesthetic value system with conditions that he first witnessed in Detroit as a child, to the time he was "hangin' on the corner with Charlie Parker", to those of the present. "With the terrible things going on in the world, I felt that art should be in the vanguard of exposing injustice and offer solutions...I've come to feel that art is valid in a purist form....A person who plays the most revolutionary sounding music might be the most capitalistic, and vice versa. I thing that the vocalist and the spoken and graphic arts can better express political thoughts." Greenlee also emphasizes that music in African societies had function--recreational and religious, and that modern Afro-American music is valid for music's sake and that functionally "it can deal with stress, it can provide beauty alongside ugliness and it helps us to survive."

As a trombonist, as a composer, arranger and recording artist, Charles Majeed Greenlee is part of a lineage spanning the geographies of Africa and America and the decades from the forties through the seventies. He refers to the "great" whom he has played with and the not-so-great. Disregarding the role of the media in defining the great, if we are to decide who the contributors are to formulating the essences and direction of great Black instrumental music, we would have to consider the works and playing of Charles Majeed Greenlee.

APRIL WINE
Live At The El Mocambo
(London)

Here they are! The rave group that opened for the Rolling Stones at their surprise recording date last March at the El Mocambo Club in Toronto now has an album out available to the American consumer! Recorded live during the Love You Live sessions, April Wine is a Canadian band with enough power and personality to make this critic say: to hell with the Stones; let's hear what the next generation has to say.

Escaping categorization, for the time being, April Wine offers us a sampler of their talents on Live At The El Mocambo. Synthesizing their own sound out of the influences of Bachman-Turner Overdrive, Stevie Wonder, Bob Marley, and Savoy Brown, April Wine really doesn't do anything new, they just do it better than anyone else around.

Capturing the flavor of the old Bluesbreakers' and Ten Years After live club date sessions, El Mocambo does the masters' one better by having plenty of singles material on it. While "You Won't Dance With Me" and "You could Have Been A Lady" were both Canadian hits, "Tonight Is A Wonderful Time To Fall In Love" could make it here, rightoff the album as a live single! "Oowatanite" will keep heavy metal fans talking while "Juvenile Delinquent" and "Drop Your Guns" will attract a budding New Wave-Reggae audience.

Live At The El Mocambo is a perfect American debut album for a group that, by comparison, make the Stones look like old farts. I give this one the Nerenbergian "A."

NEIL YOUNG
Decade
(Reprise)

Someone told me that you pronounce the title of this album with the accent heavily on the second syllable. All kidding aside, the title is to the point: ten years of Neil Young with the Buffalo Springfield, Crosby, Stills and Nash, the Stray Gators, Crazy Horse, and by himself. Young sequenced this three-record anthology, and it is indeed a straightforward look at his career as a star. The set is obviously intended for the Christmas boom, but in a sly move to corral older Young fans into buying the set, there are seven 'previously unreleased' tunes. 'Down To The Wire' was recorded in '67 for the Springfield's unreleased Stampede album; others are from the canned Homegrown sessions. Some people will just eat up this sort of thing.

RAY BARRETTO
Eye Of The Beholder
(Atlantic)

It is hard not to get excited when presented with material like this. I could go on and on about how Ray is Mister Integrity, about how much his new band sounds like Weather Report gone Latin, about how they probably wouldn't let Klaus Doldinger on this record with a ten-foot pole, and about how advanced Ray really is into the world of music. But, you wouldn't want me to do that now, would you?

Once again, Senor Barretto takes us on a Latin space voyage, whizzing by planets and meteors at the speed of salsa. A Crusaders production, Eye of the Beholder is a fusion of many different forms and styles, strutting its influences across your ears unabashedly proud of its heritage. This is the music of the eighties as heard, imagined, and played by one of the outstanding percussionists of all time. Buy the record and make yourself happy today.

COMMODORES ### Live
(Motown)

The Commodores have turned what has to be the most successful R B/Soul tour of the year into a double album set. Most of the album was recorded at the Atlanta concert with one cut being a studio cut that will be debuted on this LP. This cut is "Too Hot To Trot" and right off the bat it's typical Commodores' funk with the funky keyboards and thin background horns.

"Too Hot To Trot" is the closest thing that the Commodores have as a throwback to funk-klassiks like "Slippery When Wet" and "I Feel Sanctified." These cuts are given all too short renditions on this double LP while the more contemporary and consequently less potent "Brick House" covers eleven minutes plus.

The band may have slipped a little in funk production, but the slow sides are still a tour de force. Present in very long and healthy versions are "Sweet Love," "Just To Be Close To You," "Zoom" and "Easy," a cut that has so many country ® western overtones that it would be a sure-shot Grammy for Charlie Pride had he done it. (He probably wishes he had.)

Everybody's favorite Commodores song should be here, and again, especially pleasing is the representation from the slow side of the scale. Enjoy the concert, folks!!

RANDY NEWMAN
Little Criminals
(Warner Brothers)

To no one's surprise, another satisfactory effort presented by good ol' boy Randy Newman. Little Criminals offers the lyrical beauty which we have habitually come to expect from one of today's most creative composers. As in the past, Newman sometimes fails to match his lyrical masterpieces with outstandsing melodies, but each of the twelve cuts are varied enough to hold interest. The best songs rendered here are simply the ones for which the best music has been written to accentuate the lyrics (the humorous "Short People," "Baltimore" and "Kathleen," subtitled "Catholicism Made Easier"). It's unfortunate that a vast proportion of our populace has no idea of who Randy Newman is, but, then again, many a genius has been neglected during his lifetime. And although I personally don't consider him an out and out musical genius, Randy Newman is not far from it. If he could consistently make his melodies as captivating as his lyrics, he would probably be recognized as the greatest thing since the wheel. But until he does (and at this stage it appears doubtful), he will just have to content himself with pleasing a chosen few. In spite of, or maybe just because of, Newman's non-desire to cater to the masses, I give Little Criminals a "who says crime doesn't pay?" B.

ANDY PRATT
Live at the Rusty Nail,
Sunderland
Thursday, November 10

Despite a couple of bright moments, the visit of Bostonian Andy Pratt and his four-man band to the Nail last week left a rather distant feeling in the air. It might have been due to the sound mix in which Pratt's voice got lost during the loud songs; more likely it was the sterile sound of those same loud songs. There was a definite lack of energy in the hall.

In fairness to Pratt, his performance was strong and his band together (especially on vocals), but in this dance hall-bar setting, Pratt was forced to rely on his harder numbers which do not adequately represent his best material or style. Nevertheless, quite a few people were dancing to funky numbers like 'Mama's Gettin' Love' and 'I Want To See You Dance'. But 'So Faint', which is a more ethereal song, was completely lost on the crowd despite the fact that Andy's rendition clearly bested the album cut of this song. Still, Pratt won the fancy of the crowd by the end of the show with his rousing 'Avenging Annie' and a stellar version of 'All I Want Is You'. Both songs highlight Pratt's outrageous falsetto. Outside of these successes, it just seemed like the wrong place to see Andy Pratt.

what isn't socially acceptable, and many other things that most of us take for granted in everyday life. They also try to fit the children into regular classes, in additionto the HEC classes.

"Northampton is the ideal place for doing this. It's very receptive to our needs," says Rosenhaus.

"It's great taking the kids around town here, too," adds Nina Rosenberg, house manager of the Northampton Home. "Northampton has more specialized programs, so the kids are more used to seeing kids who are different from themselves. They don't stare at you like they do in Amherst."

The money to operate these facilities comes from a variety of sources. The houses themselves are generally rented from the Hampshire Association for Retarded Citizens (HARC) or the Housing Authority. The food and rent is paid for by SSI (Social Security Income, received by any child who is retarded), about $220 a month. The staff is paid for by the DMH (Department of Mental Health,) whom they contract through as service providers.

In addition to contracting with the Homes, the DMH provides monitoring for the facilities, ideas for new developments (such as a fourth home, to be a cooperative apartment or youth-home, still in the planning stages), and helps select the children to be placed in these Homes. The DMH also reviews all people and programs quarterly.

The ultimate goal of a Group Home is to enable the patient to one day be able to leave. There are various ways that kids can leave a home like this. They can be placed in a Specialized Home Care situation, with Specialized Foster Parents, who continue the programs started in the Group Home. "When taking kids into a home for Specialized Home Care," says Rosenhaus, "people tend to take the most 'attractive'in a sense. Some of the children are less attractive in their mannerisms, personalities, and what they look like (than others)." Nina Rosenberg adds, "We want to enhance those qualities that the kids have that make them likable so that people will spend time with them."

Another way to leave would be to go into a cooperative apartment or an independent living situation. "I don't think that any of the kids here (in the Northampton Home) will ever be able to live on their own, but some of the kids in the Easthampton Home might be able to," says Rosenhaus. They also could live with relatives, go to another Group Home, or, if too big a problem, they could be sent back to the State Institution at Belchertown (not to be confused with the Group Home for the intermediatley retarded in Belchertown), a step that's never had to be taken. "All of the kids look much better now than they did when they got here," says Rosenberg. "They were much more aggressive from being institutionalized."

A typical day at the Northampton Group Home begins at 6:30, when the staff begins to wake the eight children. All eight mus be up, toiletted, dressed, eating breakfast and out by eight. This can be quite a job since none of the children are fullly toilet-trained, and all are given baths in the morning. (A sign on the dryer announces, "DO NOT PUT PLASTIC PANTS IN THE DRYER.") The staff agrees that the five females and three males have gone very far, and some might even be able to progress into the intermediate Home in Belchertown. Although none can converse, some of the children can say a few words. Most use a toned-down version of sign language for the deaf. They can do easy puzzles and have attention spans of 2-20 minutes. All need help eating. At 8:00 he kids leave to go to school in the winter and to camp in the summer.

Because they are involved in different pro[illegible]s, the kids come home anytime between two and four. From then until five they work on individual programs which range from learning how to tie a shoelace to learning how to make a bed. All of these tasks must be learned by repetition and may take six months to learn. From five until seven they have dinner, the staff helping. Staff members clean up messes, cook and eat at the same time. After dinner the staff takes a break. Next there are more individual programs and getting the children ready for bed, undressed, teeth brushed takes at least an hour

This afternoon there are only two children here, John and Bob (not their real names), two of the most severely retarded. As we walk in, Bob is trying on clothes with a little help from Nina Rosenberg. Bob says very few words except for food words, his favorites. "Bob, do you know we're here?" asks Joel. Bob turns slightly, and I can almost see a flicker of recognition, but not quite. "Yogurt?" he asks.

John is sitting on his bed, rocking his feet. He is in a bad mood, I learn, because he has been to the dentist. John has a physical problem that prevents him from talking, and the staff has been helping him with his signing. He doesn't seem to notice us either.

How aware are the children in these Homes? In the Easthampton Home they are as aware as other people. In the Belchertown Home they are aware of some of the outside world. In Northampton they are much less aware." If you were to throw a rubber ball to one of the children in the State Street Home, he or she might react to it, but chances are that they wouldn 't," says Rosenhaus.

The group Home is more helpful than a state institution, if only because it gives the kids mor individual attention. Recently some local grad students set up a Playlab, where the children can learn while they are having fun ("They're getting more used to the fact that retardation isn't contagious, so we're getting more volunteers than we used to," says Rosenhaus.

"These children," says Nina Rosenberg, "used to, often, get worse rather than getting better. What we do is try to make their already difficult lives a little easier."

THINK ABOUT THIS THE NEXT TIME YOU BITE INTO ONE OF THOSE "ALL-BEEF" HOTDOGS:

FOOD

Philip D. Armour

Philip D. Armour, founder of Armour Meat Company and the man who mechaniz ed the nation's meat (along with his friends in the Chicago "beef trust") around the turn of the century, once said "I like to turn bristles, blood, bones and the insides and outsides of pigs and bullocks into revenue."

TIMELY THOUGHTS

That there are never enough hours in a day is a recurring echo that has acquired the undertone of a boast. The Beautiful People are endlessly busy. Always hopping into limousines and sprinting up airplane ramps, rushing to parties and premieres and public appearances and cocktails and...Just watching their event-packed days leaves one breathless (witness Rona Barrett). By a logical fallacy the reverse is seen as true: busy people are beautiful. So important! So dynamic! So in demand! Never mind that there is no correlation between busyness and productivity. (We all know the starlet who shops in the morning, eats lunch in Spain and dinner in New York, attends a Broadway show and a cast party before going to sleep in California has had a very busy day. While the unemployed scholar reads and writes from dawn to dusk is not busy at all.) Busyness is glamorous. What is so pathetic and unsexy as the lover who has the time to wait by the phone? Busyness is a corporate ideal. From the waitress who, when there are no customers, must, rather than sit down and gaze off into space, perpetually add a few grains of salt to shakers that are already full, to the vice-president whose secretary is trained to keep all his calls indefinitely on hold to enhance his image. Meanwhile we whine about how scarce time is. We love to think our lives are so exciting but so exhausting (sigh!).

e.e. cummings advised "pity is this busy monster, manunkind,/not. Progress is a comfortable disease..." But unfortunately a progressive one, too. That wonderful institution of the rat-race is a quietly frantic process of engineering more bits of spare time and then manufacturing activity to fill it, which necessitates finding new sources of time again.

As a society becomes more industrialized, both leisure time and life expectancy increase. People tend to join the labor force at a later age and retire from it at an earlier one. Transportation is faster. Labor-saving devices and strategies are pioneered, patented, and popularized. Everything it would seem conspires to insure an abundance of time. But proportionately, there is never enough of it and less and less of it all the time. Paradoxically, as available time grows absolutely, it shrinks relatively. Betty Friedan noted in The Feminine Mystique that despite the advent of "modern conveniences" (a euphemism for vacuum cleaners, dish-washers, self-cleaning ovens, etc.), the average housewife in the 1950's spent more hours per week on household chores than did her counterpart half a century earlier. Thus the feeling that there is "less time" cannot be reduced simply to "rising aspirations".

And yet technology encourages rising aspirations even as it frustrates their fulfillment. Rarely is a new gadget marketed without due commotion over the time and money (which are synonomous: "time is money") it will save. Neglecting of course, the money said gadget will take to produce, distribute, and purchase, not to mention the time utilized in these functions as well as learning how to operate and repair the machine. And then come the newer models, more expensive and complex.

Like the weather, everyone complains about the time but nobody does anything about it. Clouds can be seeded but time is not some sort of vapir in a can that when punctured will expand. Curiously, taxes are often regarded as a disagreeable but inevitable fact of life by the same people who suggest that a day should be something longer than 24 hours.

Why not then, fix the life expectancy at some arbitrary but stable rate, say fifty, and divide the resulting excess of unused hours evenly among the days of those years? There would be minor problems but nothing insoluble. Periodically the length of days would have to be readjusted. When cancer is conquered, for example, we could all sleep 20 minutes later every morning. And instead of being assaulted by silly public service announcements that every cigarrette shortens one's life by a minute, the principles of positive reinforcement and immediate gratification could be put to effective use. A two-pack-a-day-man could quit and earn a longer lunch "hour". Since women live longer than men, a women's day could actually contain more hours. Rather than creating any imbalance, such a move would allow the continued participation of women in the wage-labor force without any changes in the domestic sphere. Women could do all the housework during those hours which were non-existent for men anyway.

Or perhaps in keeping with the value we attach to individuality and free choice, we could manipulate our personal units of time like a work schedule in a liberal office. One might wish to love to the age of ten and have 200 hours a day to play. Or 50 hours a day, 28 days a week. Or...the possibilities are,...well, endless. One could spend an eternity contemplating the alternatives. But who has the time?

MOUNT HOLYOKE COLLEGE FALL DANCE CONCERT

Student dance concerts are often unpredictable, nervously energized events. In them, dance students try their hand at choreography, experimenting with ideas, movements, styles and other dancers. Dancers attempt to rise above their classroom experiences and deal with the more demanding challenges of performing--dancing dynamicly and evocatively, being at ease with the audience, performing with technical polish and brilliance.

These challenges are met with varying degrees of success--which accounts for the unpredictable, nervously quivering quality of most student dance concerts. Such was the case with Mt. Holyoke's Fall Dance Concert, presented Nov. 10 and 11 at Chapin Auditorium.

The program opened with a work entitled "!!!", choreographed by Jennifer Mencher to Vivaldi's "Concerto for Lute and Strings". As the title suggests, this dance is an exuberant one, full of springy leaps and dashes, rapid-fire movement combinations criss-crossing the stage diagonally, and balletic exclamation points--that is, quick, soaring jumps straight up into the air, a fluttering beat of the legs for added excitement, and a brief, energy-gathering landing period (the . in !) before shooting up into the air again. Although the movements were well-chosen to represent the idea of exuberance, there were times when the dancers succumbed to overkill, trying so hard to be energetic and exciting that the exuberance began to appear somewhat contrived.

"By the Sea", choreographed by Andrea Olsen with the ceaseless swish...wish... swash...wash lap of the ocean waves as music, left me feeling cold and empty. There were several compelling motifs in the dance--the black-shrouded, ominous figure which rocks rapidly from side to side while slowly making its way to the back of the stage, the shifting lines of dancers calling to mind the waves, the tortured, suffering solo danced by Peter Schmitz, and the eerie solo by Leigh Whiteman in which she rushes forward, hesitates, her eyes transfixed at a point somewhere above the audience, and her hands nervously rolling, fondling and fidgeting with an imaginary object, then rushes back, repeating the same sequence at a different perspective from the audience. Despite these motifs, the dance in its entirety is void and unsatisfying. Perghaps a few examples of the graphics of Edward Munch, which the program lists as the image source for the dance, would have provided those without knowledge of his work with an insight into what the dance was all about.

Two jazz pieces, "Anarres" and "Summer in the City", choreographed by Geri Lynn Peak and Wandamaria Black respectively, were both expletive of the sensual, caressing quality of jazz dance. One of the dancers, Jenny Coogan I believe, is particularly adept at capturing the subtleties of jazz music and phrases her movement in a way that illuminates these subtleties for the audience. She is also the most at ease before an audience, overcoming the stage fright which inhibited several of the other dancers.

A menacing, love-hate relationship is the theme in 'The Sisters', a modern ballet choreographed by Joe Orlando to the 'Sonata for Unaccompanied Cello, Opus 8', by Zoltan Kodaly. The dance opens with one sister vainly admiring herself in the hand mirror she holds up while brushing her long hair with the other hand. The other sister sits at the other side to the stage, at first staring into space, then turning to glare evilly at her sister. The dance that ensues between them is brimming with the passoins of love and hate, tenderness and aggression, vanity and jealousy. In addition to the sisters' facial expressions that alternate between bitter, piercing glances and (when the other isn't looking) tender, I-need-you expressions, there are the toe shoes that become darts, the fingers, spikes, the flailing arms, sticky nets to enmesh the adored enemy. This frightening, intense dance ends with the first sister again admiring herself in the mirror, only this time the other sister is slowly brushing her hair while the lights begin to dim until only a blue-white circle of light illuminates them. Then, pulling her sister's head back, the second sister slowly brings the brush-turned -dagger to the other sister's neck, the lights blacking out at that critical monment of truth.

Although the nervous jitters prevented some of the dances from realizing their full potential, Mt. Holyoke's Fall Dance Concert had several strong points that made it a concert worth seeing.

CITY STUDIO THEATRE

As the second offering of their 1977-1978 season, City Studio Theatre will present Preston Jones' THE LAST MEETING OF THE KNIGHTS OF THE WHITE MAGNOLIA. Opening November 11, the play will be performed Thursday, Friday and Saturday evenings at 8:00 until December 3.

THE LAST MEETING OF THE KNIGHTS OF THE WHITE MAGNOLIA is one of three plays in Preston Jones' TEXAS TRILOGY. The other plays are LU ANN HAMPTON LAVERTY OBERLANDER and THE OLDEST LIVING GRADUATE. The three plays are very new, only having appeared last season. The staff at CST selected THE LAST MEETING from the other two because of its uniqueness.

Directing the play is Philip Zweig, who recently stage managed CABARET BRECHT for CST. He is a graduate of Smith College, and holds a Masters'degree in playwriting. His play, HARI-KARI, was produced at the WPA Theatre in New York City in 1973. Mr. Zweig comments about the play:

"It's set in all-white male meeting house in Texas in 1962. In the '20's the club was the biggest around, and didn't need white sheets with cloaks to beat up Black men, like the Klu Klux Klan. The play revolves around the events in a single evening."

Mr. Zweig went on to comment about his concept for the play: "It's really very simple. I want people to leave the Theatre liking the characters, and feeling surprised that they do."

The cast of THE LAST MEETING OF THE KNIGHTS OF THE WHITE MAGNOLIA includes (alphabetically): JOHN ANDERSON, CHRIS HORTON, JOHN HUNT, RALPH INTORCIO, STEVE JIMENEZ, JIM METZLER and JAMIE NEWCOMB. The set is designed by Lynn Osborne, the lighting is by Ren Hinks, and the stage manager is Kathryn Quaintance.

Reservations may be made from 9:00-5:00, Monday through Friday by calling the Theatre at 584-3978.

Mr. Goodbar

LOOKING FOR MR. GOODBAR
Directed by: Richard Brooks
Cast: Diane Keaton, Richard Kiley
Tuesday Weld, and Richard Gere

Looking for Mr. Goodbar can at least be considered one thing: an unusal film for current American Cinema. It's a cutting edge for a style of screen writing which undoubtedly will continue to infiltrate commercial Hollywood productions for some years to come. This trend can be seen in films such as Nashville and Welcome to L.A., for these are films which rely heavily on characterization, and are for the most part devoid of structured plots. As we've seen through Altman's Nashville this can be a valuable experience for the audience with much to be learned from its many diverse characters and their careful integration. Goodbar narrows the concentration to one central character with many superficially depicted characters surrounding her. This, unfortunately, ends up being a film which can only be described as stereotyped, fragmented and somewhat difficult for the audience to construct a meaningful perspective about.

The film is about a young, female college student whose name is Teresa Dunn (Diane Keaton). She's the product of a strict Catholic upbringing and vividly fantasizes about and craves never-attained sexual experiences. While in school, she has her first physical relationship with an English professor. She seems to love him, but Terry is objectified as only a mistress by the professor. She graduates and the relationship ends. Terry becomes a teacher of deaf children and is sincerely interested in her students. With this job comes economic freedom and she moves away from the restrictive environment of her parent's home. Upon moving into her new environment she becomes involved in the comodicized single's nightlife scene. Through a series of one-night stands, we are shown that her personal life has become merely a quest for physical gratification. Even when a man becomes sincerely interested in her as a friend, she rejects him in order to continue her bar-hopping life style. She eventually finds herself dominated and intimidated by her macho, stud-like lovers. Terry is beaten and abused by one, and is ultimately murdered by another one of her pick-ups while he rapes her.

I have some complaints about this movie. First, stereotype images were relied on too heavily when showing some of the secondary characters. Gays were battered and sick, cocaine dealers were black and slick, social workers were frustrated idealists, etc. Brooks seemed to take the most common images from middle America and plugged them into his film. Goodbaralso seemed to be one of tha most non-integrated films I've ever seen. Characters and scenes would be shown without having any important reason except maybe to facilitate Keaton's role. As I have said before, this ruined the film's unity and confused the viewer in his/her response to the film. This, plus Tuesday Weld's very mediocre acting performance as Terry's sister, causes some major difficulties for the film.

There are some positive attributes in Goodbar. Brooks makes an attempt to show how our comodicized sex culture is objectifying people's relationshps with each other. He presents a world in which pornography and singles' bars beckon people to be more concerned with pleasure rather than creating it for others. He shows us a character whose first concepts about physical relationships are formed by what was most readily available to her. This information wasn't to be found in her puritanical home, but rather by what one saw on the street and in print. Brooks shows this media saturation by showing repeated images of the sex strips where Terry spent much of her time.

The film also shows how male domination over women still characterizes our society today. In almost every relationship which Terry enters with a male, she ends up in a clearly subserviant position. From her first encounter with the professor, to her last with her murderer, she ends up what the man wants her to be, whether it's by coercion or brute force. Unfortunately, I could imagine this statement being twisted and shaped into something which was not intended by some patriarchal viewer who will apply the gross double standard which prevails in many people's conceptions of sex roles today.

Goodbar, despite its problems, is not a film that should readily be cast aside. Keaton and Kiley offer brilliant performances, and this is something which should not be overlooked. The film is a step towards cinema which requires us to scrutinize our lifestyle, rather than being doped by the screen's image. It should cause Americans to reconsider our comodicized, objectifying sex culture and roles. The prospective viewer should take note of its mistakes, however, particularly the film's reliance on stereotypes for some of its characterization.

Hearts and Minds

Hearts and Minds, a documentary film about the U.S. involvement in Viet Nam, will be shown at 7:30 p.m. today in Franklin Patterson Hall at Hampshire College. This film is an enlightening look at the American military mentality in relation to its warped perce ion of the people of Viet Nam and is well worth seeing.

Vintage Bergman

Ingmar Bergman's Wild Strawberries will be shown at 8 p.m. on November 21, in Franklin Patterson Hall at Hampshire College. Wild Strawberries is about an old professor reconsidering his life as his death draws near. It's one of the most widely acclaimed movies of this world-renowned director.

A famous Republican newspaper ad:

A Chicken for Every Pot

THE Republican Party isn't a "Poor Man's Party:" Republican prosperity has erased that degrading phrase from our political vocabulary.

The Republican Party is equality's party—opportunity's party—democracy's party, the party of national development, not sectional interests—the impartial servant of every State and condition in the Union.

Under higher tariff and lower taxation, America has stabilized output, employment and dividend rates.

Republican efficiency has filled the workingman's dinner pail—and his gasoline tank besides—made telephone, radio and sanitary plumbing standard household equipment. And placed the whole nation in the silk stocking class.

During eight years of Republican management, we have built more and better homes, erected more skyscrapers, passed more benefactory laws, and more laws to regulate and purify immigration, inaugurated more conservation measures, more measures to standardize and increase production, expand export markets, and reduce industrial and human junk piles, than in any previous quarter century.

Republican prosperity is written on fuller wage envelops, written in factory chimney smoke, written on the walls of new construction, written in savings bank books, written in mercantile balances, and written in the peak value of stocks and bonds.

Republican prosperity has reduced hours and increased earning capacity, silenced discontent, put the proverbial "chicken in every pot." And a car in every backyard, to boot.

It has raised living standards and lowered living costs.

It has restored financial confidence and enthusiasm, changed credit from a *rich*man's privilege to a common utility, generalized the use of time-saving devices and released women from the thrall of domestic drudgery.

It has provided every county in the country with its concrete road and knitted the highways of the nation into a unified traffic system.

Thanks to Republican administration, farmer, dairyman and merchant can make deliveries in less time and at less expense, can borrow cheap money to re-fund exorbitant mortgages, and stock their pastures, ranges and shelves.

Democratic management impoverished and demoralized the railroads, led packing plants and tire factories into receivership, squandered billions on impractical programs.

Democratic mal-administration issued further billions on mere "scraps of paper," then encouraged foreign debtors to believe that their loans would never be called, and bequeathed to the Republican Party the job of mopping up the mess.

Republican administration has restored to the railroads solvency, efficiency and par securities.

It has brought the rubber trades through panic and chaos, brought down the prices of crude rubber by smashing monopolistic rings, put the tanner's books in the black and secured from the European powers formal acknowledgment of their obligations.

The Republican Party rests its case on a record of stewardship and performance.

Its Presidential and Congressional candidates stand for election on a platform of sound practice, Federal vigilance, high tariff, Constitutional integrity, the conservation of natural resources, honest and constructive measures for agricultural relief, sincere enforcement of the laws, and the right of all citizens, regardless of faith or origin, to share the benefits of opportunity and justice.

Wages, dividends, progress and prosperity say,

"Vote for Hoover"

A few years later...

RING BEFORE ENTERING

ILL AT EASE

Unexpectedly, an existential chasm thrust itself upon me. Taken by complete surprise, my first thought was panic, followed closely by confusion. Thrusting Chasms, I thought. It sounded like a new Vegas act or Hugh Hefner's summer cottage on the Hamptons. But there I was, paralyzed in the middle of a large city populated by hundreds of thousands of faceless people, thinking: I think that I think, but if I want to stop thinking I can't, because that is a thought. On the other hand, if I could sell my thoughts perhaps I might clear my head, settle down, open a bicycle shop near Lake George.

I wandered in the nameless city, a nonentity, a man with no past, no futrue, a shirt stained with catsup. I went to every bookstore I passed, hoping to find someone I knew, someone who might help me. The clerks thought I was trying to pick up girls and threw me out. The sky looked foreboding whereas before I had been thrown out of the bookstores, it merely looked threatening. A bad omen, I realized.

I sat down on a damp park bench and waited.. I didn't know for what or for whom. People walkd by me without a glance. The night inundated me with fear and an innoculation to prevent whooping cough. What does it all mean, I asked myself. My mind spun wildly. I placed ten dolars on black 27, but red 32 came up instead.

I stood. I sat. I stood again. A crowd gathered thinking I was doing a pantomime of a man on a seesaw. I collected some loose change, but nothing real, no exchange of love, trust, of a small home in the country.

I ran to a subway entrance, hoping someone would run up the cement stairs, recognize me, and run over to plant a tremendous kiss on my aching lips. But the hour was late and the subway was closed. I walked over to the all-night newsstand and leafed through the magazines. The first article my eyes hit was: Plague: You Are There. I fled.

The tree-tops swelled up in the fog looking at the world like asparagus. The chasm gave a sudden thrust. I hoped something would happen, anything, even tragic and terribly misguided. I thought my existence depended on it. When my wallet was taken at gunpoint I knew I was wrong.

Sadat to address Israeli parliament

Egyptian Foreign Minister Ismail Fahmi

CAIRO, Egypt [UPI] — President Anwar Sadat, denounced by his allies and deserted by members of his own cabinet, Friday accepted an invitation to go to Jerusalem this weekend to address the Israeli parliament.

"I am going," Sadat said upon his return from Damascus and futile talks to win approval of the trip from Syrian President Hafez Assad. "I always mean what I say."

In Jerusalem, Israeli Prime Minister Menahem Begin told a group of visiting U.S. congressmen that Sadat would arrive Saturday night, spend two nights in the King David Hotel, pray at Al Aqsa mosque Sunday morning and address the Knesset Sunday afternoon in either English or Arabic. Massive security precautions were ordered.

Within an hour of Sadat's return from Damascus, Ismail Fahmi, Sadat's pro-American foreign minister, resigned "because I feel that I can no longer carry out my duties and share the responsibilities under these circumstances."

Sadat first named Mohammed Mahmoud Riad, minister of state for foreign affairs, to succeed Fahmi, but Riad resigned as well in apparent protest over Sadat's visit.

Sadat then named a former professor and current executive on the Al Ahram newspaper, Butros Ghali, a Coptic Christian, to fill both posts.

Within hours of Sadat's acceptance, a bomb exploded at the Egyptian Embassy in Damascus. The Syrian government denounced the attack as a "cowardly act." There was no immediate report of damage or injuries.

Assad said after his meeting with Sadat he was "deeply hurt" over the Egyptian President's decision.

"During Sadat's visit to Damascus, the Syrian government tried to convince the Egyptian leader to change his mind, pointing out the dangers of his intended visit and its negative effects on the Arab cause," the Syrian statement said.

The Fatah, Palestinian guerrilla group, joined the denunciation. Thus far, only The issuing its first reaction to Sadat's visit, Sudan, Egypt's African neighbor to the South, has voiced support for Sadat's trip to Israel.

In Jerusalem, Begin said Sadat's visit would not interfere with efforts to reconvene the Geneva Middle East peace talks. Begin also touched on the opposition to Sadat's visit by Egypt's Arab allies.

"There have been some suspicions in the Arab world that we are trying to drive a wedge but this is not true," Begin said. "We shall be very glad to meet all the representatives of the neighboring Arab countries.

"I hope in the wake of this visit there will be other meetings," the Israeli Premier said. "I may go to Damascus. We don't want to divide the Arab camp."

Sadat and Begin planned to hold two rounds of talks — one after Sadat's prayers at Al Aqsa, the mosque where King Abdullah of Jordan was assassinated in 1951 in protest against his earlier meeting with Golda Meir, and again at a state dinner following Sadat's address to the Knesset.

Collins criticizes state reorg plan

By LAURA KENNEY
Collegian Staff

State Rep. James G. Collins, D-Amherst, last night criticized a plan now before the legislature that would group the state's 30 public Universities and colleges into five regional systems.

The plan formulated by Secretary of Educational Affairs Paul L. Parks and Governor Michael S. Dukakis includes the regrouping of the 30 systems into five regional systems, each having its own board of trustees as well as its own specialized area of study. For example, the western Massachusetts area may be one such region, with UMass-Amherst as the main campus specializing in liberal arts.

The present system consists of five boards of trustees, one each for UMass, the University of Lowell, Southeastern Massachusetts University, one board representing the ten state colleges, and one representing the 15 community colleges.

Collins spoke last night at the Campus Center before a small group. His speech was sponsored by the Student Center for Educational Research (SCER).

Collins' the "local boards would probably become defunct" as a result of too many inner conflicts, whereby the central board would gain power. He said he felt that "the problems of a regional plan would be myriad, in that it wouldn't provide for better management".

According to Collins, the Board of Higher Education is currently composed of several gubernatorial appointees as well as a representative from each of the five boards of trustees. Frequently there are serious conflicts among the segments, and each has its own legislators with whom the board members try to parley for funds for the respective institutions. "This lack of unity tends to keep the board a lot more powerless," Collins said.

Collins also disagreed with the specializing of regions. He said, "A certain degree of duplication (of programs at schools) isn't a bad thing," because resources must be available to people in all areas. Collins said specialization would destroy the University, and added "The Parks Plan doesn't deserve to pass".

There is at present a definite need to reorganize the Board of Higher Education, Collins said. "Everyone thinks that reorganization ought to take place, but everyone thinks that everyone needs to be reorganized except them," he said.

A select legislative commission is being established to study alternatives to reorganization; the commission will be composed of ten gubernatorial appointees, ten members of the Massachusetts House and five members of the State Senate. The senators have already been chosen; the House members should be selected within the next week, and the gubernatorial appointees should be designated by the end of December, Collins said. The commission will probably begin its work at the beginning of January, and should have results of its research by the end of 1979.

Collins said he "very much hopes" to be one of the House members on the commission. He has recommended to Dukakis that "he not appoint his appointees solely from the boards of trustees," because the general public, the voting citizens of the state, should be involved in the decision-making process.

"I recommended to the governor the appointment of students (to the board); I think the governor was very sensitive to that," Collins said. Collins added that advisory committees comprised of students, faculty, professional and non-professional staff would do a great deal of research for the commission. "These will be working groups, generating ideas," he said.

Collins said he would like to see reorganization heading in the direction of the schools becoming more far-reaching in the communities. He said, "The birth rate being off by so much in Massachusetts, if we don't begin to develop new clienteles, it's going to mean there'll be a conflict created between the public and private sectors.

"The first thing that needs to be settled in the commission is that the public and private sectors are co-equal institutions, because both systems will be affected (by the decline in the birth rate). It is very important for us to see reorganization at this point, done honestly and openly...we should not be afraid to look into the future," he said.

Drugs analyzed by state department

By ROB THAYER
Collegian Staff

Anonymously submitted drug samples were forwarded by Room to Move to the State Department of Public Health at UMass prior to 1973 to be analyzed, according to UMass physician Leroy Kendrew.

An official with a state agency who requested that his name be withheld, revealed that the arrangement was discontinued after an investigation by the Drug Enforcement Agency (DEA), which pressured the State Department of Public Health to end the testing. A member of Room to Move, a mental health organization at UMass, acknowledged that "the Feds put their influence down to end that practice".

Related story on Page 3.

In a telephone interview with the Collegian last night, Regional DEA Director Edward Cass would not confirm or deny the story from his office in Boston. "If that did indeed happen, I would not be inclined to tell you that," he said.

According to Dr. Kendrew, the arrangement between Room to Move and the State Department of Public Health was prompted because "we felt an obligation to let students know if they were in fact using drugs which were more harmful than what they thought they were buying." Kendrew, who came to UMass from a Springfield surgery practice to concentrate his studies on drug abuse, received the substance anonymously in a mailbox and turned them over to the state department of Public Health for analysis.

E. T. Mellor, who was associated with Room to Move during the period from 1970 to 1973 when the testing was conducted, acknowledged that a common discovery was the presence of PCP in marijuana samples.

PCP, or "angel dust", is addictive and can induce violence and paranoia after prolonged use.

Mellor, who said that "hundreds" of samples were tested while he was with Room to Move, added that THC tablets were "all PCP". THC is the active ingredient in marijuana. To my knowledge, those practices are no different today", Mellor said.

In October, an organization for marijuana legalization alleged privately that PCP was added systematically to marijuana by upper level distributors "to make it addicting." A New York Times article of Nova 10 blamed the PCP situation on "teenagers in search of strong, cheap highs."

DNA research risks discussed

By MARY WYATT
Collegian Staff

Risk assessment factors of recombinant DNA research were highlighted when zoology prof. Bruce Levin spoke to a crowd of 100 at Morrill Auditorium yesterday.

Levin spoke of the value of recombinat DNA research as a "useful tool, whose utilization in drug production may be realized in the very near future."

Recombinant DNA (deoxyribonucleic acid) research attempts to piece together DNA particles from different organisms and transplant them into living cells.

Although Levin said he doesn't see DNA experimentation as a "violation of basic biological bylaws" and stands "in favor of recombinant DNA research," he pointed out some problems associated with risk assessment.

"There is a likelihood of contaminating existing populations with recombinant DNA and also a likelihood of forming pathogens. On theoretical grounds, this is highly unlikely," Levin said.

He pointed out that it is possible that recombinant DNA experiments have occurred naturally and may even have been cloned. "Just because these experiments have occurred in the past, how do we know they are safe? I don't believe these theoretical arguments should be considered," he said.

"There is a definite need for more research on whether or not it is possible for recombinant DNA to become a pathogen."

Levin said, "There is a definite need for more research on whether or not it is possible for recombinant DNA to become a pathogen. This is the kind of risk assessment experiment that should be done."

"It is highly unlikely for a bacterium producing insulin to affect us, but I would like to see that demonstrated. I believe there is a need to do these risk assessment experiments and I don't believe they have been done yet," Levin said.

Levin also discussed the levels of physical and biological containment demanded by the National Health Institute. He said, "The host cells that are used in recombinant DNA experiments are genetically weakened so there is no chance of its making it in a natural environment. They are 'loser genes.' They are laboratory dependent strains of E. Coli.

Also, a plasmic is used in cloning that cannot be readily transmitted into another cell. They are only able to survive in highly specialized cells not found in the natural population," he said.

A rally calling for a U.S. economic embargo of South Africa will be held tomorrow on Amherst Common. According to Stan Kinard, coordinator of the Office of Third World Affairs and a member of the New Africa Steering Committee, the rally "Will bring attention to all issues concerning South Africa."

Kinard said in addition to the economic embargo, the demonstration would address Amherst College's refusal to divest stock in U.S. corporations in South Africa, as well as the First National Bank of Amherst's South African investments.

Earlier this fall, the Amherst College Board of Trustees voted not to divest $20 million worth of stocks in U.S. corporations with operations in South Africa. At that time Amherst President John Ward explained that the trustees thought they could affect change through the corporations, rather than "washing one's hands" completely of the problem.

Trustees at UMass, Hampshire, and Smith College have recently decided to sell all such stocks.

Kinard also said there would be discussion of recent incidents in South Africa, such as the death of black leader Steve Biko and the imprisonment of political leaders and journalists.

The demonstration is being co-sponsored by the New Africa House Steering Committee and the Committee for the Liberation of South Africa.

Kinard said there will be three speakers including Prof. Michael Thelwell and Dovi Afesi both of the UMass Afro-American Studies department, and Nana Sheshebe a UMass graduate student who is a native of South Africa.

After the speeches, the rally will move inside to the Red Room of Converse Hall at Amherst College where the film "The Last Grave at Dimbaza", will be shown.

Kinard said organizers hope for a large turnout, and student organizations in colleges throughout New England have been contacted by the organizers.

Architect discusses ecology

Planning the ecological environment was the topic of a short film and lecture yesterday by internationally acclaimed landscape architect Ian McHarg in the Campus Center Auditorium.

McHarg began by saying, "All evolution is a creative process dependent on energy." He told the crowd of over 500 that the evolution theories of Darwin and Lawrence Henderson are important for landscape architects and regional planners to understand.

Darwin's theory states that surviving organisms are fit for the environment while Henderson's says that the actual world contains an infinite number of environmental opportunities. McHarg said "The requirement of every system is to adapt the environment to the most fit members."

McHarg also discussed landscape planning with regard to culture. "Cultural adaptation is another way of saying planning," McHarg said. He described a good planner as a person who is able to formulate alternative forms of action, predict consequences, and understand costs and benefits. "Understanding people's needs and desires and determining a group's value system is another important task of the planner," he said.

McHarg's speech was interrupted frequently by jokes and anecdotes. He described a recent job designing a highway bypass for the state of Delaware saying, "The gratifying feeling of screwing people who are screwing you and getting paid for it was all I got out of the Delaware experience."

Following the lecture, an 11-minute film was shown describing a proposed institution in Iran which would include a zoo, botanical garden, planetarium, aquarium, exhibits, and replicas of different geographical environments. The institution is being designed to help Iranians learn more about their environment.

Bromery's assistant appointed to council

By GAYLE YOUNG
Collegian Staff

Michael A. West, assistant to UMass Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery, will be appointed by Gov. Michael S. Dukakis to the state Developmental Disability Council. The appointment was confirmed yesterday by William Geary, the governor's appointment secretary.

West will represent the public in the council which helps formulate and implement programs for the disabled using federal funds. Federal law states there must be such a panel in each state receiving these federal funds.

Former Assistant Dean of Students, West has been assistant to the Chancellor for the past 18 months.

Part of his present duties include implementing federal legislation for the handicapped at UMass Amherst.

"I've been heavily involved working with the handicapped on this campus," West said last night. "I guess they wanted someone with that background at this time."

West said that council members represent various Massachusetts disability agencies but that he would be representing the public on the council of 20 members. West was informed of his appointment yesterday morning.

Benjamin Ricci, professor of exercise science in the physical education department, is also a member of the council.

CC soliciting now restricted

By DEBBIE GRAFF
Collegian Staff

The Campus Center Board of Governors last night passed a policy amendment preventing groups not associated with Recognized Student Organizations from soliciting donations from tables on the Campus Center Concourse.

The action came after Campus Center Building Operations Supervisor Dudley Bridges told the board he has received almost 50 telephone complaints about a table being operated this past week in the concourse by the U.S. Labor Party.

The 90 minute meeting was attended by 30 people, including members of the labor party.

The amendment reads "There shall be no buying or selling of goods or services, and no soliciting or accepting of donations" by groups not associated with RSO.

The amendment will be added to the present policy defining rules governing the use of concourse tables.

U.S. Labor Party member John McCarthy said the only board co-chairperson Michael Pill "ranted and raved at the table" is because the presence of the labor party on the UMass campus creates competition for Pill's own philosophies.

"I am quite shook by what McCarthy said and would rather not dignify it with a comment," said Pill.

NE darkroom funding debated

By MICHELE BIAGLIONI
Collegian Staff

Northeast Area Government last night debated the long awaited funding for a Northeast Area darkroom, before allocating funds and naming a director. In its infancy, the darkroom has been waiting allocations for a year, and has been retarded in its development without the sufficient funding.

NEAG Treasurer Jeff Shapiro argued that the allotment of $100 would be inadequate to make the room functional and serviceable. NEAG co-president Diane Lauricello considered the money essential for the darkroom's organization to be operative by next semester, and indicated that NEAG had given both the Women's Center and the Anacoana Center money earlier this semester. The members of NEAG voted to give the Darkroom the money, and approved of Coleen King as Acting Director.

The proposed renovation project for Knowlton House to facilitate handicapped persons was discussed because of its possible future impact which may necessitate the relocation of the darkroom. NEAG decided to support the darkroom in its present location, as the renovation project is more than a year away.

In attempts to renovate the area, a proposed light for the basketball court next to Thatcher dorm was discussed. Residents accepted the idea with the stipulation that the light automatically turn off late at night to decrease noise and activity during late hours. If the request was granted, the University Resource Center would have set a precedent by which students may ask for lighting of the University's five other basketball courts.

The Resource Center turned down the request for the renovation of the stairs leading to Worcester Dining Commons. Their decision was based on the current policy of matching all renovation projects with subsequent accommodations for the handicapped.

Policy on heroin and marijuana characterized by distortion

This article, the final in a series of three on psychoactive drugs, analyzes the relationship between heroin and marijuana, and the medicinal applications of marijuana.

By ROB THAYER
Collegian Staff

Official policy on marijuana and heroin has been characterized by distorted priorities. Government informational networks in the 1960s lumped marijuana and heroin together as "dangerous drugs," implying at one point that marijuana was also addicting.

News analysis

The effect of that misinformation resulted in many individuals who found marijuana to be distorted in drug literature, assuming that the same would hold true for heroin. The extreme example of distorted priorities on the "cannabis-heroin issue," of course, was the Vietnam war.

The relative effects of marijuana and alcohol have also been clouded by misinformation. The contradiction here stems from alcohol's status as society's drug of choice. Until recently, the popular impression of marijuana, manifested in our media and legal apparatus, has been that it is more harmful than alcohol.

But more recently, the tremendous volume of literature on marijuana is making lies out of forty years of official policy on the subject. Despite abundant literature attesting to its usefulness in treating chronic anxiety, depression, migraine headaches, menstrual cramps, glaucoma, asthma, addiction, and its use in childbirth, marijuana continues to be ignored.

One of the worst effects of relegating a drug to black market status is that no "quality control" can be maintained. U.S. street heroin is often "cut" with substances which may account for many deaths presently attributed to "heroin overdose."

The removal of marijuana from the official "Pharmacopea" relegated it to what Mr. Harold "Doc" Humes has termed "the no man's land between medicine and politics." Humes, author of two best selling novels and co-founder of the Paris Revue, claims that he has developed effective procedures for the de-toxification of heroin and amphetamine addicts, using a combination of Shiatsu (or accupressure) massage and medical grade hashish, a marijuana derivative.

The Indian Hemp Commission Report of 1898, one of the most extensive studies ever conducted on marijuana, made specific reference to the use of cannabis in the detoxification of narcotics addicts. The eminent Harvard scholar Dr. Lester Grinspoon, in a December 1969 cover story in Scientific American, also referred to the use of marijuana for de-tox purposes. "Curiously," he added, "these promising results have not been followed up ... "

A self-defined "dissident scholar," Humes began to explore the relationship between marijuana and heroin after the dramatic increase in addiction in the 1960s. The research of Mr. Humes into the "no-man's land between medicine and politics" has resulted in his conviction that "every intelligence agency in the world uses heroin addicts as part of their armoretum." Humes claims that "the use of narcotics in clandestine warfare is as old as warfare itself."

Late in 1967, at the instigation of persons later identified by Italian officials as CIA agents, Humes' "crashpad clinic" in Rome, Italy was disbanded by Italian police after he was lured out of the city on an invitation to a bogus medical conference on the medicinal applications of marijuana. According to Humes, the raid occurred because of the 125 addicts he de-toxified, about forty had "some bona fide connection with an intelligence organization of one kind or another." According to one former patient, a British intelligence agent, Mr. Humes had been "cutting the strings on their puppets."

In Rome, considered by many to be "a battlefield of the Cold War" in the sixties, Mr. Humes claimed that "the practice was to recruit some of the high risk agents and operatives from the addicted population and use the drug as a kind of leash or chokehold on the agent."

In a meeting with Gov. Dukakis' counsel in May of this year to determine the status of an attempt by the State of New Jersey to extradite him, Mr. Humes discussed the difficulties he has encountered with his detoxification method in a nation where cannabis is still regarded as a "dangerous substance."

Humes claims that the New Jersey charges, which originated in 1973 and include marijuana possession as well as assault on a police officer while armed, represent "flat out lying in the courtroom." Those charges were re-activated this spring and prompted the May meeting with Gov. Dukakis' attorney. The Governor's office denied Humes' request that the extradition effort be resisted by the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, but he has yet to be picked up at his Cambridge apartment.

The usefulness of cannabis and massage in medicine go beyond the de-toxification of addicts. Variations of these techniques are useful in relief of all conditions dependent on anxiety and tension. Most recently, Mr. Humes demonstrated the usefulness of the technique in childbirth to achieve a painless delivery of his son, born on July 4th of this year.

Mr. Humes will arrive at UMass this morning and is scheduled to speak at 12:20 p.m. in Hasbrouck Auditorium.

The medical profession, in its failure to provide more than a superficial system of cures for this anxiety-ridden society, has perhaps failed to recognize the human spirit altogether.

The time has come for us to incorporate into our system of cures certain substances which are, in effect, political exiles from the medicine cabinet.

This concludes the series on psychoactive drugs.

New trustee

The name of the new UMass Board of Trustee member is expected to be announced today. The new trustee will replace Carolyn Rowlands, who resigned from the board last month protesting Gov. Michael S. Dukakis' increasing control of the board. According to William Geary, the governor's appointments secretary, the new trustee will be from the western part of the state.

Southwest election results

Bruce Aronson was elected Southwest Assembly Vice-President in yesterday's special election. Aronson captured 258 of the 966 total votes.

According to Southwest Election Committee Co-Chairperson Joni Mersky, approximately 18 per cent of Southwest residents voted. Mersky said this was a "good" turnout, considering the special election.

Peter Torkildsen finished second with 239 votes; Jimmy Rosenberg, third with 230 votes; and Tim Condon, fourth with 158 votes.

Interim president visits

Recently-appointed UMass Interim President Franklin K. Patterson is scheduled to meet with UMass administrators and possibly student leaders here today, as part of a two-day visit to the Amherst area. Tomorrow Patterson will attend inauguration ceremonies for Hampshire College President Adelle Smith-Simmons. Patterson helped found Hampshire as its first president from 1966 to 1971.

Patterson was appointed by the university Board of Trustees earlier this month to serve as president until a permanent successor to President Robert C. Wood takes over. Wood steps down in January.

A University spokesman said Patterson plans a low-key visit to the campus.

Patterson currently holds the honorary position as the University's Frank L. Boyden Professor at the UMass-Boston campus.

Guardian reporter speaks on international solidarity

By KELLEY BROWN
Collegian Staff

Wilfred Burchett, long-time radical correspondent for the New York Guardian newspaper, spoke on international solidarity among Third World revolutionary movements at Hampshire College yesterday afternoon.

Before a crowd of more than 200, Burchett relied on his 40 years of experience reporting on national liberation movements in China, Vietnam and South Africa to provide a first hand account of how revolutionary movements lend support to each other.

Burchett began by telling the story of his experience at the battle of Dien Bein Phu in Vietnam in May 1954. He related how he saw hundreds of Algerian P.O.W.s, formerly conscripts in the French army, being trained for guerilla warfare by the Viet Minh. Burchett went on to point out that armed struggle began in Algeria in November of 1954, and the Algerians trained in Vietnam emerged as some of the top leaders of the Algerian liberation movement.

Burchett travelled to the newly independent Algeria in the early 1960's and told the audience that he saw it bloom into a major base to "help anyone really fighting colonial powers."

As independence spread throughout the continent of Africa, other countries, such as Tanzania and Zambia, became territorial bases for movements in Angola and Mozambique. Burchett, during his visit to Angola and Mozambique last year, found that they in turn were providing material and political support to the movements in Zimbabwe (Rhodesia), Namimbia (South-West Africa) and South Africa.

Using examples from Vietnam and Mozambique, Burchett went on to point out that within the theory of "peoples war" the decision to begin armed struggle is never made lightly and only after all other avenues have been exhausted.

He stressed that only deep roots among the people and intense political preparation can insure the success of armed struggle. Burchett cited a document written by Ho Chi Minh in 1944 which stated that military action should only be taken with its political effects foremost in mind and using guerilla tactics at all times.

Burchett concluded with an optimistic report on the current situations and prospects for the national liberation movements in Southern Africa.

Ramones introduce 'punk rock' to UMass

By JIM PAULIN
Collegian Staff

Punk Rock made its grand UMass debut at the Hatch Wednesday night, and juding from the way the crowd reacted to the Ramones and Willie Loco, the "New Wave" of rock music has hit this campus like a tsunami, a monster tidal wave.

As if it were a Rockefeller conspiracy, a press release from the Revolutionay Student Brigade national office published in the Collegian last Wednesday by Peter Kracht claims that "we are told to buckle under, dig into the books, scramble like hell for the faintest chance of success (whatever that is) and in our spare time drown ourselves in punk rock ... "

There is no evidence that the UMass punks took their marching and pogo dancing orders from Rocky Wednesday night. They were without a doubt though, drowning themselves in the new wave, dancing madly in front of the huge tub shaped speakers, waking up yesterday morning with live Punk still reverberating in their ears.

Call it the New Wave, or call it the new nihilism. Call it stylized grossness, offensiveness, absusiveness and the glorification of anti-social behavior in general. Punk recalls Alice Cooper pretending to hang himself on stage, the raunchiness of Frank Zappa, the sexuality of James Brown and Mick Jagger, and Jim Morrison of the Doors masturbating on stage in Miami.

The suggestion that the English Punk band, the Sex Pistols, are the fathers of Punk sent the Ramones' tempers through the ceiling.

"Our first album was out before the Sex Pistols were even together," said Tommy, drummer for the Ramones. "We're the reason the Sex Pistols exist," he added.

He went on to denounce the Sex Pistols as a band that never performs, and a band that has risen to fame only because of a lot of hype and a "loud mouth manager."

According to concert promoter Bonnie Levitan, co-chairperson of the Union Program Council, the concert was a success considering that it was held on a Wednesday night and the Ramones are not really a big name act. Attendance was approximately 450 according to Levitan.

Regarding the future of Punk Rock here, Levitan said she had heard that many people enjoyed the show. "It (the turnout) shows that people are interested in seeing what it's (Punk Rock) like," she said.

Logic, language, mind topic of second talk

Professor Barbara Partee will present the second talk in this year's Chancellor's Lecture Series at UMass on Monday, Nov. 21, at 8 p.m. in the Campus Center Auditorium.

Her talk is entitled "Logic, Language, and the Mind." Prof. Partee has recently returned from a year as visiting fellow at the Center for Advanced Study in the Behavioral Sciences at Stanford University.

Partee began her education in mathematics at Swarthmore and completed her Ph.D. with Noam Chomsky at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology in 1965. She joined the faculty of the Linguistics department at the University of California at Los Angeles the same year and remained there until appointed full professor in Linguistics and in Philosophy at UMass in 1973.

The Chancellor's Lecture Series, founded in 1974, serves as a means of recognizing distinguished members of the faculty of the University. Each participant in the series is awarded the Chancellor's Medal, the highest honor bestowed on individuals who have rendered exemplary service to the University.

News in Brief

Flight attendants prepare to strike

WASHINGTON [AP] — A flight attendants union said yesterday it is preparing to strike United Airlines at midnight tonight in a dispute that could ground the nation's biggest airline over the Thanksgiving holiday.

Patricia D. Robertson, president of the Association of Flight Attendants, said there "has not been enough progress in talks at this point," between the union and the company to avert a walkout.

A strike "appears likely" Ms. Robertson said, advising that "people with reservations on United may want to make backup arrangements on other airlines."

Despite the union's statement, federal mediators said contract talks were continuing. "We are still optimistic that an agreement can be reached before the deadline," said mediator Robert Harris.

Five million 'chuck' cigarettes

(United Press International) — Hopefully, the Great American Smokeout inspired 5 million people to spend a fidgety and uncomfortable 24 hours without caving in to their cigarette addiction.

That was the number the American Cancer Society estimated to have chucked cigarettes yesterday for the coast-to-coast day of no smoking.

"And we know that if 5 million people can give up smoking for a single day, 20 per cent of the total number have a good chance of giving up cigarettes for good," said Jack Landers, director of the Cancer Society's San Francisco chapter.

In California, where no-smoking day was first proclaimed last year, anti-tobacco activists observed the occasion by circulating petitions for a state Clean Indoor Air Initiative.

If enough signatures are obtained to qualify the measure for next November's ballot, Californians will vote on whether to impose $50 fines on persons, smoking in most offices, factories and businesses.

In Detroit, two dozen persons threw cigarette packs into a fire smoldering in a drum while lunch hour office workers paused to watch a couple of minutes before moving on.

Mistrial declared in obscenity trial

KANSAS CITY, Kan. [AP] — A mistrial was declared yesterday in the obscenity trial of Al Goldstein, publisher of Smut and Screw magazines, when a federal court jury said it was unable to agree on a verdict.

The jury of seven women and five men had deliberated nearly 14 hours over three days before deciding it could not reach an agreement in the case involving the New York publisher, a former partner and their publishing company.

Alvin Goldstein, 41, and former partner James L. Buckley, 33, of Stockbridge, Mass., had been charged with illegally mailing into Kansas 11 copies of the allegedly obscene tabloids.

Also named in the charges was their publishing house, Milky Way Productions Inc., which is based in New York.

Scientists cite nuclear dangers

BOSTON [UPI] — The United States by the year 2000 "might expect close to 15,000 accident-induced fatalities" related to nuclear power plants, the Union of Concerned Scientists predicted in a report released yesterday.

In a report on atomic power plant safety, the Cambridge, Mass. based coalition of scientists and engineers also said "there may be a one per cent chance of a major accident that would kill nearly 100,000 people." Previous reports have understated the risk of nuclear disaster due to sabotage, the UCS report said.

The non-profit UCS — which has an estimated 45,000 supporting members nationwide — said most of the victims from such accidents would die from "cancers caused by exposure to damaging levels of radiation".

The study is a critical examination of the Reactor Safety Study released in 1975 under the auspices of the Nuclear Regulatory Commission. That study was headed by Dr. Norman Rasmussen of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology and is commonly referred to as the Rasmussen Report.

"With good luck the nuclear power program might never have major accidents that even approach this level of devastation," said MIT professor Henry W. Kendall, who headed the UCS project.

The UCS study is critical of the manner in which the Rasmussen Report covered possible nuclear plant disasters due to sabotage.

Mayors attend leadership seminar

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. [UPI] — Raleigh, N.C., mayor elect Isabella Cannon says a leadership seminar for newly elected mayors at Harvard University's John F. Kennedy Institute of Politics will teach her what every young mayor should know.

She is 73 years old.

Mrs. Cannon is attending a five-day intensive course to help newly elected mayors organize themselves for upcoming administrations.

She's known in Raleigh as "the little old lady with tennis shoes." But at 73, old is hardly the way to describe her.

A widow, Mrs. Cannon decided to run for mayor of North Carolina's capital city one hour before the filing deadline.

"Some friends asked me to come over that night," she said. "We talked about my running."

When the white-haired, bespectacled woman arrived at an early morning breakfast yesterday she became the center of attraction.

Black Affairs

Read this!

As we know — or as we should know — the demonstration on South Africa is this Saturday, tomorrow, at 1:00, on the Amherst Commons. Every effort has been made to invite people from the New England area to this protest. I, along with others, have been consistently trying for the last two weeks to get our student newspaper, the Collegian, to advertise the protest.

The demonstration is to ask for an economic U.S. boycott. There will be teachers and professors speaking on history, economics, violence, the view of the other African countries on the situation in South Africa.

It upsets me to know that the Collegian, our host paper would deliberately not print a few printed articles on South Africa, and our Demonstration. Advertisements of the protest have only been in the Black Affairs section, and in Nummo News. This may give the impression that this demonstration is exclusively Black.

That is untrue. Liberal or moderate whites were also arrested and probably subject to torture, although I doubt if any were killed as were non-whites. We are inviting everyone, people of all types and colors to learn about South Africa. This is not a lot of half crazed radicals who want to ventilate raw emotions and make progression look sick. This is a well organized, well planned protest designed to be completely informative and to encourage other schools to do the same.

What bothers me about the Collegian is the fact that they know about the race killings, about children being killed, about the type of protest this will be on South Africa, yet still refused to print anything telling of this Demonstration. They know how worthy and qualitative it will be, but have even lied to some of us to avoid printing our press releases. In view of nature of the sick racism in South Africa and in the sight of the thousands of innocent and dead people, and even children over there, I believe the Collegian has made one of the greatest mistakes it ever has made, or ever will make.

The inhumanity happening in South Africa is continuing. The latest reports told of imprisoning children and destroying thousands of black homes. We are having the protest for people to learn about the situation there. Whites and Third World peoples have sincerely worked on this to make it effective. If it is effective the way it should be, it will be covered by the main news medias in Boston and New York, and other schools will be encouraged to do this once at least, to ask for an economic divestment of stocks in South Africa.

The U.S. has 1.5 billion dollars invested in South Africa, where non-white people can be killed by hundreds or thousands by stubborn, ignorant racist with technical weapons.

The protest was prompted by the October 19th crackdown by S. African government, and the death of Steven Biko, the founder of the black consciousness movement in South Africa.

Billy Taylor at FAC

Billy Taylor in previous performance at UMass.

Billy Taylor, the jazz pianist, composer, arranger, teacher, actor and the first black music director of a major television series (The David Frost Show) will be appearing at the Fine Arts Center on Monday, November 24, at 8 p.m. Taylor will be making two appearances, one with the UMass Jazz Workshop and one with his own group.

During the Forties and the Fifties, Taylor performed with such greats as Billie Holiday, Dizzy Gillespie, Coleman Hawkins, Roy Eldridge, Charlie Parker and others.

He received his doctorate in Musicology from the University of Massachusetts and he has taught and lectured at such schools as the Manhattan School of Music, C.W. Post, Columbia, and Yale University.

Born in Greenville, North Carolina, Taylor began his music career at the age of seven in Washington, D.C. He has written more than 300 songs, a dozen books on the art of Jazz and has made over 30 recordings.

In the 1960's, in addition to his nightclub and concert appearances Taylor became a popular disc jockey on Harlem's WLIB. A few years later he became general manager of WLIB, one of New York's only black owned radio stations.

Taylor has become one of the elder statesmen of Jazz, serving as a member of the National Council on the Arts, the New York State Commission on Cultural Resources, the board of the American Society of Composers and Publishers (ASCAP) and the New York City Cultural Council.

Taylor also has his own corporation, Billy Taylor Productions, which produces radio and television commercials, records and concerts. He was a charter member of the Inner City Broadcasting Corporation as well as the Black Communications Corporation.

Billy Taylor promises to be a dynamic performer. Come see him at the Fine Arts Center on Monday.

Appeals for 'Wilmington 10'

Most Americans probably did not think of their own country's "Wilmington 10" when they heard the Amnesty International had won a Nobel Peace Prize this fall for its campaign against oppression around the world. But Amnesty's campaign includes efforts to free the Wilmington 10 in the democratic United States as well as the political prisoners under authoritarian regimes in other countries. Now that new legal appeals have been filed for the Wilmington 10, American authorities should seize the opportunity to prove once more that, in a free society, the mistakes of the justice system can be corrected.

New evidence has emerged since the controversial 1972 conviction of the Wilmington 10 (the Rev. Benjamin Chavis, eight black high school students, and one white woman poverty worker) on charges of arson and conspiracy during racial turmoil in Wilmington, North Carolina. Three witnesses have recanted previous testimony against them. Yet in a post-conviction hearing last spring a North Carolina superior court judge denied a new trial after being given evidence that the main state witness had lied. Meanwhile, the woman has been paroled, but the nine men remain in prison serving terms of from 20 to 34 years.

The new appeals are based in part on the contention that the judge's order against a new trial appears to have been written by the state attorney general without notice to defense counsel. The defense is supported by the United Church of Christ, for whose Commission on Racial Justice the Rev. Mr. Chavis had gone to Wilmington in the first place.

Clearly this matter has to be resolved in a manner that not only is fair but is perceived to be fair. Though a federal grand jury has heard evidence, Attorney General Griffin Bell has said the Justice Department will not get into the case, at least until state procedures have been completed. It is important for the process to move ahead in line with President Carter's comment at a news conference last June that he wanted to see justice done in the case.

Duke for pres

kevin knobloch

News item: Massachusetts Governor Michael Dukakis resigned as governor today and joined the candidates vying for the state's top administrative position, president of the University of Massachusetts. The post will become vacant when the current president Robert C. Wood steps down Jan. 1.

Although the above item is fictional, it would certainly make good sense for the governor. As president of UMass, Dukakis would be taking a step up in the state bureaucracy. His new job would not only pay better by some $11,789, but would include the use of a state car (Dukakis currently takes the subway to work at the State House each morning) and $20,000 in "discretionary funds," to be used much like expense account monies, as he saw fit.

And, if the president's spot didn't pan out, he might be wise to consider one of the chancellor positions. The three chancellors also receive large "discretionary allowances" in addition to their salaries. However, it might be more accurate to call the $25,000 that Boston Campus Chancellor Carlo L. Golino brings home along with his $50,850 per year salary, "financial aid." And it is certainly financial aid at its best.

Out of his $25,000 expense account, Golino receives $800 per month to help curb his housing costs. Why someone making 50 grand a year needs help paying his rent mystifies me. I barely receive that much in financial aid each year to assist me with housing costs and I don't have the benefit of a salary.

While I had always known that the salaries of the university's top administrators were high, I had never suspected that the students were subsidizing exorbitant expense accounts to assist them with the cost of housing, transportation and entertaining dignitaries, whatever they may be.

For those still interested in the capitalist-socialist rhetoric battle, the publication of the salaries and accompanying fringe benefits of the president and chancellors at UMass is certainly a point for socialism. The $16,500 carried home by Worcester Chancellor Roger J. Bulger in "discretionary funds" is more than the total income of several large families I know who buy their own car and pay their mortgage out of that limited salary, as well as pay the taxes that make Bulger's $50,850 salary possible. Socialism, go to the head of the class.

My favorite quote in Monday's Collegian came from the lips of Golino, who reportedly said it "was nobody's business" whether he reported his allowances to the Internal Revenue Service. I wonder who the hell he thinks makes those allowances possible. Golino's $25,000 comes from a discretionary account, which is accrued from the investment of student fee-based trust funds. Since Golino is spending student money, in a sense, it becomes my business if he is suspected of misusing or manipulating funds given to him for university-related purposes.

I don't want to sound like the perennial critic of state politics, but I was surprised to hear that earlier this year, Worcester students were treated to a clam bake and party at the dean's house, at a cost of $1,926, taken from discretionary funds. The day Chancellor Bromery invites me to his castle on the hill for a bologna sandwich is the day I'll stop complaining about long check cashing lines or the unfair and possibly illegal campus center fee. I have no qualms about high living, but when it's on the backs of others, in the form of rising tuition, housing and food costs and student fees, I can't condone it. A day care center I'll pay for, a clambake for a minute few, no.

It might be better politics for the university's administrators to voluntarily pay for their housing and automobiles out of their more than adequate salaries and perhaps pass on the savings to the students in the form of financial aid. Although I realize that the total money saved by such action would be minimal, it just might restore a little faith in the student populace concerning the university's role.

The ideology of contempt

bob melia

Although a casual observer would never know it, we are here to learn how to think, and think critically — not just to absorb facts. To reflect seriously on a complex subject we must be able to ignore myriad irrelevant facts and use the power of abstraction to select and focus on the most important aspects.

But this is only half the problem, because before we can abstract the islands of importance out of the sea of irrelevancies we must first decide what is important. To do this we need a world-view that enables us to order facts and experiences and decide which are relevant; in short we need an ideology.

Consequently commentaries like Bill Riordan's of Nov. 14, in which he said that ideology simply obscures issues, are ludicrous. Riordan enumerates four problems; overpopulation, resources, food and abortion, and asks us to consider them without an ideological base and in isolation from each other. A moment's reflection, however, will reveal that each of the problems Riordan mentions is closely related to the others, and that an attempt to solve any of them without incorporating all of them into the solution is absurd. Without an ideology to tie things together, Riordan's taking of everything in isolation reminds one of nothing so much as the proverbial blind men trying to describe an elephant.

But if Riordan's lack of ideology leaves him intellectually impoverished, no ideology is nonetheless preferable to a harmful ideology. Perhaps the nearest example of this is the morally bankrupt ideology of ex-Student Attorney General Paul Yanowitch.

Yanowitch, as you may know, had his appointment to the Academic Matters council rescinded Wednesday by the Student Senate. In fairness to Yanowitch, the precise procedural accusations against him were never proved, and even if they were, they were not of a nature serious enough to warrant his recall.

Yanowitch was recalled because of his ideology; his politics. When asked if he would abide by policies which the Senate passed, Yanowitch replied, "not necessarily." The remainder of his answer made clear that he would follow Senate policy only if he damn pleased.

The importance of Yanowitch's attitude is this. The Senate, like it or not, is our supreme legislative body and the only body which represents students from all residential areas. Therefore, insofar as there exists a student interest and student will, that will is embodied and manifested in Senate policy, and Yanowitch's refusal to abide by Senate policy evidences a contempt for his fellow students.

But if Yanowitch holds students in contempt, he certainly doesn't extend that sentiment to faculty. The chairpersons and many members of certain Senate committees wanted Yanowitch recalled because, they said, Yanowitch consistently sided with the faculty. Our sharp-nosed legal eagle has thus revealed himself to be a brown-nosed legal beagle.

But Yanowitch's actions should not surprise anyone who reads his Collegian columns. Writing on Robert Wood's efforts to improve this university Yanowitch says "his success or failure is irrelevant; what is of importance is that a certain level of decorum and civility is maintained." Spoken like a true sycophant. Those of us who have endured cramped living conditions and suffered through overcrowded courses taught by uninspiring professors would probably hesitate to characterize efforts at improving UMass as "irrelevant."

But apparently there are not Yanowitch's concerns. Apparently he would rather maintain civility than advocate student's interests. And if regularly fetching beer for the faculty members on the Academic Matters committee is decorous, Yanowitch is more than happy to serve. Some of us think he should be serving students.

But the Senate could not justify spending nearly an entire meeting on Yanowitch if the issue did not have more important implications. And I would not waste your time and mine writing solely on Yanowitch. As Yanowitch himself said in one of his columns, "The borders of good taste are tangible."

The issue here is not simply Yanowitch's actions. The issue is whether we should demand that those students who serve on committees should have an attitude and an ideology which is respectful of their peers' rights and interests. This does not mean that we must all think the same way and agree on all the important issues. But it does mean that we must all incorporate into our personal ideologies a basic respect for the intelligence and interests of our friends and classmates.

Judged on these grounds Bill Riordan may be excused for intellectual imcompetence, but Paul Yanowitch stands condemned.

Time for Seabrook occupiers

By S. TRACY

Political repression has become a reality to the anti-nuclear movement. Up to 214 people face jail sentences in New Hampshire this year for the Seabrook occupations.

Last week, four occupiers were convicted in jury trials in Superior court. Through manipulations of the judges, they never had a chance for a true defense of their actions. The jury function, as far back as common law of England, is one of mercy. Yet the judges refused to tell the juries they had the power to acquit a defendant despite the facts if they feel the circumstances in the case dictate mercy.

The Seabrook occupiers based their action on the N.H. competing harms statute, which says that if a lesser crime (criminal trespass) is committed to avert the danger of a greater harm to life or property (nuclear power and radiation), there can be no conviction for the lesser crime. The judges refused to allow a defense of competing harms, and would not let the juries examine the statute when they requested it.

The jail sentences were a glaring act of political retaliation. In their separate trials, the four convicted last week got two, three, four, and six months, much heavier sentences than those recommended by the prosecution. In their past sentences for criminal trespass, neither of the judges had ever given any defendant so much time. They said they felt a stiff sentence would be a deterrent to future "mob rule" at Seabrook.

Despite the bias of the judges, the occupiers made their defense with integrity and courage. Instead of dwelling on the incorrect arrest procedures or other legal loopholes, in their determination to put nuclear power on trial they explained in very moving terms why they occupied. The juries were obviously swayed (one of the jury foremen was crying when she delivered the verdict), but they were hamstrung by the rulings of the judges.

Approximately 200 occupiers who didn't pay an $8 appeal fee have been remanded to district court for hearings Dec. 1, Dec. 13 and Jan. 5. These people face a 15 day sentence and a $100 fine.

Another group of ten who were among the 18 who first occupied Aug. 1, 1976, and again occupied Aug. 22, have been convicted and sentenced to three months beginning Dec. 1.

The Clamshell Alliance will not be deterred from stopping the Seabrook nuke by courtroom threats. This week the next occupation at Seabrook was announced for June 24, 1978. Those convicted in N.H. courts, and those who occupied and will again, are putting their bodies on the line to stop nuclear power.

None of these people wants to go to jail, and they occupied not for personal gain but to protect us all from the dangers of nuclear power. In the future, as repression around the nuclear power issue grows, you, too, may find yourself on the line.

Nuclear power is a corporate war for profit against the people of the U.S. and the world. The time to resist is now, but we must be aware that the forces against us are strong. We can be deprived of our freedom when we assert our constitutional and human rights against this deadly nuclear industry.

There are many paths of resistance open to us. A conscious, concerted effort for conservation of energy can stop nukes. In the U.S., we waste as much energy as we use. When citizens fight rate hikes which provide the utilities with capital, that helps stop nukes. Understanding and using the available renewable resources around us in abundance, wind, solar, wood and water, helps stop nukes. All of these together will give the people control over the energy they use.

We are faced with a subtle and insidious war against life and health waged by huge corporations whose weapons (besides the neutron bomb) are money and power. If we don't collectively resist now, the consequences could be end to life as we know it on earth.

Abolish grades

fifi ball

Grades (as in A, B, C, D, F and all intermediate permutations) should be abolished from all levels of the education system in this country.

Grading breeds competitiveness between students which is harmful to the learning process. We are all here to learn something, whether it's training for a potential job, or for more personal kinds of gains like social awareness, experience, or responsibility.

(Why we learn or need to is a question in itself.) The grading system implies we are not here to learn — in fact don't really want to — but can be forced to be those in (undeserving) positions of power who impose an unnatural value system onto us.

This system creates an atmosphere in which the student's emphasis shifts away from learning because of being forced into false values. The teacher's emphasis shifts too — the power discrepancy betwen teachers and students is inevitably exploited.

Grades produce bad feelings between students and teachers, running relationships which could otherwise be friendly, egalitarian, and more understanding from both ends. Grades make the system unnecessarily hierarchical. Getting rid of grades would put education into the hands of those seeking to be educated.

There was a time when "masters" were respected because of their meritorious records. In our case, word-of-mouth might come in the form of a guide like our course and teacher evaluation guide. Teachers would have more incentive to be "good", to help their students learn, rather than succumb to the false tenure system now in use.

Grading gives the student a false sense of accomplishment or lack thereof. Often a grade his little or no correlation with how much the student learned during the particular time period.

Abolishing grades would get rid of all the lying and cheating built into the current system. Exams, if there were any, would be voluntary progress checks.

There are a couple of alternatives to the current grading system. One is nothing; no grades at all. The rationale for grades is that a visible indication of how much you've learned is necessary. Obviously grades are a false, superficial form of communication.

If necessary, competence exams could be given at the time of consideration for a job requiring a particular skill. This exam might be waived in cases where there are obvious signs of proficiency (e.g. published writing, paintings, reliable verbal recommendations).

The second alternative is somewhat of a compromise. There could be periodic (probably semesterly or bi-semesterly within our system) comments written by both student and teachers on learning that has been accomplished (by both) during the proceeding time period.

letter

Issues transformed into 'vendettas'

To the Editor:

Wednesday night's recall of Paul Yanowitch from the Academic Matters Council is another in a long list of examples of how the Senate distorts and manipulates a discussion of a defined issue into myriad personal vendettas and irrelevant topics. This manages to keep all discussions out of focus just enough to evade the issue at hand.

The reason the Senate fails to accomplish its goal of unifying the student body is its inability to rationally discuss the issues. The Senate continually interjects irrelevant matters. In other words, the Senate is always out in left field.

While the Senate professes to be an institution that welcomes fresh ideas and encourages outside student participation; the fact of the matter is to disagree with the Senate is to commit a crime sosacrilegious to warrant dismissal from the face of the earth. When will the Senate realize that a large portion of the student body may hold views different from their representatives? I urge the Senate to encourage individual ideas and initiative, and to stop dictating their policy to other student groups.

Letters Policy

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian welcomes all letters to the editor. They must be signed and include the author's address and phone number. Organizations may submit letters, but they must include a name and phone number for reference purposes.

Letters must be typed, double-spaced, at sixty spaces per line, and no more than two pages. They should be sent to the Executive Editor, c-o the Collegian, or dropped off at the Collegian office.

All letters are subject to editing for either content or space according to the judgement of the editors. Due to space limitations, there is no guarantee that all letters received will be printed. Letters for a specific publication date must be submitted by 4:00 p.m. the day preceding that date.

COURSE DESCRIPTIONS

The following course were inadvertently left out of the spring 1978 Course Description Guides (the rest will appear Monday):

Military Science

MilSci 423
SEMINAR IN MILITARY LEADERSHIP AND MANAGEMENT

Office and Hours: Army ROTC Bldg; M-5 8-4:30. Organization: Lecture-discussion. Aim: Study of managerial problems inherent in military staff planning and administration; perspective of defense and Army leadership and organization for each war and post war period in support of National Security. Readings: Available through Departmental library. Requirements: Midterm and final exams, one paper and three oral presentations. Add Notes: Permission of instructor for non Army ROTC cadets. Students must register for a Leadership Laboratory.

ADVANCED MILITARY ORGANIZATIONAL LEADERSHIP

Office and Hours: Army ROTC Bldg; M-F 8-4:30. Organization: Lecture-discussion, plus management simulation exercises. Aim: Course of instruction-interaction designed to provide students opportunities to apply and develop basic management skills within the context of realistic simulations. Skills to be developed are: Problem analysis, decision making, planning, organizing, delegation, control, and interpersonal skills, which will provide a basic managerial foundation. Readings: "Army ROTC Management Simulation Program" (Provided by department). Requirements: Two exams and a final; participation in all management simulations. Prerequisites: None. (Permission of instructor requested for non-Military Science students). Added Notes: ROTC students are required to register for a leadership laboratory.

MilSci 190G
BRANCHES OF THE ARMY

Office and Hours: Army ROTC Bldg; M-F 8-4:30. Organization: Lecture-discussion-guest lecturers. Aim: Introduction by the instructor and guest speakers to the 14 Branches of the Army, their related career specialties for junior-grade officers, junior-grade officer assignments, training, responsibilities, and career planning within each specific branch. Readings: DA Pam 600-3 provided by the Department and supplementary readings available through Departmental library. Requirements: Three examinations and short paper. Prerequisites: None. Added Notes: One (1) credit course. Military Science students also required to register for Leadership Laboratory.

MilSci 190F
INTRODUCTION TO MILITARY THEORY

Office and Hours: Army ROTC Bldg; M-F 8-4:30. Organization: Lecture-Discussion. Aim: Study of the fundamentals of modern military tactics through the analysis of offensive and defensive operations, communications, and patrolling techniques. Emphasis on the leaders role in managing individuals and small unit actions. Readings: Available through Departmental library. Requirements: Midterm and final exams. Prerequisites: None. Added Notes: One credit course. In addition to course, a leadership laboratory (no credit) is required.

MilSci 190E
METHODS OF INSTRUCTIONS

Office and Hours: Army ROTC Bldg; M-F 8-4:30. Organization: Lecture-discussion-student presentations. Aim: Introduction to the performance training concept to include a slide-audio presentation on the principles and phases of performance training, concurrently complete a programmed text, apply the principles and phases in the evaluation of four television tapes, and the students are given a performance test, lesson plan and materials to conduct a performance training session. Readings: US Army Field Manual 21-6 provided by the Departments and supplementary readings available through the Departmental library. Requirements: Students will prepare, present and evaluate a performance training session. Prerequisites: None. Added Notes: One (1) credit course. Military Science students also required to register for Leadership Laboratory. Permission of instructor is required for non Army ROTC cadets.

AMERICAN MILITARY HISTORY

Office and Hours: Army ROTC Bldg; M-F 8-4:30. Organizations: Lecture-discussion. Aim: This course is a study of American Military History with emphasis on the social, economic, and political factors that caused participation in each war; Army organization of each war; application of the principles of war in selected battles; the development of tactics, weapons, and equipment. Readings: American Military History by Maurice Matloff, provided by the Department and supplementary readings available through the Departmental library. Requirements: Lead a classroom discussion of a selected battle and one examination. Prerequisites: None. Added Notes: One (1) credit course. Military Science students also required to register for Leadership Laboratory.

Environmental Science

Env Sci 502
L. Lockwood
CASE STUDIES OF ENVIRONMENTAL PROBLEMS

Office and Hours: Marsh. Hall Bsmt: 9:30-12:00, MTW. Organization: Lecture-discussion Aim: Problem approach (via case studies) to develop environmental literacy and to provide the necessary conceptual framework for analysis of environmental problems. The parameters of specific disciplines in relationship to "cause" and "cures" of environmental problems; interfaces among those disciplines; and difficulties encountered with linear perspectives to multidimensional problems. Readings: "The Ecology of Man: An Ecosystem Approach" by Robert L. Smith, 2nd ed., 1976. Harper & Row. Requirements: Two exams; paper. Prerequisites: Two semesters of College Science. Added Notes: Highly recommended for students in Environmental Sciences Education, the Natural Sciences and for those interested in Environmental Studies.

ENV SCI 516
W. Litsky, L. Lockwood
MICROBIOLOGY OF AIR AND WATER

Office and Hours: Marshall Hall, by arrangement. Organization: Lecture-laboratory. Aim: Emphasizes specific microorganisms which affect water quality; microfloral interrelationships; standard microbiological methods for the examination and monitoring of air and water. Readings: EPA Handbook for Evaluation Water Bacteriological Laboratories. Selected readings from the literature. Requirements: Two exams; lab project report. Prerequisites: Env. Sci. 315 or one semester microbiology plus permission.

Env Sci 370
CONTROVERSIAL CHEMICALS IN EVERYDAY LIFE

Office and Hours: 61 Marshall: by arrangement. Organization: Lecture-discussion. Aim: To survey the broad groups of chemicals preset in food, cosmetics, medicines, and occurring in industrial and agricultural practices. An attempt will be made to weigh the environmental and human impact of these chemicals and to make some assessment of benefits in relation to the present and potential hazards of their use. Readings: Topical material will be assigned. Requirements: One mid-term and a paper. Prerequisites: Permission of the instructor. Although this course is intended for an informal lay public, a background in chemistry and biology would be helpful.

Env Sci 492
Staff
SENIOR SEMINAR

Office and Hours: Room arranged, Th. 4:40. Organization: Invited speakers and a Saturday Fieldtrip. Aim: Emphasis on the presentation of a wide variety of environmental problems by speakers involved intimately with these problems. Requirements: A required senior Env Sci major course open to a limited number of other students, by arrangements. Prerequisites: None.

B'nai B'rith Hillel will sponsor Sunday brunch

Who is a Jew? Why are there so many conflicting definitions?

In an attempt to bring the issue of what is a Jew? Who is a Jew?, B'nai B'rith Hillel will sponsor a brunch Sunday at 11 a.m. that will deal with all aspects of Judaism.

The topic is: "What is Judaism — a Nationality, a Religion, or a Culture?" The panelists are: Prof. Stan Young, Rabbi Israel Deren and Prof. Alan Lieberman.

Young, of the School of Business Administration is a member of the Amherst Jewish Community. He will be speaking on Judaism as a culture. Rabbi Deren, of the Chabad House, a branch of Orthodox Jewry, will be speaking on Judaism as a religion. Lieberman, a clinical psychologist who spent last semester as a visiting faculty member at the Hebrew University in Jerusalem, will be speaking on Judaism as a nationality.

The brunch begins at 11 a.m. in the Commonwealth Room, Student Union, and there is a fee for the food only.

Gridders aim to ground Eagles

By RICH ECKEL
Collegian Staff

This, by all rights, should have been a weekend for the UMass football team to rest and prepare itself for the upcoming Division II playoffs. But, a Saturday afternoon at Boston College cannot be considered a vacation.

In fact, the Eagles are probably the biggest and most talented team the Minutemen will face this season, including the playoffs. Although their 5-4 record won't earn them a trip to the Sugar Bowl, the Eagles must still be considered the class of New England.

Thus, tomorrow, the Minutemen will put their eight game winning streak on the line when they face the Eagles in an ABC regionally televised game beginning at 4:00.

Ordinarily, this game would be the highlight of the UMass football season. However, this has not been an ordinary week for UMass. Last weekend's victory over New Hampshire and the team's Division II playoff bid, received earlier this week, have overshadowed the BC game. But, according to UMass defensive coordinator Bob Pickett, the Minutemen are still enthused about the contest.

"As a coach, you're always concerned about your team looking ahead to another game," said Pickett. "But this year's team hasn't had any problem with that. Year in and year out this is a game we look forward to, and this week is no exception.

"We found out Tuesday that we had received a bid for the playoffs. We told the players at practice, and we haven't heard anything about it since. Everybody is ready to play."

"UMass is a two-way team," said BC football coach Joe Yukica, "and I know they will be prepared to give their best against us."

The modern version of this rivalry began in 1966, and since then the Minutemen have managed to win just one of 11 games. That was a 28-7 shocker in 1972, by a UMass team that earned a Boardwalk Bowl bid.

While the Minutemen have been enjoying their best season since '72, the Eagles have fallen upon rough times at 'The Heights.' BC began its season by losing three of its four games. The Eagles rebounded by winning four straight behind the arm of senior quarterback Ken Smith. However, the nation's number two quarterback in passing percentage, arrived at practice last Thursday admittedly drunk, and was suspended from the team.

Without Smith, the Eagles dropped last Saturday's game to Syracuse, 20-3, and lost any hopes for an obscure bowl bid. On Tuesday, Smith asked Yukica if he could explain the incident to his teammates and offer an apology. After hearing his plee, Smith's teammates voted to reinstate him. Smith, who has completed 60.6 per cent of his passes for 1711 yards and 16 touchdowns will play tomorrow.

Smith is unquestionably the key to an offense that has produced 188 points this season. But the Eagles aerial attack is also supported by a solid receiving corps.

Mike Godbolt, is the Eagles leading receiver, with 24 receptions good for 533 yards. Paul McCarty, a junior, whose brother Peter heads the UMass defense, has also been a favorite target of Smith's. He's caught 22 passes and is averaging 18 yards per reception.

When the Eagles aren't passing, their running game will be commandered by fullback Don Conway, the Eagles leading rusher, and Joe O'Brien. According to Pickett, O'Brien adds a different dimension to BC's offense.

"He's a great runner, but he can also throw the ball. He adds another option to their offense," said Pickett.

O'Brien was the Eagles quarterback at the start of the season, before being replaced by Smith and moved to tailback.

Meanwhile, UMass enters the game with a chance to establish itself as the number one team in New England. A win over BC, along with its Yankee Conference championship and number one ranking in the latest Lambert Cup voting would be impressive credentials.

After the New Hampshire game it appeared the Minutemen might be sub-par this week, because of ankle injuries to John Willis, Ross Schubarth and Billy Coleman. However Pickett reports that they are healthy and will be available tomorrow.

Coleman needs to gain just 53 yards rushing to establish a single season rushing mark set by Paul Metallo in 1972. The senior halfback seemed assured of breaking the mark two weeks ago against Holy Cross, however, injuries in that game and at New Hampshire have slowed him down.

Billy Coleman has leaped over, around and through the opposition this season on his way to 808 yards rushing. He can set a single season rushing record in tomorrow's game at BC. (Staff photo by Dave Rodgers)

Puckmen host scrappy Lowell; shoot for second straight victory

By MICHAEL McHUGH
Collegian Staff

The UMass Minutemen six will face-off at 8:00 against Lowell University tomorrow night at Orr Rink. It's the first of only two home games for the icemen before intersession.

The Minutemen are coming off a 4-1 opening game victory over New England College Wednesday night in Concord, New Hampshire.

The icemen were sparked by Chris Lowey's first period goal, Fran Pycko's third period goal, and Don Murphy's two goals in the first and third periods. Goalie John Riley played a super game in the nets, turning aside 21 Pilgrim shots.

The penalty killing of Brian Kittredge, Jamie Benelli and John Peters, when UMass was two men down in the second period and protecting a slim 2-1 lead, was perhaps the key to the game.

"We don't practice being two-men short too often, but we do have a blackboard session and practice it occasionally," said Kittredge.

"As far as the Lowell game is concerned," coach Jack Canniff said, "There's no question that we've got to tighten up our defense. Hopefully, we'll improve our forechecking. The only plus for us is that it's a home game. The boards at New England gave us fits, but we shouldn't have that problem at Orr rink.

"To give you an indication of how good Lowell is, they made it to the ECAC Division II semi-finals last year and were bumped only by Merrimac. This year's team is basically the same team as last year's with a few additions. They just barely lost to UNH in a scrimmage this year 8-6.

"Lowell has one of the better forwards in Division II — John Costello. He played center last year, but coach Bill Riley switched him to left wing this year. Lowell's goaltending is also a strong point."

The Minutemen played well offensively against New England, as they pumped in 41 shots on goaltender Rick St. Laurent, and will hope for a repeat performance tomorrow night, as they will need all the offense they can muster against Lowell.

Co-Captain Bill White talked about the New England victory and the upcoming game with Lowell.

"We played with a lot of spirit but the new kids made some mistakes in our end and they were overshifting the puck."

Overshifting the puck is when three players get stuck on one side of the ice, while forechecking the opponent. In other words, the forward isn't staying on his wing, which can cause a three on two or four on three break.

"We've got to clear up a few things in practice," continued White. "This Saturday (tomorrow) we'll be more defensive minded because Lowell University is a lot stronger than New England. They have a lot of depth, but we can match their talent."

GOAL-LINE GAB — The Minutemen were one of only a few teams that beat Lowell University last year. The icemen edged them, 3-2 ... Due to an error by the official scorer, Bill White was credited with UMass's final tally against New England when in actuality it was center Murphy. All too often the goal scorer gets the glory when a crisp pass might have made the goal possible, so I'm going to mention who contributed assists in the New England game. Assists were credited to Jamie Benelli, John Peters, Mark Ferragamo, Brian Kittredge and Dean Liacos.

A bowl, by any other name...

A great many people, including myself, have been going bonkers trying to uncover the names and whereabouts of the bowl games in which the UMass football folks are likely to participate during their stay in the Division II Playoffs.

Leaving myself open to clear and present physical danger, not to mention unusually high levels of mental anguish, I have gained knowledge of these closely-guarded secrets, and have finally compiled enough information to expose a fatal oversight on the part of the Division II Bowl-Naming Committee.

This oversight is best illustrated by listing the bowls of which UMass could be a part.

The Division II Valhalla is the Pioneer Bowl. The two finalists will go at each other in this one from scenic Wichita Falls, Texas.

The Eastern semifinals is to be hosted by a participating club, which will have the privilege of entertaining its opponent in the Knute Rockne Bowl.

For the quarterfinal round, which will see one of its contests hosted by UMass, there are NO GIVEN BOWL NAMES.

Imagine that!

Here we have an honest-to-goodness playoff game right in our own backyard, and nobody takes the time to name it as a bowl. This is a situation which must be remedied!

Most famous bowl games are named after the structures in which they are held. For example: the Rose, Cotton, Sugar and Orange Bowls are all staged in stadia bearing their respective titles.

UMass suffers a handicap in this respect. Sure, university afficiandos could entitle the upcoming playoff encounter the "Alumni Bowl," but this would create the misconception of an old-timers' game sponsored by the class of '23. Besides, the World War I halftime tunes would send most spectators running for the exits.

The aforementioned Knute Rockne Bowl is an example of a game named after a famous individual. UMass has a number of possibilities along this line.

The contest could bear the name of the town's most celebrated personage; the "Emily Dickenson Bowl," or a corollary of that, the "Belle of Amherst Bowl." These, however, seem inappropriate monikers for as bruising a sport as football.

A name could be chosen from the UMass athletic department. But, although the "Frank MacInerny Bowl" has a certain ring to it, it would be forced to lose money in order to be used as a tax shelter.

Clearly, what is needed is a revolutionary, new train of thought.

There are certainly enough idiosyncrasies unique to the university from which to draw up an impressive list of unmistakably UMass-ish bowl-name candidates.

The "Downstairs of the Drake Bowl" would not only allow Minutemen supporters to view the playoff with a certain amount of hometown pride, it would also grant free admission to anyone under 18.

Declaring the contest the "Blue Wall Bowl" would provide for a novel ticket-selling campaign. Since a grid game consists of four 15-minute quarters, the Boyden ducat demons could promote the game as the "Happy Hour".

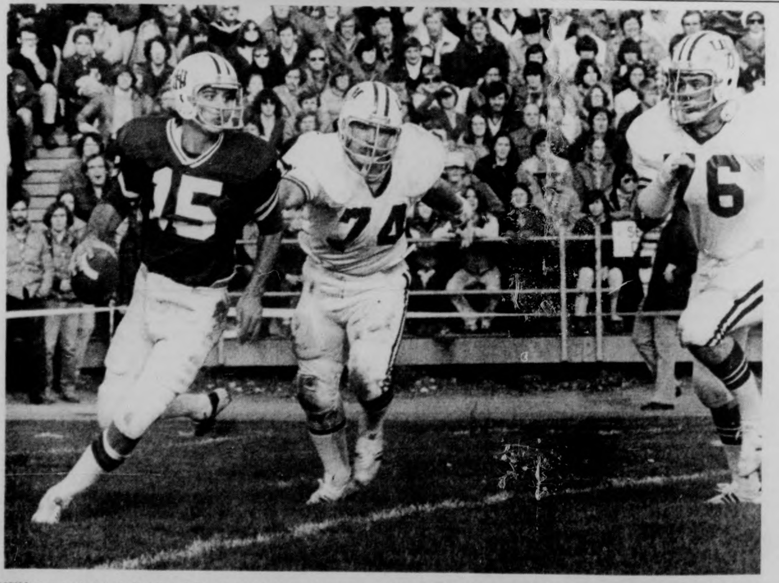
There are those people, though, who would rather not publicize UMass' collective affinity for hops-based beverages. Such folks are easily accomodated.

For connoisseurs of the arts, there's the "FAC Bowl". One catch to this is that concession prices will be raised before halftime.

The University is generally acknowledged as the first institution of higher education to pursue the possibilities of a student union. In the "Union Bowl", football would be played using a fairer format, since a controversial call by an official would necessarily bring about a situation of collective bargaining. The Bowl's only drawback is that in order to gain access into the stadium, fans would have to cross a picket line.

Or just maybe the game should be dedicated not only to the Thanksgiving season during which it will be played, but also to the genius who scheduled the contest for the holiday weekend, a time when most students will be home with their families.

In honor of both the meal and mastermind — the "Turkey Bowl".



UNH quarterback Jeff Allen (15) has the feeling of a man looking down the barrel of a loaded shotgun, as UMass' Dave Bemis (76) and Phil Puopolo (74) are about to lower the boom on him. (Staff photo by Dave Rodgers)

Jack Leaman picked up the ball, tricky dribbled behind his back--take note, Johnny Most -- and tossed an easy one-hander toward the hoop. He missed. The coach smiled , backed up to the corner, and let loose with a 20-foot keep-those-feet-on-the-ground set shot. Swish. Again. Swish.

"Gettin' kinda cocky," quipped one of Leamen's players. "Kinda cocky."

Leaman may very well have displayed a touch of cockiness as he enjoyed some fun during this pre-practice warmup, but as he looks to the upcoming UMass basketball season, that cockiness quickly fades. The reason ? How about Villanova, Rutgers, Holy Cross, and Providence College for starters? With a schedule of this calibre, a winning season for UMass may be difficult to come by. But with the collective personnel and attitudes that surround this year's UMass basketball team, Leaman will have more than a touch of confidence when his squad debuts at Harvard at the end of this month.

Reasons for that confidence come in various degrees of size, shape, and speed. The nucleus of the squad can be found in the New York City trio of Derick Claiborne, Alex Eldridge, and Mike Pyatt, who, after flirting with various levels of success since their heralded arrival here three years ago, find themselves in their last-hurrah senior years. Surround them with 6-9 junior Mark Haymore, a rugged transfer from Indiana, 6-9 junior Len Kohlhaas, 6-5 junior Eric Willams, 6-4 junior Brad Johnson, and others, the result is a strong and deep Minuteman squad.

"We're a fine balanced team with a lot of depth," assesses Leaman. "We'll be going with eight or nine people consistently. We won't have to deal with 38 or 39 minutes stints like last year. If a starter plays 32 minutes at full tilt, and with a strong bench to fill in, we'll be in good shape."

With the different types of players UMass has, Leaman will be able to floor two distinct styles of play.

"If we go with Haymore and Kohlhaas together, we'll have the big physical team," Leaman said. "We'll have a lot of firepower, strong boards, but not much quickness.

"The other option is to go with either Haymore or Kohlhass, and play them with either Willams, Pyatt, or Johnson. With this setup, we'll be quicker and stronger defensively."

"Either way, we'll be able to meet our needs," the coach added.

Granted that UMass has capably filled potentially big gaps up front with the graduation of Jim Town and Mark Donoghue, the strength of this club lies in the guard position, according to Leaman. With the ever-consistent Claiborne, this year's captain, and the explosive Eldridge, few would argue Leaman's claim.

Eldridge carries with him a past marred by controversy, but if practice so far is any indication, he's ready to play.

"We gotta go all out now," Claiborne said of Pyatt, Eldridge, and himself. "This is it for us. We still have some things to accomplish before we leave."

"I'm looking for those three to have outstanding years," Leaman said. "Most people are remembered by their last year, and everything before that goes down the drain if you're not effective as seniors. That should be an added incentive for them--they'll have something to prove."

An extra push for Claiborne and Eldridge may come from the play of sophomore guard Bill Morrison and freshman Tom Witkos, both of whom are capable replacements should either starter falter.

Other newcomers who have impressed Leaman are Jay Stuart, who at 6-8 provides height and quickness, and Connie Napier, who Leaman labels a pleasant surprise. The coach also has the services of senior Chuck Steveskey, always a long-range shooting threat. Another returning forward is 6-6 sophomore George Dennerlein.

Willams, however, who left the team last year because of personal reasons, has been the most impressive player in camp to date, says the coach, with Kohlhaas right beside him.

"Beautifull" said Leaman of Williams. "As for Kohlhaas, he's been equally impressive. The past two years I think he had conceded the starting role to Donoghue, but now he realizes he's the heir apparent, and he's ready."

If all of this personnel meshes together as Leaman hopes, UMass's goal of winning the league championships and gaining an automatic bid into the NCAA tournament seems well within reach. The tourney will be played in Pittsburgh on March 2-4, with the winner taking all.

"That's what it's all about," Claiborne commented.

UMass finished third in the tourney last year, as Duquesne, led by Norm Nixon, surprised all by capturing the tournament title.

UMass figures to be a strength among strengths as the league's second year unfolds. With Villanova, Rutgers, and George Washington in the same division, therein lies the class of the Eastern Eight. UMass will play these three teams on a home-and-away basis, while West Division opponents -- Duquesne, Pittsburg, West Virginia, and Penn State -- will be single game foes.

In short, the outlook for the Minutemen is typical. The talent is there -- what remains to be seen is how that talent will perform.

Minutemen face stiff test in EAA's soph season

By Rich Eckel
and Mike Berger
Collegian Staff

The ECBL, Eastern Eight, aaah, Eastern Athletic Association, whatever the league finally decides to call itself, is ready to embark on its second year of existence. In its initial season, the league was highly competitive and this year shouldn'd be any different.

What can UMass expect to encounter this season? Here is a list of the teams it will face and what the Minutemen can expect from its opponents.

RUTGERS - Tom Young - 18-10

Since the 1975-76 season when the Scarlet Knights made it to the NCAA post-season final four, their playoff success has been nothing to write home about. With 1977 losses to UMass in the ECBL playoffs in the first round and to St. Bonaventure in a NIT opener, coach Tom Young will hope for recruiting help to help him get over the playoff jinx.

The front court for the Knights will be the teams strongest point as Hollis Copeland, James Bailey, and Abdel Anderson are considered to be the most dominating front line in the league. In the backcourt, Eddie Jordan took his high-scoring average into the pros, leaving somewhat of a scoring lack. Look for Rodney Duncan and Steve Hefele to be the backcourt starters.

VILLANOVA - Rollie Massimino - 23-10

Five years ago Massimino took over a 'nothing special' type of team but since that time has guided the Wildcats to victories over Notre Dame and St. John's, a second-place finish in the ECBL last season and a third-place spot in the NIT.

He's lost offensive punch from the graduated John Olive and Larry Herron but seems to have the players in Herron's younger brother Keith, Reggie Robinson, and 6-6 super-recruit Alex Bradley.

The backcourt is still intact with last year's starters Rory Sparrow and Whitey Rigsby back. The Wildcats recruited a 34.4ppg scorer in Tom Sienkiewicz to handle the team's backcourt offense. Look for the Wildcats to challenge seriously for the league title.

GEORGE WASHINGTON - Bob Tallent - 14-12

The Colonials, along with Penn State, had the worst record in the ECBL last year but prognosticators say that Tallent's group might be the best team in the league by the end of the season.

Senior Les Anderson (6-4, 15.1ppg) is the most well-known player, but Tallent has had some extremely promising recruits and transfers enter his program. Bob Lindsay (Florida) and Daryle Charles (LaSalle) bring impressive scoring statistics with them but Tallent is most impressed with Glenn Dixon (6-8 junior collegetransfer) and a freshman 21ppg scorer-Curtis Jeffries-out of Kentuckey's best high school team. Look for the Colonials to be the sleeper in the league.

WEST

WEST VIRGINIA - Joedy Gardner - 18-11

Last season was supposed to be*the*year for the Mountaineers but losses to Duquense and UMass in the league's tournament in Philadelphia ended their season abruptly. Its victories over Notre Dame and Duke were highlights for a team that had a roller coaster season.

This year only two returning starters are back. Maurice Robinson and Sid Bostic will be the players the Mountaineers rely on. Gardner experienced a good recruiting off-season by nabbing Donnie Gibson, Greg Nance and Dick Herbert. But they are only freshmen and this could be a rebuilding season for the Mountaineers.

DUQUESNE - John Cinicola - 15-15

The Dukes were the prime example of the league's balance last season. They entered the tournament in Philadelphia heavy underdogs, but surprised everybody by making it to the finals and then beat Villanova for theleague title and an NCAA playoff berth.

However, the sparkplug of last year's team, Norm Nixon, is now wearing a Los Angeles Laker uniform. Returning veterans Lonnie McClain, Rich Cotton, John Moore and John Thomas will have to make up for the loss of Nixon, the outstanding player in the ECBL last year.

PITTSBURGH - Tim Grgurich - 6-21

The football heroics of Tony Dorsett overshadowed last year's team. And this year, Matt Cavanaugh and his gridiron teammates should do the same. Football is number one and the Panthers will have to go a long way to change that fact. Last year their ECBL record was a dismal 1-9.

This year the Panthers have 6-6 Larry Harris to lend some credibility to their squad. An outstanding season from him and support from three sophomore returnees could make the Panthers a spoiler in the league. But somehow this winter you've got to feel that students will be wondering how many more days it will be before the football season starts.

PENN STATE - John Bach - 11-15

You can name some great football players that have played for Joe Paterno over the years. But name just one basketball player that has ever made it big from Penn State. This school, like Pitt, is a football factory. Thus the Nittany Lions who throw basketballs at hoops are not highly regarded.

This season the Lions have Minnesota transfer Garry Korkowski and Carvin Jackson to lead the team. The team is young and inexperienced and, unfortunately for Bach, most teams will probably perform an overture on his.

Opponents to watch

Given that UMass posseses some of the finest individual talent in the East with the likes of Mike Pyatt, Derick Claiborne, Alex Eldridge, and Mark Haymore, its opponents can also boast some of the bigger names in the region. The following is a list of some of the top players whose teams will compete against the Minutemen this year:

Haymore - Indiana's loss becomes UM's gain

By Rich Eckel
Collegian Staff

One day during the summer of 1976, UMass basektball coach Jack Leaman's phone began to ring. When Leaman answered it, he found the caller had an offer he couldn't refuse.

The caller, Davidson basketball coach Dave Pritchett, asked Leaman if he might be interested in a 6-9 transfer student from Indiana University. It didn't take long for Leaman to express his interest. Leaman called the student and set up a meeting. They obviously both liked what they saw because the student decided to enroll at UMass.

Now, after one year of ineligibility, Mark Haymore is ready to play basketball for UMass. The story of Haymore's eventual decision to attend UMass is a sordid one. It was simply a case of all the cards falling into UMass's lap, and all Leaman had to do was show the cards. Haymore was in the business of looking for a school to attend and UMass was suggested after his first two choices fell through.

He had been a member of Indiana's national championship team in 1976, but playing behind talent like Kent Benson, Scott May, Quinn Buckner and Bobby Wilkerson--now all members of the NBA---Haymore saw little action.

Eventually, Haymore and Hoosier coach Bobby Knight began to see things differently, and it was clear that the services of the highly recruited prospect from Lutheran-East High School in Cleveland were no longer needed at Indiana.

"I had decided on Indiana because it was close to home, and also Indiana went strictly with man-to-man defense, something I enjoy," said Haymore, who received over 400 offers from interested schools.

"Bobby Knight is a helluva coach. He taught me a lifetime of basketball in two years. Every game was like a national championship to him, though, and we had a never-ending conflict," said Haymore.

That conflict led the player who had been all-everything in high school to search for another school. He contacted Lefty Driesell, basketball coach at the University of Maryland, who had recruited him heavily back in high school. But Driesell already had the big man he needed, so he advised Haymore to contact officials at Davidson, a school outside of Driesell's conference.

He did. However, Haymore was told that Davidson couldn't accept any more transfer students. But the assistant at Davidson last season was Ray Wilson, former assistant at UMass, who has, ironically enough, returned this season. Wilson suggested thay Haymore contact UMass.

"I came here during the summertime and I liked the way it looked," said Haymore. "It looked like a place where everybody could get into their own thing."

Last season, his first at UMass, Haymore was unable to play due to NCAA regulations. But the square-shouldered addition to UMass's front line didn't mind.

"I knww whereever I went I was going to have to sit out a year," he said. "It gave me time to think and get my head together. To find out if I really wanted to play ball."

This season, Haymore is considered a key ingredient in the hopes of another successful Minuteman basketball campaign. The difference between the high-pressured atmosphere at Indiana and the more low-key approach at UMass is one he enjoys.

"It's changed my whole game. I'm more relaxed here," Haymore said. "We don't have to dive on the floor in loose ball drills or do sprints after practice. At first, I wondered if I'd made the right choice. But I've found that if you want to work, you can get just as much out of this."

It is this willingness to work and his dedication to the game that has imppressed Leaman.

"He's strong and appears to want to be successful. With his will to work, he could be one of the best players in the East," enthused the coach.

"He's going to help us with his shooting and rebounding," said Leaman. "But my only apprehension is that everyone is going to expect too much from him early in the year. If you count the small amount of time he played at Indiana and last year, he really hasn't played competitively for three years. It's going to take him some time to adjust. We expect he'll reach his potential sometime around the middle of the season. We hope it will be sooner, but you've got to be realistic about the situation."

Haymore's presence in the frontcourt, combined wiht Len Kohlhaas's, should help Umass make up for the loss of Jim Town and Mark Donoghue. Haymore said he is looking forward to the season and that he would like to improve his rebounding.

After three years of struggling it appears that Mark Haymore is ready to find his place in the sun. And UMass fans can consider themselves lucky to be able to watch Haymore find the potential that everyone from Bobby Knight to Jack Leaman knows exists.

Ray returns home

Wilson's search for happiness leads him back to the Cage

By Mike Berger
Collegian Staff

In most cases the success of a collegiate basketball team is based on its recruiting. A 6-9 muscle forward, averaging 21 rebounds a game, or a 6-1 lightning quick guard who shoots over 50 per cent a game and averages 21 points a game can mean a big difference in a team's play.

For UMass, coach Jack Leaman might not see the full effects of his recruiting program this year but he has one important addition to his team. And this man doesn't rebound or score points.

Assistant coach Ray Wilson, 44 years old, returns to the UMass basketball program after a year's absence. He was assistant coach at Davidson University last year. Prior to last season, Wilson served as one of Leaman's assistants from 1969-1977.

How do the players feel about having Wilson back as assistant coach?

The seniors on the team - Derick Clairborne, Alex Eldridge, Mike Pyatt, and Chuck Steveskey - all have a warm feeling for the man who recruited them from high school.

"Sure, I'm glad he's back. He's like a friend to us. He knows how to deal with us on a personal level. He's seen us since high school, and he personally recruited myself, Alex, and Mike," said Clairborne.

"Coach Wilson's real easy to get along with," said Pyatt.

"He still keeps in touch with most of our families, and for many of us, he's another father," he added.

How does Wilson feel about being back?

"Like I have never left," said Wilson. " I put a big value on happiness in my life, and UMass is where I am the happiest. I didn't realize that when I left for Davidson but I actually missed Derick, Mike, and Alex's kind of basketball."

Wilson went to Davidson University, located in North Carolina, for a new opportunity in a more advanced league and for more money.

Seven years ago Davidson had been in the NCAA post-season semi-finals and had seen players like Mike Malloy, Fred Hertzel, and Dick Snyder graduate into professional basketball.

"Since that time, their program had gone downhill and they were looking to go into the big time again," said Wilson.

The graduate of Boston University, where he played alongside Leaman for the Terriers in 1958, said Davidson made a massive attempt to recruit players for the 'big Time' but only managed a 7-21 season record.

"Davidson played teams like Notre Dame, North Carolina State, Duke, Wake Forest, but they just didn't have the players to handle it," said Wilson.

Because of the unfamiliar setting of Davidson and because he missed the Northeast, Wilson sought out another coaching post in the East and was elated when UMass put out an application for an assistant coach to replace Fan Gaudette.

"I saw UMass beat Rutgers in the ECBL playoffs at Philadelphia last year," said Wilson, "and I was impressed. To me, Derick, Mike, and Alex looked strong, a lot more condifent of themselves, and after seeing them, I really got homesick for UMass."

Wilson said UMass had has the potential to be a very fine basketball team but has to concentrate on defense, rebounding and must develop a team patience in both practice and game situations.

"We have the people to put the ball in the hoop, and when we will have Mark Haymore, Len Kohlhaas, and Mike Pyatt in the middle we have a fine rebounding team but we have to concentrate on team quickness and defense with the defense the most important," said Wilson.

Also a professor in the school of Physical Eduaction, Wilson explained that defense will be the key to the Minutemen's success.

"Defense is a delayed gratification. The players who play it real well are those who aren't recognized. At times, we (UMass) can play fine defense but our concentration is lacking at times," Wilson. said.

Wilson's best recognized achieve ment as a UMass basketball recruiter besides scouting Eldridge, Clairborne, and Pyatt, was that he was the man responsible for bringing in the NBA's premier player - Julius Erving - to Umass.

"Not in my wildest dreams did I ever think that Erving would become the player he has. He was a good scorer, a fine rebounder, and a pretty good defensive player for me at Roosevelt High and here at UMass, but I never thought he could be the single most dominating player in the NBA," said Wilson.

How does Wilson feel about the four seniors he recruited for Leaman in 1974?

When these four leave UMass after this season, I think they will take with them a brand of basketball which I will personally miss," said Wilson.

"Mike Pyatt I see as a future NBA prospect, Derick has developed into a better all-around basketball player since high school and is very underrated," Wilson continued.

"As for Alex, I have the feeling that he has the same magic that Erving has for the game of basketball. He has the potential to become something special in the game of basketball if he is willing to do the things that must be done. I have not seen too many players like him," he said.

Finally, Wilson feels as assistant coach that he is in the position of being the 'Good Guy'.

"All the hard decisions are made by Jack and if they are good, the players feel it's my input. But if it goes against their wishes, all the criticism goes to Jack," Wilson said.

"I will say this. If UMass is to have a great year, its going to be a collective effort from everybody," he said.

Minuteman fans are hoping that joyous scenes such as this one become regular Cage occurances during the 1977-78 basketball season.

Women's Gymnastics

Number three in '77... ...looks for same in '78

Talent-laden team set to shine

By Laura Bassett
Collegian

Sitting behnid her desk last week, UMass women's gymnastics coach Virginia Evans contemplated and commented on the upcoming season.

In the last six years under Evans' tutelage, the gymwomen have never finished lower than seventh in the nation. Evans believes this year's squad is every bit as strong as the other teams she has coached.

"This team has a tremendous amount of talent and we'll be right up there on top again," she said.

The gymwomen finished fourth in the country last year and the squad is returning virtually intact. Leading the return are top all-aroung performers Stephanie Jones, Susan Cantwell and Karen Hemberger.

Jones, the most consistent Umass gymnast last year, returns after trying out for the World University Games during the summer. Jones qualified for the trials with an eighth place finish in the individual championships last year. Jones is progressing well during practices and is expected to be just as strong a contributor for the gymwomen this season as last.

Cantwell is a definite veteran to the UMass squad. Cantwell received an AllAmerican rating during the national championships as a freshman and has competed strongly for the two subsequeent national title contending teams. Evans is particularily pleased with Cantwell's preseason progress.

"Cantwell is stronger now then she was at this point last year", Evans said.

"She is picking right up and going forward, there's no senior slump", Evans added.

Co-captain Hemberger ran in to injury problems last year wihch limited her contributions.But that was last year. Hemberger is back, healthy and working on tougher routines than ever before, according to Evans.

Jill Heggie, the top all around performer for the Minutewomen last year is the gymnast not competing this season. Heggie severely injured her knee during the World Games Trials while compteting on the uneven bars during the summer.

She was recovering well through the summer and early fall but has recently aggrevated the injury and is out for the season.

"We have obviously lost some scoring potential, depth and consistency and we will also miss her perosonality," said Evans of Heggie's loss.

Heggie's injury places more pressure on her teammates but depth graces this year's squad. Also returning will be juniors Jean Anderson, Diane Laurenson, Cheryl Morrier and Julie Myers. All contributed to the gymwomen's fourth place national finish last year.

Anderson, an uneven parallel bars specialist, has greatly improved the difficulty level of her routine, according to Evans. She is expected to be a very strong contributor to the bars squad this season.

Myers specializes on the floor and on the beam. She is expected to be a very consistent performer for the squad this season. Evans said that Myers is a very solid performer and will undoubtedly add depth to the team.

Laurenson and Morrier are both strengthening their positions as all-around performers. Laurenson saw action last year on the floor and in vaulting but is working hard to develop a bar routine. Morrier served as a fill-in all-around performer when Heggie, Jones, Cantwell and Hemberher were out. She has worked very hard during the summer to build up her routines to break into the regular all-around ranks.

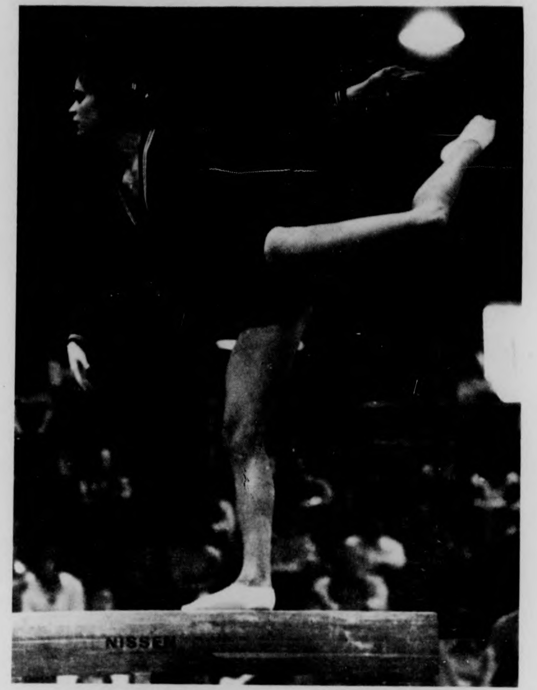
Sophomore Laurie Knapp has shown a great deal of improvement over last year. Knapp performed very strongly on the beam during a recent intrasquad meet and Evans feels she is making a strong bid for a regular beam slot.

Joining the team for the first time will be freshmen Karen Clemente, Coleen Thornton, Debra Smith and sophomore Ann Varano. Varano was injured all last year and is currently recovering from operations on her wrists. Smith is a developing talent while Clemente and Thornton are expected to make all-around contributions this season.

Another new face this year is that of new assistant coack Luke Thornton. Thornton has been active as a summer camp gymnastics coach, where many of the UMass gymnasts work during vacation. Thornton brings additional expertise to the team with special emphasis on tumbling.

Former UMass gymnast Paul Nunes has joined the coaching staff as the team choreographer. Evans has noticed improved beam routines ansd enjoys having one more person to help the gymnasts.

Despite the loss of record-holding Jill Heggie, this year's squad has enough talent and depth to once again be right up there with the best gymnasts in the country.



Cheryl Morrier, a steady performer for coach Virginia Evans women's gymnastics team, performs on the balance beam. She iis expected to be a key veteran in UMass's hopes for another high national finish. (staff photo by Rob Carlin)

The East is the word

By Laura Basset
Collegian Staff

The East is a perenially strong power in women's gymnastics. At last year's national championships three of the top four teams were from the East. Clarion State (Pennsylvania) and Penn State finished first and third respectively while UMass placed fourth in the competition.

This year the Minutewomen will face some of the best the East has to offer and participate in some exciting meets for gymnastics fans.

The gymwomen open their season with a very tough opponent-Penn State. On December 10th the Nittany Lions will invade the Curry Hicks Cage for the first of three double dual meets of the season. Double dual means men's and women's teams compete simultaneously. Women's gymnastics coach Virginia Evans is dubious about meeting such a strong opponent so early in the season.

"Neither team likes it because you try to build throughout the season to a peak at Easterns and Nationals," said Evans.

Penn State will undoubtedly be as strong this year as last but the earliness of the meet in the season matches the teams head-to-head.

Ann Carr, the best all-around performer in the United States last year, competes for Penn State. Carr and teammates will give the Minutewomen their toughest competition of the season.

Cornell and Southern Connecticut will be the other two double dual meets of the season. Cornell is a decent team but not on a par with UMass. Southern Conn. has an excellent men's team but is still rebuilding its women's squad. They are expected to be stronger than last year as the women's coach enters her second year.

New Hampshire has a greatly improved team as the athletic department has decided to spend a great deal of money to develop a team, according to Evans. UNH has recruited Denise Walker, an elite gymnast, who is expected to lead the Wildcat attack. UNH was too weak to even meet UMass last year and still will need more time to build up a team the caliber of the Minutewomen.

Michigan State shall make a trip half way across the country to meet UMass and UNH. Michigan State finished 14th at last year's nationals and will be a strong challenge for the gymwomen. The fourth-place finishing Minutewomen are expected to keep the upper hand, however.

Townson State has done extensive recruiting for this year and is expected to be a stronger team. Townson narrowly lost to Springfield College for fourth place in last year's Easterns. Townson will be the gymwomen's last opponent before Easterns this year, which ought to be a highly competitive meet before the championship.

Springfield College has dropped in recent years from stardom to mediocrity. While the men's team has excelled, the women's squad has slipped and will not offer the Minutewomen a very strong challenge.

Canisius, West Chester and Temple will not be tough opponents, but will give the gymwomen the luxury of some experimentation. Evans tends to take advantage of these lesser adversaries to experiment with line-ups and routines.

A new scoring item has been added this year to make the meets even more exciting. Under the new system, gymnasts will be awarded .05 points for international risk moves in their routines.

"These high level tricks will help increase the difficulty levels of the routines and make a distinction between good and top notch gynasts," said Evans.

Even though the gymwomen will not meet top-ranked Clarion during the regular season this year due to scheduling hassles, the schedule will definitely help them prepare for yet another shot at the Eastern and National Championships.

The team is currently in full training, preparing for the rapidly approaching season. With seven potential all-around gymnasts and a host of specialists, the squad is more than ready to face the season's challenge.

Women's Basketball

Minutewomen gun for the top

Sue Peters soars out of bounds to save an errant pass in a scrimmage game against Berkshire Community College. The sophomore guard last season led the Minutewomen in scoring with a 16.3 points per game average. (staff photo by Pat Dobbs)

By Judy Van Handle
Collegian Staff

UMass women's basketball coach Mary Ann Ozdarski has stressed team play during her one-year tenure at the helm of the Minutewomen.

This season, it will take a heap of that to provide a successful campaign for her charges.

Why? One very simple reason. Lu-Ann Fletcher is hurt.

The 6-foot senior center, who had been one of UMass's leading scorers and rebounders in the past three seasons, tore a knee cartilege during a pickup game in late September. It was operated on a week ago Wednesday, and as a result Fletcher will probably be out of action for six to ten weeks.

The lack of a classy player who averaged 12.6 points and 10.8 rebounds per game last year has to hurt the Minutewomen, but Ozdarski thinks Fletcher's unexpected absence from the squad will just make it perform much harder.

"The way things look now, we'll have to play more as a team and concentrate more on playing defense," she said. "Bytaking the big girl off the court, we lose offensively and defensively. We'll have to concentrate on the basic fundamentals."

Along with Fletcher's absence, graduation took starting forwards Nancy O'Neil (12.9 points) and Chris Basile (5.9 points) away from the UMass women's basketball program. As a result, an entirely new frontcourt will take the floor for the opening game against Harvard on November 30.

But don't despair. Ozdarski said that Maura Supinski and Cheryl Carey have two of the three forward berths locked up, while Ginny Peebles looks like she'll take over the third.

Supinski, a sophomore, improved immensely last season as the year went along. The 5-10 power forward asserted herself as the first forward off the bench by supplying the Minutewomen with some devastating rebounding, both offensively and defensively, and some fine inside offensive work. She popped in 6.6 points a game.

Carey, a senior co-captain, possesses a ton of basketball know-how to go along with a never-ending hustle. Small (5-6) for a forward, she makes up for the lack of height with aggressive play and a smooth outside shot.

Peebles, a 5-11 senior, was Fletcher's backup last year. She also has improved as she enters her fourth year of UMass basketball. She can prove to be a good rebounder and also work for inside offensive position.

The lack of height in the frontcourt (most collegiate teams have at least one six-footer on their rosters), worries Ozdarski, but she feels that her team can overcome the obstacle by playing run-and-gun, defensive oriented hoop.

The backcourt, unlike the frontcourt, returns two starters who are coming off outstanding freshman seasons.

Sue Peters, a 5-7 wow-the-crowd type, is assured of one guard spot. A superb athlete, Peters last year led the Minutewomen in scoring with a 16.3 per game average and also hauled down five caroms per outing. Her offensive repertoire includes outside jumpers, driving layups, and, on special occasions, a reverse layup or two.

Sue Henry, a 5-5 guard, will be Peters' mate in the backcourt. She hands out assists like Jimmy Carter does smiles (eight a game) and also bombs away from downtown with a silky smooth outside shot or drives the lane for layup. The attempts fell in often enough for her to record an 8.4 points per game figure last season.

"They've been through the program for a year now," Ozdarski said of her mercurial guard tandem, "And they know what I want them to do."

Although the starting five is important, Ozdarski relies on her bench extensively. In the 1976-77 campaign, the 'super-subs' contributed greatly to the team's success, which included an 18-5 record, a state Divivon I championship, and a nine-game winning streak.

UMass was seeded third in the Easterns before being dumped in the quarterfinals by Springfield College, 66-64, in genuine upset.

Anyway, the current 14 healthy players on the roster will all see a great deal of playing time under Ozdarski's system.

"The kids know they're gonna play," the coach said. "They'll all play under my coaching philosophy. And they'll all give 100 per cent."

But the subs are relatively inexperienced. With the exception of guards Grace Martinelli and Julie McHugh (and her season will start late due to field hockey), none have played UMass basketball before.

"All the kids look good, though," Ozdaski said. "They've shown a willingness to work."

Heading up the forward bench strength is freshman Cathy Harrington. A recruit from Acton-Boxboro High School, where she set the state scholastic high jump record with a 5-5 leap, the 5-11 recruit oozes potential.

Lori Green, a 5-11 sophomore transfer from UMass-Boston, provides the Minutewomen with height off the bench.

Kathy Horrigan, a 5-9 sophormore transfer from Berkshire Community College, and Peggy Barber, a 5-10 freshman from Amherst Regional High School, are expected to add strength in the frontcourt.

Jen Parker, a 5-7 junior transfer from Southern Connectivut (that perennial woman's basketball powerhouse,) is expected to alternate between guard and forward.

Along with Martinelli and McHugh at guard, 5-6 frosh Mary Halleran and 5-7 senior Deb McCulloch provide the bench strenght in the backcourt.

Oh yes. Come January 31, a new player is expected to join UMass for second semester action. She's a 6-4 center with "the best shot for a big girl I've ever seen," according to Ozdarski.

But that's two months away. By that time, the Minutewomen will have played the bulk of their regular season games, including a week-long road trip to New York to take on (gulp) Queens, Adelphi, and people like that.

And, UMass will also have met Vermont, Maine, St. John's, Rutgers, and Rhode Island by then.

But Ozdarski isn't concerned.

"Togetherness as a team and a willingness to work toghether will help us," she said.

It should be an intriguing season, indeed.

UMass' co-captain

Carey sets the example

by Judy Van Handle
Collegian Staff

Cheryl Carey will never grab any headlines.

The chances of seeing 'Carey scores 24 points, leads UMass to win' are practiclly negligible.

And Carey realizes it.

"My position isn't ccoring 20 points a game," she says realistically. "I create situations where other people on the team can score."

But basketball aficionados know her true value to the team. And so do her teammates.

> "Cheryl does the little things right. She is a tremendously knowledgable floor player"
> - Ozdarski

Cheryl Carey was elected by her peers to be one of the 1977-78 UMass women's basketball team's co-captains.

"That was excellent!" Carey said, beaming about her teammates' choice of her to be one of their leaders. "As a transfer student, it's a great honor. Being voted it means something, too. It shows your teammates respect you and have confidence in you."

But four years ago, even just playing collegiate basketball was the farthest thing from her mind.

Back up to 1973. The then Cheryl Boron was THE star of Western Mass. girls' high school basketball. The third scholastic girl in the area to score 1,000 points in a career, she helped lead her Frontier Regional team to the Western Mass. title in her junior year.

And then came senior year. Frontier was again favored to win the championship. But in the title game, the Redskins were upset by Amherst Regional.

"I didn't play well, and the whole team didn't play well," Carey says four years later, reflecting back on the contest. "And I just got sick of basketball."

Carey, disappointed and disillusioned from her high school experience, abandoned all thoughts of playing collegiate hoop. And so one of the top scorers in Western Mass. girls' basketball history went to work as a UMass secretary.

But she soon had a change of heart. After a year away from school, Carey decided to enroll in Greenfield Community College.

Carey went back to playing basketball there, while earning her associates degree in recreation. In the fall of 1975, she also married Rick Carey.

Carey transferred to UMass upon her 1976 graduation, and tried out for the basketball squad. She immediately impressed coach Mary Ann Ozdarski with her hustle and drive.

"You'll never find a better worker than Cheryl," Ozdarski said. "She knows the value of hard work. She's so conscientious."

And Carey also waxes rhapsodically about her coach.

"She's not only a good coach, but a fantastic person," Carey says, refering to Ozdarski. "She makes her athletes feel like they have something to contribute to the team.

"She's made us realize that athletics isn't only winning, but it's having fun, too" she added.

Carey averaged 5.4 points and three rebounds a game last season while alternating between guard and forward. But offensive statistics hardly concern the 5'6 senior.

"I really love defense," she says. "I find it more satisfying than scoring points. To make the other person work, it's something I like to do.

"You have to dig so much deeper playing defense. It's much more intense. You have to bear down and think and concentrate."

Not only is Carey a defensive demon, but her work on offense is truly that of unselfishness. And that fits perfectly into Ozdarski's team philosophy.

"Cheryl does so much away from the ball that goes unnoticed," the coach marvels. "She sets the picks that let other players score.

"Cheryl does the little things right. She is a tremendously knowledgable floor player."

"I have to work hard," Carrey says. "I have to work with the basic fundamentals, like boxing out."

Now that her fellow co-captain, Lu-Ann Fletcher, is out indefinitely with a knee injury, even more of a burden falls upon Carey.

"It's tough for her," Ozdarski says. "The task of co-captain is all going to be on her shoulders."

"It's a hard adjustment to say Lu's not going to be here," Carey says. "It's going to take more out us to compensate for Lu. We'll have to have a great desire to play and reach for more. We just can't let up.

"It's gotta come from us," she continues. "We'll have to play intense basketball for 40 minutes every game. We'll all have to contribute and play as well as we can."

And not only is her role on the team exhausting, but so is her hectic lifestyle.

"Energy drains are coming from more directions," Carey notes. "I have to take care of the house and prepare meals. Many times I get exhausted. But I feel I have to be an example to my teammates."

And with Cheryl Carey's attitude, there is little doubt that she will prove to be just that.

Cheryl Carey proves that she can sky as well as dive for loose balls. (staff photo by Pat Dobbs)

A young club to rely on 'D'

By George O'Brien
Collegian Staff

The $64,000 question for this winter: Can the 1977-78 UMass hockey team possibly survive the loss of 11 seniors, the effects of a crippling no-scholarship program, the loss of its junior varsity team, a tough schedule and manage to improve on last year's dismal 8-13-1 record and possibly make the ECAC Division II post-season playoffs&

Coach Jack Canniff, now in his 11th year, says he doesn't have the answer to that one yet. But he admits that the road back to the top will certainly not be an easy one.

The Minutemen will enter their new season minus no less than seniors from last year, including the top scoring line, three consistent defensemen, and the two top goaltenders.

Gone from last year's squad are forwards Mike Merchant, Carl Burns, Frank Snow(which comprised last year's top scoring line); Paul Hurley, Mike Badger and Kevin Sullivan; defensemen Bob McCormack, Bob Jefferson and Chris Lamby, an All-East selection the last three years; and goaltenders Dana Redmond and Doug Janik, who did practically all of the netminding last season.

To fill the huge voids left by these departed seniors Canniff has some fine returning veterans and several young players, many of whom show good promise, but have little experience.

On defense, an area that just might be the key to a winning year, the Minutemen have three good pairings. One duo consists of veteran Brian Kitteridge and freshman Barry Milan. Sophomore Dean Liacos and freshman Chris Lowey will make up a second pair while junior Ron Valicenti will combine with sophomore Jamie Benelli to form a third pairing. According to Canniff, Benelli did a super job when called up from the JV's last season.

Other defensemen who may see action during the year are freshmen John Gallagher, Steve Tripp, and Eric Jacobson. Canniff, who skated seven blue liners in the team's two scrimmage games against BC, said he would probably skate six during the year.

The Minutemen lost both scrimmages by scores of 6-2 and 5-3.

Canniff said he was hoping to get more output on offense than he got last year. One line he is hoping will do some scoring will feature Don Murphy centering Billy White and John Peters. The Murphy-White-Peters line scored two goals against BC and played very well, according to Canniff.

A second will have senior Lincoln Flagg centering for Nick Carney and Billy Estes. Freshman Mark Ferragamo will be between Joseph Milan and Frank Pycko for a third line, while Richard Kenny centering for Gene Crowly and Doug Limone will comprise a fourth line.

The goaltending will be handled by seniors John Reily and Peter McCann. Both players saw little action last year, but are "quite capable," acording to Caniff.

Canniff said both goalies played well against BC and that most of the goals scored could be blamed on poor defense in the slot and not on the goaltending.

Canniff added that defense was a "total team problem," and that if the team was going to win this year it would have to keep the game close by keeping the other team off the scoreboard.

While the defense will be important, Canniff said it will be the offense that will be a big key.

"A lot depends on what kind of offense we can produce. We have a more explosive offensive than last year and should score more goals," siad Canniff.

The Minutemen will be hoping to improve on last year's very disappointing 8-13-1 record (8-11-1 in Division II) and end a three-year playoff drought.

The Minutemen will not play any Division I teams this season. Last season UMass was 0-2 in Division I, losing to Vermont, 4-2, and Northeastern, 11-1. The last time UMass defeated a Division I team was in January, 1975 when it dropped Yale.

UMass will play 20 games in ECAC Division II, which has a new playoff format.

The league will be divided into two conferences, East and West, with separate playoffs in each conference. Eight teams will be selected from each conference for the playoffs.

UMass, which is in the Eastern conference, will have some stiff competition standing between it and a playoff berth. Army, AIC, Hamilton, Union, Middlebury, Oswego, Salem State, Bowdoin, Buffalo, and Merrimack are but a few of the tougher opponents on the schedule.

Canniff was not overly optimistic about his team's chances to make the playoffs, but did say he thought he had a good team and there was a "possibility we can make the playoffs."

Canniff spoke highly of the defensive corps and the goaltending but raised questions about the offensive punch and overall depth.

"We're not going to win the 9-8 game," said Canniff. "We have to keep the game close and hope to score enough goals to win. We have to win the 3-2 game."

Canniff said he thought the loss of the JV program would definitely hurt the team. "We have a lot of freshmen and sophomores that could really be developed in the JV's. It's (losing the JV team) definitely going to have an effect."

The Minutemen will be without the services of star forward Bobby White for at least the first game. Bobby, the twin brother of forward Billy, has a knee injury that could keep him out as long as two weeks.

The season began Wednesday night when UMass took on a tough New England College squad in Henniker, New Hampshire. The Minutemen then come home to battle the University of Lowell before leaving for a five-game road trip featuring AIC, UConn, Norwich, Middlebury and Army.

The White twins provide UM with goals and senior savvy

By Michael McHugh
Collegian Staff

The World Hockey Association has the Howe Brothers and the National Hockey League has the Esposito brothers. They slam bodies into the boards, block shots, and whistle wrist shots on glazened sheets of ice in hockey arenas across North America.

UMass has its own version of hard-nosed hockey brothers - seniors Bill and Bob White. Although they haven't played in hockey rinks across North America, they've done something that neither the Howes nor Espositos will ever accomplish - they were born on the same day (they're twins).

Both Bill and Bob, 22, hail from Revere, where they started playing organized hockey in pee-wees that spanned to their stardom at Revere High School. Bill played left wing and Bob played right wing on the same line at Revere High.

Hockey coach Jack Canniff has carried on that tradition at UMass.

"I've played them together for three years and I can't imagine breaking them apart," he said.

"The White brothers are two very strong competitors, who have spirit and a lot of hustle. They have the type of character that rubs off on other people," Canniff added.

One might speculate that two brothers on the same team could only spell trouble in the manner of a rivalry. Not so between the White brothers.

"We've always been on the same teams together," said Bob. "It helps because we help each other out when the other is lacking off. We'll get on each other's ass, whereas a regular player might be afraid to tell someone else off."

The Whites have been playing varsity hockey at UMass since they were freshmen in 1974. Bill added that "we've been playing regularly since the fourth game of our freshman year."

The Whites know of the 1972 UMass hockey team that won the ECAC Division II title just before their arrival in 1974 and they've noticed a lot of changes since their freshman year.

Bob said that "each year the program is..."

Bill interrupted, "going downhill."

Bill said that "because there's no money and scholarships, UMass will be unable to get the highly talented players."

Bob said "The only way UMass is going to get talented players is from the greater Boston area, where there's so many good players that some might spill over to UMass."

"Up at UMass, you have to really love hockey b ecause we have to practice away from the campus," said Bill.

"A three o'clock practice session means leaving my home at two to go down to Curry Hicks Cage. If I get there before 2:30, I can't park near the Cage because it will get towed, so I've got to park somewhere else. We practice at Orr Rink until five, come back to the Cage, shower, and finally, get home around six. So you're talking about three-four hours for a two-hour practice session," added Bill.

The attendance at UMass hockey games at Orr Rink (located on the Amherst College campus) has been miserable the past few years and consequently, the Minutemen are, in reality, a team without a home.

"How can you get motivated to play hockey before six or seven people " asks Bill. "The home ice is supposed to be a one-goal advantage, but not for us. Personally, I think someone is trying to make conditions miserable, so that they can phase out hockey at UMass."

Brother Bob thinks that "A rink at UMass-Amherst would draw fans to the rink and indrease attendance."

Both Whites feel that "the caliber of Division II team play is evening out" and as a result, both feel that "UMass is going to surprise a lot of people this year."

"This year's team is more aggressive," said Bob. "The freshmen are challenging a lot of people and pushing them to try harder. In fact, down at Boston College (an exhibition game two weeks ago) the guys were really hitting. A friend of mine from BC complained about high sticks, which meant we were aggressive. There were too many lapses last year, but with the young kids competing this year, we'll be more aggressive."

Bill said, "The freshmen are pushing harder this year because they know if they don't make the team, they can't play hockey for another year. That's because there's no junior varsity team this year. There aren't any 40-goal scorers on the team, so we're just going to concentrate on a tight defense. We'll be a hard working team that'll surprise a lot of people."

Bob White is nursing partially torn ligaments in his left leg for two weeks, but he expects to be back soon.

Bob plans to shave his mustache, which will eliminate the only distinguishing characteristic between the twins. So, if you happen to venture to Orr rink this year and you can't tell the White brothers apart, just look for number 15 flashing down left wing-that's Bill- and number 10 flashing down the right wing-that's Bob.

Co-captain Billy White looks for skating room as he begins a rush from behind his own net. The 22 year-old forward has been a three-year starter for the Minutemen, and hopes to have his efforts pay off in a Division II playoff spot. (staff photo by Pat Dobbs)

Wrestling

An optimistic outlook brightens UMass hopes

by Steve Buckley
Collegian Staff

The UMass Wrestling team has promise. True, Fenton, Riley, Spaulding,Jabut, and a number of last year's stars are gone, but coach Dave Amato thinks his team will surprise people.

Only five lettermen---Kevin Griffin, Tim Fallon, Larry Otsuka, Keith Dixon, and Dave Daly---are returning from last year. The rest of the squad is make up of grapplers who toyed in the junior varsity ranks last season and freshmen.

Despite the extensive schedule (UMass opens the season with a quad-match with URI, Syracuse, and Michigan; all nationally ranked colleges), don't ignore this young team.

Look for three wrestlers---Griffin, Fallon and Otsuka---to gain increased prominance throughout New England. Griffin won his first New England championship last year in the 150-pound class, but is expected to wrestle mostly at 158 lbs. this season. Fallon (150 lbs) and Otsuka (134 lbs) are ready to make the big move. Both are good, strong wrestlers with a lot of experience and stand excellent shots at winning New England crowns this season.

The big hole seems to be at 190 lbs.where Amato has not found anybody to step in. Bob Radiwitz and Steve Whitman are two wrestlers in the 177 pound class and when the team begins wrestle-offs for its first meet these two will be pitted against each other. More than likely, the winner will wrestle in the 177 pound class while the loser takes his chances in the heavier class.

Heavyweights John Allen (who also plays junior varsity football) and Marty Rogers are both freshmen. Allen is lighter than Rogers, but his credentials include a national prep-school championship. Both will be wrestling off for the varsity spot, but it seems that they will probably alternate for much of the season.

Griffin, Fallon, and Steve Haskell fill out the middle weight classes along with Mike Metrowski, Gary Minski, Mike Cunningham, and Steve Joyce. Joyce may wrestle at 167 pounds, along with Dave O'Brien, who has looked impressive in early practices and is another freshman who may see plenty of varsity action.

As stated previously, Larry Otsuka will be the top man at 134 pounds, but there is a great deal of talent here, and it seems that Amato has this weight class well-stocked for the future. Charles Rigogoliso has a solid reputation, and Mike Carroll, Greg Schoener, Gary Rotatori, and Steve McLarney (150 pounds) also have good high school experience.

Dana Rasmussen was named "Wrestler of the Year" by The Boston Globe last year when he was a high school grappler in Tewksbury, and the freshman is expected to do a lot of wrestling in the 118 pound weight class. However, he has been hampered with a collarbone injury lately and has not been doing any heavy training with the team.

If Rasmussen is healthy, UMass can be quite powerful at 118 pounds and 126 pounds.

UMass also has the services of Dave Daly, who shared the 118 pound duties last year with Paul Belanger, who is taking the semester off, and Pete Sachon, who graduated last spring.

Dave Amato has said that Dave Krase and Keith Dixon will likely do the wrestling at 126 lbs., while Rich Schriazzi and Springfield's Tony Perry will stay at 118 pounds.

There are, of course, more names. One can expect to see a number of different wrestlers popping from varsity to junior varsity and from one weight class to another. With all the experimenting that Amato is likely to do, the true depth of this UMass team may not be fully realized until near the very end of the season. By that time, Amato should be able to accurately assess the talent before him as the squad prepares for the New England championships at URI in March.

The UMass sports fan may find college wrestling very interesting to take in. You won't see any Bruno Sammartinos or Chief Jay Strongbows, and you won't see Amato trip up opponents or hit them with a cane.

What will be seen, however, is the sport of wrestling performed almost as an art form by about 40 atheletes who have put in long hours of practice in a never ending quest for near-perfection.

Kevin Griffin (r) and Tim Fallon were opponents in high school, but this time it's just for practice as they scrimmage each other during a recent Minuteman practice. The two senior co-captains of the UMass wrestling team hope to lead their teammates to a successful season under second-year coach Dave Amato. (staff photo by Pat Dobbs)

Fallon and Griffin

Opponents become teamates

by Steve Buckley
Collegian Staff

In early 1974, two high school wrestlers from different schools participated in a tournament to derermine state champions for the year. Each was the captain of his respective team- the leader.

One of the wrestlers had had a seperated shoulder and was told by doctors that perhaps he should not wrestle. He did and he lost.

The winner called it one of his toughest matches ever, noting that his opponent had him in a cradle for over a minute at one point in the match.

Why reminisce about high school wrestling match from a bygone era between two obscure atheletes? Well sit back in your chairs as a chilling tale of fate unfolds before your very eyes.

The two combatants were Timmy Fallon, from Lowell High School, and Kevin Griffin, from Brookline High School. They didn't know it then, but the future held that not only would these two men become teammates but roomates as well.

"When Homer Barr (the late UMass wrestling coach) told me that Fallon was coming to UMass," said Griffin, "I almost died. I did not want to wrestle him for the next four years.

"Griffin took care of that," laughs Fallon, "he got a little fat, and now wrestles in a heavier weight class."

Tim Fallon and Kevin Griffin, co-captains of the Umass wrestling team are buddies. Once pitted against each other in high school competition, they now work toghether for one common goal: the elelvation of the UMass wrestling program. They work together, they train together, and along with fellow wrestlers Larry Otsuka and Steve Whitman, they share an apartment together.

Being captain of any team is certainly a huge responsibility, but for Fallon and Griifin the pressure is greater. Last year's captain, Dennis Fenton, left UMass as a legend in his own time and one of New Englands great all-time grapplers.

"Fenton was a great wrestler, and it's tough to step into his shoes, but the beauty of this sport is that not even a Fenton can carry an entire team," says Fallon.

"A captain can only do so much," says Griffin. Each guy has to be in top shape or the whole team suffers.

For Griffin, a Food Sciences major, there is extra pressure involved here. Saddled with an extensive lab schedule, Griff usually finds himself late for practice and thus must work extra hard.

To this, Griffin says, "I know I should be at practice more, I'm a team captain. I want to help my teammates as much as I can so I guess I have to prove myself worthy of my job sometimes."

Last spring, while Fentom was winning his forth consecutive New England heavyweight title, Griffin was winning his title at 150 pounds. Fallon finished in third place in the 158 pound class. This year, Griffin will wrestle mostly at 158 and Fallon will compete at 150 pounds.

"We vary our weights a lot," says Fallon. We've actually been pretty sneaky. In four years Kevin and I have never had to wrestle off each other for a varisity spot. The two of us have always been going at different weights."

The term "wrestle off" deals with who will wrestle in a given match. If a member of the team feels that he can beat, say, Tim Fallon, then he may challenge him to a wrestle-off. The winner would then wrestle in the varsity match. The result is that nobody can take it easy--everybody has to work to keep his sopt on the team.

Obviously, Griffin and Fallon have worked hard. Both men attribute their success to the support of their families. Early this year, Griffin won the New England freestyle championship at 167 pounds. Among the rooters were his father and uncle. Kevin's younger brother Liam was also in the crowd, cheering his brother on all the way.

"He was really great to have around that day," said Griffin. "He had a singlet (wrestling suit) on under his clothes and he was wrestling all the other kids on the sidelines."

Fallon's father has been to many of his son's matches, too. As a matter of fact, Griffin and Fallon's fathers have become good friends, often sitting together in the stands while their kids do their thing.

Coach Dave Amato is quite happy about the success of his two captains.

"They both have done very well the past few years, and I think that this year they can be even better," said Amato. "Tim and Kevin can't do it alone, but we're counting on them and Larry Otsuka (134 pounds) to win and urge on the younger wrestlers. These are the guys with all the experience."

The co-captains are optimistic.

"We start our season with three nationally ranked schools, and I think we can surprise them," says Griffin. "We have a team with a lot of desire and I think that we're going to win our share of matches."

"We wrestle some good schools," says Fallon, "but I think that we can stay with them. Even if we don't win we certainly won't embarrass ourselves and I hope that the students will come out and support us."

The bottom line is that Griffin and Fallon are ready. As seniors, this is their last hurrah and they want to go out with style.

"Next year we won't be able to wrestle except for tournaments, so I guess we really want to go all out this year," Fallon says.

And what about next year? Griffin is weighing the possibilities of grad school, and Fallon, a major in Physical Education, is interested in a career in teaching. Fallon apparently doesn't want to put wrestling out of his mind completely, as he is also interested in giving coaching a try.

Oh, you're probably wondering who won that high-school match between Fallon and Griffin. The next time UMass has a wrestling meet, go on down to Boyden and ask them.

One of them will be glad to tell you.

Men's Gymnastics

Frosh-filled Minutemen gird for winter battles

By Corey Rinker
Collegian Staff

Coach Dick Swetman's UMass gymnastics team is looking forward to the opening of its season with the possibilities ahead of an excellent year.

But there is one catch - besides being a potentially very talented team it is also an incredibly young one. Coming off last year's successful season which saw the team ranked in the top 20 nationally according to stat scores, graduation took its inevitable toll.

Gone are three crucial all-arounders, Steve and Paul Marks and Angelo Scuderi, and the squad's top ring man, Mike DiMuro. This leaves Swetman with a team of about 25 gymnasts, and amazingly, over half of them are freshman.

The two seniors on the team (count 'em, two), should provide capable leadership, though, as co-captain David Kulakoff (junior Steve Nuno is the other cptain) and John Forshay come off outstanding seasons and are looking very strong again going into this winter's campaign.

Kulakoff won the side horse event in last year's competition of the Eastern Intercollegiate Gymnastics League (of which UMass is a member), while Forshay finished fifth in the vaulting competition of the EIGL.

The team's backbone, however, the four all-arounds, will consist of probable at least two freshmen. Bob Donahue, a sophomore, has one of the spots locked up and junior Frank Cohen has the second slot - if he is healthy.

Cohen is nursing an injury and if he isn't able to compete, the spots will go to freshmen Al Wallace, Bob Lamb, and Paul O'Neil, with John Brzorad having an outside shot.

If Cohen does come back quickly, then those four first-year men will be fighting it out for the remaining spots.

Swetman is also looking to specialist John Nelson, ("a very pretty performer, who in the parallel and high bars should be a very big asset") freshman Steve Craig ("looking real good in the floor exercise with difficult double backs and all") and especially to floor exercise man David Buegler.

"He's got a lot of good talent and style. He's very good and could conceivably win the Easterns this year, even as a freshman," hopes Swetman. Agreeing with this assessment is assistant coach Joel James, who like Swetman, is in his second year of UMass Coaching. He's a recent graduate of UMass (nursing major) and is now an RN to go along with his coaching duties.

UMass opens its season on November 30 against Boston State, and this should just be a warm-up for a schedule that includes the likes of Southern Connecticut (number one last year), Army, Springfield, Temple, and a big double dual meet with Penn State.

Thus far into practices, Swetman likes what he sees.

"I'm not looking for too much, what with the relative inexperience and age of the team, but in the first intersquad last week I was hoping for a 200 score - an average of 8.3 an event - and we came real close with a 197."

"The number one team in the country last year finished with a 212 (about an 8.8), so we'll have some work to do, but if all the guys just realize their potential and do their best, which is the most important thing, we should have a pretty good year," he said.

And the team should have a good year and get better as it goes on. The critical factor is how fast the freshmen come on, and with the number of very promising frosh with the team, as well as the proven capabilities of key members Kulakoff and Forshay, the team could go a long way.

And whatever happens, there will always be the return of that successful and entertaining show of gymnastics, the tumbling, juggling, of the Gymstravoganza.

Swimming

Newcomers bolster men's hopes

By Mark Marchand
Collegian Staff

Featuring nine returnees from last year's 4-7 squad, the UMass men's swim team will plunge into its 1977-78 campaign on December 6 when the Minutemen play host to Worcester Polytechnic Institute.

Under the able coaching of former Olympian Bei Melamed, the Minutemen have been undergoing twice a day workouts for two weeks now in preparation for the opener.

"I really don't know what's going to happen," says Melamed. "Other teams have recruited heavily but we couldn't because we don't have any scholarship money. Swimming just isn't a top priority sport at this school."

Tops among the returnees is senior Russ Yarworth, who currently holds five individual records and is a co-holder of the record for the 400-yard individual medley relay. The senior biochemistry major has had some shoulder problems as of late but has kept in competitive form while playing water polo.

"If Russ can be as dedicated as he was last year, I expect him to have an excellent season," said Melamed.

Yarworth amassed a total of 92 points last year enroute to his finest season at UMass. In addition, he placed second in the 400-yard IM and third in the 200-yard IM during last year's New England championships. Barring any further health problems, Yarworth should equal, if not top, his performances of a year ago.

Other returnees expected to add experience to the team include long distance specialists Dave Hoffman and Don O'Malley; freestylers Harry Fulford, Pete Ziomek, Dennis Buss, and Steve Rizzo; and divers Jim Antonino and Dan Conley.

Hoffman, a junior chemistry major, is in his third season as a Minuteman and is looking to better his times of last season.

"It's a little early to tell what kind of season I'm going to have but I do think that this is the best team in the three years that I've been here," said Hoffman.

Also, back after one-year absence, George Collias and Tom Nowak are expected to add depth to the team, according to Melamed.

Among the newcomers to this year's squad, a lot is expected from freshman Bill Tyler, who comes here after a brilliant high school career with Amherst Regional.

The Amherst native is a butterfly and freestyle specialist and holds the New England high school record in the 100 yard freestyle.

In addition, he holds five individual records and shares two relay records at Amherst Regional High. His list of accomplishmenst includes being named MVP in Western Mass. during last year's schoolboy season.

"There are a lot of good individuals on this team but I don't know how we'll do because I haven't seen the competition that we'll be up against," said Tyler.

"Coming to school and swimming here is a different world compared with high school."

Other schoolboy stars who are expected to lend depth to Melamed's charges are Tom Stevens and Jim Leland. Both were selected as Western Mass. MVP's during their high school days.

"They should really help the team but Bill Tyler cannot be a whole swim team," said Melamed.

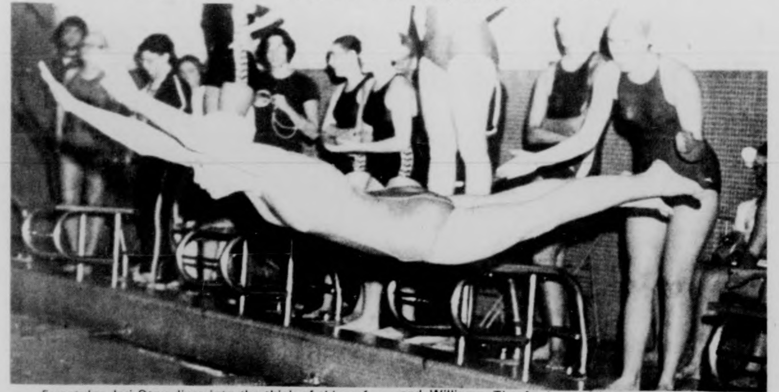
Freshmen Bob DeConinch and diver Dan Anthony are two other newcomers who should help add to the UMass scoring this year.

As in the past, Melamed has seen his squad dwindle from the first day of workouts to the first meet. This year, 35 candidates showed up for the first workout but that number has now been slashed to a current roster of 20.

"Some people that could have continued and helped us have just chosen not to pursue it any further," lamented Melamed.

So right now it's a 'wait and see' period for the Minutemen.

As O'Malley puts it: "Just wait till January."



Freestyler Jeri Otey dives into the thick of things for the Minutewomen during the first meet of the season. UMass has gotten of to a 2-0 start by defeating Smith and Williams. The freshman-filled team continues its season tomorrow with a home match against Vermont. Meet time is 1pm in NOPE pool. (staff photo by Ellen Davis)

Women plunge into campaign

By ELLEN DAVIS
Collegian Staff

"Ready Ho!"

Since the middle of September, this familiar cry has echoed through NOPE pool, as the 25 swimmers on the UMass women's swimming and diving team have been getting in shpae for their season, which began Monday.

Although 50 percent of this year's team are freshmen, and there is only one senior, the team is the largest in a long time, and "looks promising," according to coach John Nunnelly.

"We have a lot of good talent," says Nunnelly, "and everyone is trying hard. Some times have been remarkable."

The team got off to a slow start because last year's coach, Eve Atkinson, went to Yale, and it was a month until a new coach was hired. But, led by co-captains Lise Hembrough and Rachel Mack, workouts began without a coach, and the team gradually worked their way up to swimming 5,000 yards (200 laps) a day.

The women parctice on weekdays from 4-6 p.m. at NOPE, with extra practices two mornings a week from 6:30-8:00 a.m. for those with enough will power to get up.

This year, the team has a long 14-meet schedule, with many difficult opponents. According to Nunnelly, Yale and Springfield, along with UConn and Maine, should give the Minutewomen the most competition.

Following their regular season meets, the year will climax with the New England's on Feb. 16, 17, and 18, and the Easterns on March 3,4,and 5. Nunnelly also expects to send some swimmers to the Nationals on March 16,17,and 18.

So they can reach a peak in February, and not get out of condition over intercession, the swimmers will be having a three-week intensive training program here during the long vacation period. During those three weeks, the team will be swimming 10-12,000 yards a day, in two sessions.

To raise money for the intercession program, the women participated in a twohour "Crawl-a-Thon" last Thursday.

Not to be forgotten on the women's swimming and diving team are the five divers seen spinning and twisting through the air at every practice. Just like the swimmers, there are more divers out for the team than ever before, and this is the first year for four of them. "That means they're pushing one another to do better dives," says second-year coach Doug Forsyth. "It's really showing now. They're all doing good degree of difficulty dives."

With his divers doing so well, Forsyth hopes they will take three of the top five places in the New Englands if they work hard enough.

During the regular season, Forsyth expects the toughest competition from Maine, UNH, and Springfield, as he did last year. In these, as well as the 11 other meets they will be in, the divers will participate in two events consisting of required and optional dives.

Track

Senior Nancy Cominoli, one of several all-around athletes on the Minutewomen track squad, is part of a nucleus of veterans who are returning to possibly make them a contender for an Eastern title. Last year, she tied one record and set another, and ran on three record-breaking relay quartets. She competes in the 100 yard dash, 100 meter hurdles, long jump and on three relays. The UMass women's indoor track team returns this season virtually intact after an outstanding initial indoor season and second outdoor campaign last year.

Only four distance runners; Maggie Crowley, Julie Lafreniere, Jane Welzel and Jo Chapman graduated from the squad which took fifth indoors in the Eastern Championships.

"Once again, we'll be looking at the indoor season as a conditioning phase for the outdoor season," said assistant coach Gary King. "We should do well once again with the nucleus we have returning and several good freshmen."

Top returnees include Diana Sealy, Nancy Cominoli, Chris Perron, Cindy Martin and Sue Kibling.

Sealy, a junior, set the quarter mile record (57.4) last season, and had a hand in four record breaking relay efforts.

"She could go under 55 seconds in the quarter this season," said King.

Cominoli, a senior, is probably the most versatile athlete on the squad. Last season, she was the top long jumper (15'10 1/2"), tied the 100 yard dash record (11.6), set the 100 meter hurdle record (14.77) and collaborated on three of those relay records.

Possibly the best pure athlete on the team is Perron. The sophomore from Lowell competed nationally while in high school, and while, according to King, "she hasn't matched those performances up here," she still has tremendous potential.

Perron set the 440 intermediate hurdle record (64.5) last year, along with being the second performer in the 100, 100 meter hurdles (14.99), and running on the record setting mile relay team.

Martin is a junior sprinter and middle distance runner who ran the second fastest 220 (26.9) and 440 (58.9) times last year along with running all four record relays.

Another key member of the relay squads is sophomore Kathy Contini, who also runs the 220 and 440.

The four relay records were set in the 4x110 (50.1), by Sealy, Martin, Cominoli and Contini at Eastern's; the 4x220 (1:48.4), by the same foursome at the UMass Relays; the sprint medley (1:50.5; for a 440, 220, and two 110's), by Sealy, Contini, Martin and Perron, at Eastern's.

Another relay record was shattered in the Eastern's, as Laurie Wolf, Sue Mulligan, Bonnie Bukowski and Karen Zimmerman combined to set a new 4x880 standard (9:39.8).

Wolf and Mulligan are in school, Zimmerman has graduated, and Bukowski is on exchange for the fall semester. Her return, plus the addition of freshman Priscilla Wilson (2:19 at Mohawk Reg. High) may spell the end of that record.

Kibling, a senior, will be coming back from a leg injury which kept her from competing in the spring, but the versatile athlete, currently playing on the NCAA-bound field hockey team, should once again be the Minutewomen's top pentathlete.

Kibling took third in the event in the indoor Eastern's, after competing in the high jump, shot put, hurdles, long jump and 880.

The typically strong distance corps was decimated by graduation, but still returns cross country co-captain Sue Swartz, an Eastern placewinner in three mile indoors and outdoors; and Deb Farmer, Barb Callanan, and Anne Bradshaw, all who placed in the top ten in both Eastern meets in distance events.

The distance runs will also be bolstered by freshmen Wilson, Tina Francario, who is coming off an excellent cross country season; and Linda Welzel, who, like Wilson and Francario, impressed with her performance this fall.

"Other freshmen who will help are a 17' long jumper, Karen Stillman; 5-6 high jumper, Patty Owen; and a couple good shotputters," said King.

The women will compete in a 16 event program indoors, including the 100, 220, and 440 yard dashes; the 100 meter high hurdles; one, two, three, and half mile runs; the high and long jumps; shot put; and 4x110, 4x440, 4x880, and sprint medley relays.

The team may compete in a couple low level meets, such as the UConn Invitational, before intersession, but will not hit the bulk of the schedule until January.

The first big meet is the US Track and Field Federation Invitational on January 14th at Dartmouth.

"All the best athletes from the East coast will be there," said King. "It's a wide open meet, with divisions from high school right up to AAU, and the competition is fierce."

King expects the team to improve this season, and said several athletes have approached him and informed him they're planning on making the nationals. He believes it's a possibility for some, with striking improvement definate.

"We'll be going low-key again this winter," he said, "but even at that we were fifth indoors in the Eastern's and third outdoors. It workked and we peaked properly. We were the number one team in New England last year, and I think with the people we've brought in, along with what we have returning, we'll do well."

Newcomer Nunnelly to coach swimwomen

By Ellen Davis
Collegian Staff

"Three, Three, Three!" A voice emerges from the office at NOPE pool, signaling the beginning of another day's workout for the UMass women's swim team.

"Let's go everybody! Eight laps butterfly for anyone not in the water in ten seconds!"

The voice is that of John Nunnelly, the team's new coach this year. Nunnelly replaced Eve Atkinson, who is now women's swimming coach at Yale.

"Swimming is 99. psychological and 1. physical when you're in shape," says Nunnelly, an all-american swimmer.

In 1975, he took fifth place in the 400 individual medley at the nationals in Detroit.

Nunnelly started swimming at the age of nine, in his hometown of Los Angeles. He spent his high school years in western Europe, where he swam and was coach of his high school team.

After graduation, he got a congressional appointment to the Merchant Marine Academy in New York, so he returned to the United States and studied Nautical Science.

After college, he worked on a tugboat and then a freighter before coming to UMass last spring to take more courses so he can become a secondary school science teacher.

"I was always interested in coaching," said Nunnelly, "so when the job here opened up, I applied. It saved me from going out to sea again."

How does he feel about coaching 25 women?

"It's challenging," he said, "but swimming is a genderless sport, so that applies for women."

Besides coaching, Nunnelly is busy trying to recruit top high school swimmers for next year's team.

Men skiers aim for tenth title in row

by Jeffrey Glynn
Collegian Staff

The UMass men's skiing team should be very strong this year, due mainly to its considerable depth and overall talent. This is not a new occurance, however, as the UMass team has been division or league champs for the past nine years.

With the way the rules are set up, coming in first in a match becomes a very difficult task. The skiers (12 to a team) run three types of races: the downhill, the slalom, and the giant slalom. Eight skiers run in each race, with the five best times counting in the scoring. All six teams comprise the league race in the same match; the only team which gets credited for a victory is the first place finisher, while the other five teams receive a loss to their records. Therefore, winning a division title takes a great deal of skill.

The skill lies in the fact that only one competitor from last year's team will not be returning this year.

According to coach Bill MacConnell, "We have at least 15 very good skiers who are trying out for the team."

Considering the fact that only 12 players will be chosen for the squad, the team should be quite strong indeed. MacConnell went on to say that another important asset that the UMass team has is the 40 days of intersession, most of which can be devoted to all-day practice.

From the teams in UMass's league, which consist of Amherst College, Plymouth State, UConn, Boston College and Northeastern, the expected competition should come from Plymouth State and Northeastern.

The great cost of transportation and conflicts with academics remove many people on the squad who are good enough to compete on almost any other team. UMass is blessed with players who are members of the Eastern Ski Association and have five players who have come from intensive high school training in ski academies.

Before the first league match, which is on January 28th, UMass will ski in two tournaments in Canada. According to MacConnell, the Minutemen have enjoyed good success in them.

Men to depend upon harrier help

By Kevin McCaffrey
Collegian Staff

Although the cross country calendar schedules the services of track and field, head coach Ken O'Brien for just one more engagement, the prospect of a much-deserved vacation is unlikely. The UMass indoor track teams first contest is December 3.

To date, the winter season pencils in a tentative schedule of four dual and tri-meets, and four optional contests. The campaign concludes in February with the Yankee Conference and New England Championships.

O'Brien, assistants Arnie Morse, Gary King and newcomer Eric Lammi will split four ways the task of coaching the number two team in the Yankee Conference. UConn occupies the top position.

"The conference meet is always between us and UConn," said King. "Their depth in the weight events usually outpoints our strength in the running events."

Two weak elements in the track program hope to be strenghtened with a welcomed batch of new recruits.

Richard Cady, a freshman out of Albany N.Y., is expected to beef up the sprint corps with his 9.8 speed in the 100-yard dash. The hurdling trio of Paul Ennis, Paul King and Rich Handschuh are first-year men capable of reviving one of the Minutemen's low-scoring events.

The power of the track program remains in the middle and long distance races. Cross country all-Americans Mike Quinn and Stetson Arnold will use the mile and two-mile as a means of displaying their talents.

Joe Martens, Mark Healy, Rich Thompson, and John Richards, will expose experience in both the 600 and 1000 yard runs. Mike Janowski, Massachusetts high school state champ last year, enters the program with credentials to be a front-runner in either middle distance event.

The versatility of Martens, plus the presence of conference long jump champ John Slepetz aid greatly the potential success of the jumping competition. Martens, Bob Fitzgerald and freshman Don Dowden all have registered high jumps of 6'6" or better, a field event in which UMass should finish strong at the YanCons.

"This looks to be a stronger team than last year," said King. "We're confident of a successful season, a squad more than capable of challenging UConn."

Sadat to world: Israelis welcome

JERUSALEM (AP) — In a history-making appearance before the Israeli parliament, Egyptian President Anwar Sadat yesterday told the world he welcomed the Jewish state to live in peace and safety alongside Arabs in the Middle East.

"You want to live with us in this part of the world, and I welcome you among us in all safety and security," Sadat somberly told the massed leaders of a nation the Arabs have fought and vilified since it was founded 29 years ago.

His appearance in Israel was unthinkable less than two weeks ago, before Sadat made his dramatic offer to fly here. Much of the Arab world raged at the visit, a fury that escalated Sunday into calls for his assassination as a traitor.

In Washington, President Carter prayed for the success of the Sadat-Begin meeting and said the Egyptian's mission to Israel "might very well break down the barrier to peace."

Israeli Prime Minister Menahem Begin, following Sadat to the rostrum of the Knesset, called on Arab leaders to open peace negotiations and declared: "Everything must be negotiated and can be negotiated."

Begin hailed Sadat for his "courage of heart" in coming to Israel. "We Jews appreciate courage, and we will know how to appreciate our visitor's courage," he said.

He invited other Arab leaders to follow the Egyptian's example and added that he personally was prepared to go to Damascus, Amman or Beirut, the capitals of neighboring Syria, Jordan or Lebanon.

The globally-televised Knesset speech was the political climax of Sadat's visit to Israel, a land no Arab leader had visited before.

For nearly an hour, Sadat held the packed Knesset hall in thrall as he read stiffly and forcefully from a prepared Arabic text. Rabbis in skullcaps, Arabs in flowing headcloths, army generals who had battled Egypt, present and former government leaders, diplomats and journalists listened through earphones.

His visit, Sadat declared, was an "important juncture in the history of the world."

He acknowledged that in the past the Arabs had rejected Israel, refused to meet its Hampshire College President Adele Smith Simmons at her inauguration Saturday related to the audience how she was told an inauguration is like a wedding. But, she continued, "while a wedding is the beginning of a honeymoon, an inauguration is the end of one."

Simmons, elected Hampshire's third president by the college's trustees last March, was inaugurated in a ceremony which included addresses by other educators, bagpipe music, original music "representative of different cultures", a Yugoslav song and a low key student protest. Twelve hundred people attended the inaugural, held in the Robert Crown Center on the Hampshire Campus.

Presidents from other area colleges and UMass Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery participated in the "academic procession" opening the ceremony.

Recently-appointed UMass Interim President Franklin K. Patterson, the founding president of Hampshire, and Charles Longsworth, the president before Simmons, also attended.

William C. Bowen, president of Princeton University where Simmons was the dean of Student Affairs, and Smith President Jill Kerr Conway, delivered speeches.

Simmons briefly outlined the history of Hampshire in her inaugural address. "It is important," she said, "for Hampshire and institutions like it to represent in higher education a continuing commitment to develop new ideas and new approaches."

Simmons said "Hampshire's basic mission is much the same as it was 20 years ago.

"Hampshire College will neither yield to the temptation to rediscover tradition and call it innovation nor rush headlong to embrace the most recent fad," she said.

"We will instead continue to pursue our commitment to an educational program that is compatible with change and at the same time respects the past."

Bowen, in his inaugural address, quoted literary critic Thomas Powers, who said "Americans have not yet learned to be patient or temperate in dealing with social problems, and indeed, are never more confident than when they know least; and that often the American cure for the American disease — whatever cure, whatever disease — is not just worse than the disease, it is the disease."

He said "This certainly need not be right for Hampshire," and expressed his confidence in Simmons.

Conway said, "As a representative of a women's college, it is an occasion of great pleasure for me to salute a woman of this stature," upon Simmons' inauguration.

Conway also praised Hampshire's "attempt to dismantle the academic hierarchy," and its "belief in human potential and freshness of human insight."

The inauguration ceremony was also marked by the original composition of double-bassist Vishnu Wood, accompanied by his wife Elise on the flute. The music was presented between the addresses of Brown and Simmons.

At the close of the event, area instructor Michael Jovanovic told the audience his mother Ziva, from Yugoslavia, "wants to sing a song for the new lady president. Since Hampshire does not follow protocol very much...." his 85-year-old mother was given the podium.

Jovanovic explained that as a child Ziva had sung for Yugoslav head-of-state, and this prompted her to ask to sing for the new head of Hampshire College.

Ziva received resounding applause for her contribution to the ceremony.

Members of the Committee for the Liberation of South Africa were also at the inauguration. They distributed leaflets before and after the ceremony and exhibited a banner throughout the ceremony which read "U.S. out of S. Africa — Princeton and Amherst Divest."

Simmons, a graduate of Radcliffe College, earned her doctorate from the Faculty of Social Studies at Oxford University. She is an acknowledged expert in African politics. She is married and has two children.

Med school unique in pay back plan

By CHRISTOPHER H. SCHMITT
Collegian Staff

WORCESTER — The UMass medical school here now stands alone in requiring its graduates to repay the state for the cost of their education.

The 1978 state budget recently passed by the legislature and signed by Massachusetts Gov. Michael S. Dukakis requires medical school graduates beginning with the incoming class of 1978 to work off or pay back the state for the costs of their education at the medical school.

UMass trustees will consider on Dec. 7 what the specifics of the work off-pay back plan will be. The UMass medical school will be the only school in the nation with such a requirement.

The cost of a medical education here is not expensive. The students, all from Massachusetts, pay $840 a year for tuition. Tuition next year will be $900.

Compared to the costs of other nearby medical schools, even the increased figure is not expensive. At Tufts University and Boston University, costs range between $5,000 to 6,000 a year. At Brown University medical school in Providence, R.I., costs total near $7,500 a year.

On the other hand, the salary potential of graduates as doctors is high.

It is this paradox, the low cost of the medical education here and the high salaries doctors command, that has brought about the state's decision to implement the work off-pay back plan.

The med school was authorized by an act of the Massachusetts Legislature in 1962. In 1965, a decision was made to locate the school here in Worcester. The school occupies some 125 acres of land on the eastern edge of the city.

Each year, about 1000 students apply for admission, and 100 are offered positions at the medical school. All students are from Massachusetts, but their educational backgrounds are from colleges and universities across the nation.

The curriculum of the school offers training in a wide range of subjects. Students may study surgery, family practice, internal medicine, or anything from pediatrics to geriatrics.

Physical resources include a new Basic and Clinical Sciences Building, a power plant, and a large teaching hospital. The Sciences Building contains the school's library, teaching and research laboratories and amphitheatres. The power plant features

Egypt-Israel: A beginning

News analysis

JERUSALEM [UPI] – Despite the warm handshakes, it is clear from the speeches of President Anwar Sadat and Prime Minister Menahem Begin that neither of the two nations that consider themselves at war made any concession toward peace.

But both men expressed a sincere willingness to continue negotiating.

Sadat went so far as to extend in Israel a welcoming hand to the Jewish state to join the family of Middle East nations, all of them Arab. Begin countered by offering to open Israeli's border to Egypt's citizens.

It was a start – a hint of the peace that may come.

What the two leaders did in the Israeli Knesset was to set forth their most extreme positions, hardline stances that have been public knowledge for months. It would have been foolhardy to expect anything different.

It is from those extreme points that the two men are to begin bargaining, if Sadat's Arab allies will let him continue his unprecedented initiative to achieve peace.

In fact, the bargaining already is underway and may continue if Begin visits Cairo. Both men met for private talks three times.

Sources in the Foreign Ministry said the private talks will be much more important than the public statements. Sadat and Begin said in the open what their publics expected them to say.

In fact, Foreign Minister Moshe Dayan became livid over an Israeli report that the first sessions had produced talk of a non-belligerency pact between Egypt and Israel. Such a pact would be one step short of a peace treaty.

The extent of Dayan's reaction to the report made it all the more likely that there was substance to it. The source for it was an official who is extremely close to Dayan.

Several hardline points will have to be softened before there can be any progress toward peace. Chief among them are two Sadat mentioned in his speech that Israel adamantly opposes.

One is the issue of Israeli withdrawal from the Arab lands it captured from Egypt, Syria and Jordan in the 1967 war.

Occupation of those territories led in part to the 1973 war. Israel argues it needs the strategic depth afforded by those lands to ward off another attack.

The second is the creation of a Palestinian state on Israel's frontiers, possibly in the occupied West Bank of Jordan, the Gaza Strip or both, with a corridor linking the two.

Anwar Sadat

It is the touchiest of all issues because it involves a people the Arab nations have used as pawns and Israel has condemned as a threat to its existence.

Yet even Washington, in statements by President Carter, views the Arab-Israeli conflict unsolvable unless the Palestinian issue is resolved.

FAC presents free concert

The Billy Taylor Trio and the University Jazz Workshop will unite their musical powers tonight at a free concert in the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall at 8.

Tonight's concert is the culmination of two months of mutual rehearsals of Billy Taylor and the University Jazz Workshop.

Jazz pianist Billy Taylor is a composer, arranger, teacher, actor, disc jockey, founder of Jazzmobile, the first black music director of a major television show (The David Frost Show) and holder of a Ph.D in musicology from the University.

Throughout his career he has played with such greats as Charlie Parker, Dizzy Gillespie, Coleman Hawkins, Roy Eldridge and others.

The first portion of the concert will feature Billy Taylor and the University Jazz Workshop performing the music of Parker, Peterson and Tillis.

The Billy Taylor Trio will perform selections from the repertoire of Taylor in the second half of the concert.

The Special Program In The Arts is a new program sponsored by the Fine Arts Center and the University and brings professional musicians, actors and dancers to the University for lectures, demonstrations, workshops and clinics.

All activities within the Special Program In The Arts are open to the public.

Man held in beating

A 28-year-old Springfield man is being arraigned this morning at Northampton District Court in connection with a beating in Puffton Village early yesterday morning.

A 25-year-old woman was later admitted to Cooley Dickinson Hospital in Northampton with severe head injuries, Amherst police said. They would not release the woman's name.

Gregory J. Triplet, of 107 Green St., Springfield, was arrested and charged by Amherst police with assault and battery with a dangerous weapon shortly after police responded to an ambulance call at a Puffton Village apartment where they found an ax handle.

Triplet was held on $10,000 bail prior to his 9 a.m. arraignment.

Committee hopes to educate victims of sterilization abuse

By CYNTHIA HARHEN
Collegian Staff

Intelligent family planning is a basic right, but according to members of the Northampton-Amherst Committee to End Sterilization Abuse, forced sterilization under the guise of family planning has become a population control technique used upon unsuspecting victims.

CESA is a national organization to end forced sterilization of the poor working class in the United States and Third World countries. Terming forced sterilization a racist and classist method of reducing the size of the world's population, members of the Northampton-Amherst CESA is concerned with educating the community to promote awareness of sterilization abuse.

Sterilization for contraceptive purposes is a surgical procedure that involves the bilateral cutting, tying or removal of parts of the reproductive organs, CESA members explained. Sterilization abuse, however, occurs when an individual is sterilized against her will or without her complete knowledge of the operation.

Misunderstanding usually occurs in non-English speaking women who are led to believe, through coerçion and misinformation, that the operation is reversible. In most cases it is not. Often, sterilization is the only form of birth control available to women of Third World countries where large percentages of the United States budget for economical development are spent on sterilizations.

In many cases, in order for a woman to obtain an abortion, she must consent to a "package deal" which involves a sterilization along with the abortion, members said.

In an organized way, CESA members said, the government can utilize a variety of programs to break down opposition. Sex education in schools, pre-natal clinics, family assistance programs, housing, and food stamps all become weapons used toward eventual consent to sterilization and population control of the working class, they said.

Members of the group discussed sterilization and population control as a further example of the way the capitalist and imperialist class constantly expands its power through the U.S. government in order to deny more people their rights. Sterilization is used against the poorest and hardest working sectors, those who represent the greatest political threat to capitalist power, one CESA member said.

U.S. aid to foreign countries through such agencies as the Agency for International Development is usually allocated for birth control in these countries. This birth control takes the form of sterilization.

This aid, like other foreign aid has "strings attached," members said. By simply getting rid of the excess working population, unemployment and instability with a rapidly growing movement for independence will no longer threaten U.S. hegemony in these countries.

In Puerto Rico, 37 per cent of all women of childbearing age are sterilized under programs sponsored by the U.S. department of Health, Education and Welfare. Public sterilization programs also exist in India, Pakistan and other Third World countries.

In the United States, 3,000 men and women are sterilized daily, one member said. These victims are usually blacks, Puerto Ricans and poor working class whites.

CESA members cited accounts of sterilization techniques such as Paraformaldehyde, an acid which is injected into the uterus, and self-sterilization kits issued to women in Third World countries. In India young children were used as "guinea pigs" and were given drugs which would cause sterility for 10 years. The effects of these drugs were not previously tested.

The Northampton-Amherst CESA is now involved with casework of forced sterilizations in the area. A recent speech by Helen Rodriguez, a founding member of CESA, was sponsored by the Distinguished Visitors Program, CESA, and the Third World Women's Center.

Good medical care, pre-natal care and day care are health rights on which CESA members would like to see U.S. aid spent, not on forced sterilization. However, in countries where women do not have control over their own lives and their own bodies, the term "voluntary sterilization" becomes little more than a bad joke.

a solar heating and air conditioning system, while the hospital serves as a training ground and learning experience for students.

The medical school is affiliated with a number of nearby hospitals and recently affiliated with the Berkshire Medical Center in Pittsfield.

Chief architect of the work off-pay back plan was State Senator James A. Kelly (D-Oxford), chairman of the Senate Ways and Means Committee. Kelly sponsored the plan in the legislature.

"The subsidy given the medical student should be evened out with the subsidy we give the common student," Kelly said. "The graduates are very capable of helping the people after them."

Kelly said the graduates have a "strong moral obligation" to pay back the state because the state spends so much to educate them.

He said the state is spending "a sizeable amount" to educate the students who will earn "extremely high wages."

Meanwhile, UMass-Worcester Chancellor Roger C. Bulger said the legislature's requirement "reflects a concern of the public at large of the high cost and the earning capacity of professionals."

There are different estimates as to what the cost of the Worcester education is. What the final estimate is will have an effect on the scope of the payback plan the trustees will formulate.

Kelly said the estimated cost is about $120,000 to the state for each student. The legislature, however, estimated the cost to be between $12,000-18,000 per student. Bulger said the legislature's estimate was "not an unreasonable one," but declined to say what his estimate of the cost was. He

Funeral services for Gary J. Meyers, UMass student and coach for the UMass freshmen football team will be held tomorrow in Andover at 10 a.m.

Meyers, 23, of 17 Rennie Dr., Andover, died Saturday morning in Concord Hospital, Concord, N.H. of extensive head injuries six hours after his car skidded on an icy bridge on I-93 in Sanbornton, N.H. and flipped into the southbound lane. He was alone in the car, according to New Hampshire State Police.

In Amherst he lived at 56 Towne house Apartments and majored in political science, according to the UMass student directory.

A native of Chicago, Meyers spent most of his life in Andover. He was a graduate of Andover High School, where he played football and was the 1973 track team captain.

Meyers played football at UMass from 1973 to 1976, according to coach Dick McPherson, and coached this year's freshmen defensive backs. He also coached the Andover High School girls track team last spring.

Meyers was the son of Elaine (Mickey) Kohl and the late Thomas Meyers. He is survived by two sisters and four brothers.

Calling hours at the M.A. Burke Funeral Home, 390 North Main St., Andover will be today from 2 to 4 p.m., and tonight from 7 to 9. The funeral mass will be held tomorrow at 10 a.m. at St. Augustine's Church, Andover, where he was a member.

Burial will be in St. Augustine's Cemetery.

Rally protests S. African apartheid

Collegian Staff

Approximately 200 people attended a Saturday afternoon rally on the Amherst Common calling for economic embargo by the United States against South Africa and for Amherst College to divest its stocks in corporations operating in apartheid South Africa.

After the rally, the demonstrators marched down North Pleasant St. as far as the Mobil gas station where they crossed the street and continued to Amherst College, chanting "U.S. out of South Africa," "Down with Vortser," "Down with racism from Amherst to South Africa," and "Amherst College take a stand; don't support this racist land."

Exiled South African and UMass graduate student in the School of Education Nana Seshibe, told the group that the U.S. government listened to student protest during the Vietnam war and that students can influence the U.S. South African policy.

Seshibe explained that the South African regime prohibits interracial marriage because children of integrated marriages are automatically black Africans. "If you integrate, the white race is going to be eliminated," she said.

After she addressed the rally, Seshibe told the Collegian she expects the Vorster regime to fall within a year, with or without an embargo. She said the pro-apartheid forces will never admit defeat, therefore, "It has to be a bloody situation." She added, "They are just like (Idi) Amin," referring to Vorster and company. Seshibe left South Africa in 1965 at age 17.

UMass professor in the Afro-American studies department Michael Thelwell said at the rally that an embargo would be effective because South Africa is entirely dependent upon western capitalism, including such countries as the United States, England and France.

Thelwell also said an inordinate percentage of South Africa's budget is spent on the military and internal security forces. Consequently, Thelwell said, the cost of repression gives the South African government "very little leeway" when it comes to allocating funds for social services and preventing the non-white majority from going hungry.

Thelwell predicted that Western powers will soon abandon South Africa, because what's happening there has "become too obvious, too heinous," for any civilized society to participate in.

At Amherst College, an auditorium had been reserved in Converse Hall, where the movie "Last Grave at Dimbaza" was shown, which depicts the sub-human treatment of the non-white majority by the racist South African government.

Prior to the showing of the film there was discussion about future organizing around the South African issue locally. It was announced there will be another rally Dec. 10 when the Amherst College board of trustees meet in order to attempt to persuade them to reconsider their decision not to sell stocks in corporations operating in South Africa. The possibility of boycotting the Boston Globe for carrying advertisements for Kugerands (South African gold coins) was also discussed.

The rally was co-sponsored by the UMass based Committee for the Liberation of South Africa and the New Africa House Steering Committee.

A cloth banner urging Amherst College and Princeton University to divest their stocks in corporations operating in apartheid South Africa was hung from a balcony in Hampshire College's Robert Crown Center Saturday, where inauguration ceremonies were being held for Hampshire College President Adele Smith Simmons.

The presidents from both colleges were invited to the inauguration, but only Princeton President William G. Bowen could attend the ceremonies for Simmons, formerly his dean of Student Affairs at Princeton.

Amherst College President John W. Ward could not attend due to family business, he said last night.

Amherst owns stocks worth $20 million and Princeton reportedly $200 million. Hampshire last spring divested stocks worth $19,000. UMass and Smith College, both represented at the inauguration, divested their stocks this fall. Each school had about $700,000 invested.

Student protests at the area colleges were held prior to the divestments. Amherst College trustees in October voted to retain the stocks while students demonstrated for divestment outside the meeting.

Another protest is being planned for the Dec. 10 meeting of the Amherst trustees, according to a member of the group which hung the banner Saturday.

The Committee for the Liberation of South Africa hung the banner in the morning and also distributed protest and information leaflets during other inauguration events held throughout the day.

Hampshire student and committee member Joel Saxe said the committee organized the inaugural protest to "let people know there is an organized opposition to the role of U.S. corporations in South Africa." He noted presidents and other administrators from several colleges which invest in corporate stocks attended the ceremonies.

He said the committee did not plan to personally confront any college officials or "disrupt things at the inauguration." The committee did not tell Hampshire officials in advance about its plans, he said.

One Hampshire officials said the college administration was not worried about the protest, adding that Hampshire had sold its stocks.

Bowen, after the inauguration, said Princeton officials have been discussing the university's investment policy for "at least seven years." He added reports about the university's position or investments have been published.

The question of the investment policy, Bowen said, is "not over South Africa but what courses of action of U.S. institutions are 'sensible'."

Marsha Bonner, a Princeton student and member of the People's Front for the Liberation of Southern Africa, last night in a telephone interview said a protest is being planned for either the December or January meeting of Princeton's board of trustees. The committee wants a complete divestment of the $200 million worth of stock, she said.

Bonner also said committee members will meet with Bowen after the Thanksgiving break to discuss divestment.

UMass fast contributes $1100

By BETH SEGERS

Eleven hundred dollars will be sent to OXFAM-AMERICA this morning as a result of last Thursday's "Fast for a World Harvest," according to UMass fast coordinator Howard Goldman. Estimates indicate 1,500 people skipped at least one or two meals Thursday to contribute money to the cause, Goldman last night said.

"It's not the length of time one fasts but the feeling of hunger for a little while," an enthusiastic Goldman said in reaction to the fast. "By every criteria, it was a great day."

The $1,100 represents $300 cash collected in the Campus Center and 931 meal tickets collected in the Campus Center and University dining commons. Food Services donated 82 cents a meal ticket, according to Goldman.

OXFAM, an international organization which gives small grants and loans to local farmers in Third World nations, will send 80 per cent of the UMass money to fund projects in the Third World, an "incredibly high figure," said Goldman. The remaining 20 per cent is used for promotional and administrative costs, he said.

Peoples' Market, coordinated by Goldman, undertook fast-planning three years ago, the second year of OXFAM operation. This year's total collection was an increase from last year's total of $200 and reflects the supportive attitude from students and the Food Services, Goldman said.

Goldman, who interned with OXFAM this past summer, said part of the money increase is due to an earlier start this year and the number of groups interested in working on the fast, citing People's Market and the United Christian Foundation in particular.

Goldman noted the money collected in the fast will be used not for food that would be consumed immediately but for long-lasting tools to make the Third World farmers more self-sufficient.

Report compares qualities of local college campuses

Five College Student Coordinating Board
Amherst College
Hampshire College
Mount Holyoke College
Smith College
University of Massachusetts

Students at UMass and Amherst College are less satisfied with the food they're served than students at Hampshire, Mt. Holyoke, and Smith colleges. Smith and Hampshire students claim larger amounts of intellectual learning than do students at the other three schools. Mt. Holyoke women shine at "trusting people."

These are some of the findings reported in "Cycles: Spring 1977 — A Five-College Comparison." Cycles comes out each spring and fall with a comparison of student attitudes at each of the five college campuses in the Pioneer Valley.

Surveys were distributed at each campus last spring. The data is based on the following selection: 13.8 per cent of Smith students, 2.5 per cent of UMass, 15.2 per cent of Mt. Holyoke, 7.1 per cent of Hampshire and 17.1 per cent of Amherst.

Little difference existed among the five-colleges in "general satisfaction with college experience." About three-fourths of those questioned said they were "satisfied" or "very satisfied" (Mt. Holyoke was high with 81 per cent, Smith low at 74 per cent). However, when the students were asked to report their relative satisfaction with their first course of the week (a technique for random selection of courses), substantial variation emerged.

Hampshire students were most content, with 64 per cent expressing satisfaction, while only 39 per cent of the UMass students questioned said they were pleased with the course.

Inter-college variation was also apparent on the question of students' perceived "influence over personally relevant events." While 75 per cent of Hampshire students saw themselves as potent forces in campus affairs, only 61 per cent at Smith College, 52 per cent at Amherst, 48 per cent at Mt. Holyoke, and 35 per cent at UMass felt very influential.

Personal happiness seemed to be distributed evenly among the five campuses. About three-fourths of the students questioned said they liked themselves to a "great extent" or "very great extent." Feelings of loneliness, though not widespread at any of the schools, were most prevalent at Amherst College. UMass ranked lowest on the loneliness scale. In a related question, it was shown that UMies feel less isolated from their fellow students than do the students at the other four colleges.

Amherst students do their best to combat that loneliness: 44 per cent of the Amherst students questioned said they were involved tc a "great" or "very great" extent in social activities. The two women's institutions, Mt. Holyoke and Smith, were the least social of the five colleges — only 26 and 25 per cent respectively claiming extensive social play. Figures for UMass and Hampshire College were identical: 36 per cent of the students said they socialize a great deal.

Of course, college is after all for learning, so the most important question of all may be at which of the five colleges does one learn the most? If the students are to be believed, the answer would be Hampshire College, followed closely by Smith and Mt. Holyoke. At Hampshire, 70 per cent said the extent of their intellectual learning was "great" or "very great."

Curiously, students at Amherst College, one of the most prestigous schools in the nation, were as a group, unimpressed by what their school was doing for them. A bare majority claimed to be learning a great amount. UMass students were even less satisfied with only 46 per cent saying they learned "a great amount."

If students at Hampshire College learn the most, they also seem to learn it in the least time. The average Hampshire student spent less than 40 hours a week on academic work (course related plus non-course related). Smith students were the busiest of all averaging 55 hours weekly on intellectual activities. UMass students are only slightly more diligent than those at Hampshire studying about 40 hours per week.

Perhaps UMass students have an excuse for their relative laziness: they seem to get sick a lot. In fact, the average UMass student is likely to have been sick 1.04 days during any specified two-week period. Mt. Holyoke and Smith students are almost as ill as those at UMass, averaging .95 and .98 sick days every two weeks. Healthiest of all were Hampshire students, averaging only .59 sick days every two weeks.

One thing the five campuses have in common is the weather. Attitudes towards the elements, however, are quite different at each school. UMass is the school of meteorological malcontents: only 35 per cent here were satisfied with Mother Nature's atmosphere productions. Smith, Mt. Holyoke, and Amherst students were divided on the subject but at Hampshire, the weather was one of the good things in life: 61 per cent said they were very satisfied with it.

Cell abnormality traced to women in 40's-60's

This is the eighth in a weekly series on women's health care.
The information used in this article was taken from pamphlets published by University Health Services ['75-'76].

By JULIE MELROSE
Collegian Staff

In the late 1940's to the 1960's, an estimated two million women were given the synthetic hormone diethylstilbestrol (DES) by their doctors. The women were pregnant, and were considered to be at risk of miscarrying because of abnormal genital bleeding or previous miscarriage.

Since that time, vaginal and-or cervical adenosis (thought to be a mild, benign cell abnormality) have been detected in 85-90 per cent of the daughters of these pregnancies. Structural abnormalities of the cervix or vagina and an increased incidence of vaginal and cervical cancer have also been noted in these daughters.

According to UHS, these conditions have been traced to DES exposure. Several researchers now working in the field suspect a progression of adenosis to cancer, although this has not been firmly established.

UHS encourages all women to look into their birth histories to determine if they were exposed to DES or a related hormonal drug. If possible, they should ask their mothers if they took this hormone during the first 18 weeks of pregnancy.

If it is not possible for a woman to speak with her mother about this, or if her mother doesn't know if she was given the drug, the woman should contact the hospital where she was born and try to obtain this information.

If a woman knows or suspects she was exposed to DES in utero, or if she is having difficulty obtaining information about her birth history, she should discuss it with her physician.

At UMass, UHS provides screening, counseling and referral services for women who know or suspect they are DES daughters. Contact the Community Health Education office for more information.

The screening process for suspected DES daughters involves a routine gynecological exam (visual inspection of the vaginal walls, palpation and a Pap test) and a simple iodine staining test (Schiller test) which can help the health practitioner discover abnormalities.

All DES daughters should be medically evaluated on a regular basis throughout their lives. This will usually involve a thorough examination at least once a year; more often for women in whom abnormalities have been detected. Any abnormal vaginal bleeding should be brought to a physician's attention as soon as possible.

As most of the vaginal cancer suspected to be DES related has been discovered in women between 14-25 years of age, investigation into birth history and screening for DES related abnormalities is not something college-aged women can safely "put off 'til tomorrow."

The possibility of developing cancer or finding out one has it is a frightening idea to any one, male or female. While modern technology has played a part in causing some types of cancer, it can also be used to help take positive action toward improving the level of health care available. The screening process for DES related abnormalities is neither time-consuming nor painful. DES related services at UMass are covered by the student health plan.

Ideally, inexpensive and easily accessible screening for suspected DES daughters will be available to all women. This set-up exists here on campus, and UMass women would be wise to make use of it.

While DES is no longer prescribed for the prevention of miscarriage, it has another current use. Often referred to as the "morning-after," DES can be used as a post-coital birth control method. If a woman starts taking the drug within 72 hours after unprotected intercourse and takes it for five consecutive days, DES usually prevents pregnancy by altering the speed with which the egg moves through the fallopian tubes and uterus, thus preventing implantation of the egg.

There are problems with the use of DES for this purpose. Side effects of the "morning-after pill" include nausea and vomiting.

There is presently no evidence linking use of the "morning after pill" with subsequent genital cancer in the user. But the suspected link between fetal DES exposure and the delayed appearance of cancer in female offspring remains an issue. A woman who takes DES as a post-coital birth control method, but is not successful in preventing pregnancy, may wish to seriously consider abortion.

Currently, the "morning-after pill" is usually reserved for emergency situations, including rape. Because of the many medical and moral issues involved in this use of DES,

ERA YES!

ERA YES!

HOUSTON: Pandemonium breaks out in the New York section as delegates cheer the passing of a resolution supporting the equal rights amendment at the National Women's Conference Saturday. (UPI)

ERA viewed at conference

HOUSTON [UPI] — The head of the National Women's Political Caucus said yesterday an extension of the 1979 deadline for ratification of the Equal Rights Amendment is not "absolutely necessary" for its approval.

Appearing on NBC's "Meet The Press," Audrey Rowe-Colom was asked about proposals to extend the ratification deadline. She replied, "I think it's a backup support...but I don't think it is absolutely necessary. I still think we would be able to ratify.

"We see the momentum building," she continued. "More and more people are becoming informed about the issue."

Ms. Rose-Colom was among four women panelists on the program representing various viewpoints at this week's National Women's Conference. A fifth panelist was Stop ERA leader Phyllis Schlafly, who is leading opposition to the conference.

Eleanor Smeal of the National Organization for Women said an extension for ERA ratification is not prohibited by the Constitution and would provide more time for discussion of the proposed amendment, which needs approval from three more state legislatures.

"We feel the opposition is using the deadline" to keep state lawmakers from switching, she said. "We feel the time issue should be eliminated." But she also expressed hope ratification could be achieved by 1979.

Margaret Mealey, retired head of the National Council of Catholic Women, said her group thinks legislation is helping to protect women's rights and passage of the constitutional amendment would only be a "symbolic victory."

Mrs. Schlafly, who declined to announce yet whether she plans to seek a Senate seat in Illinois, attacked use of $5 million in "taxpayer's money" to fund the women's conference dominated by pro-ERA factions.

"I think people will realize if they study the plan of action proposed by the International Women's Year Commission — what the women's lib movement is all about," she said.

Resolution supporting minority women's rights

HOUSTON [UPI] — The National Women's Conference, already on record favoring the Equal Rights Amendment, staged an emotional show of support yesterday for the rights of minority women.

The vote on a resolution supporting minority rights prompted a moving floor demonstration of black, Indian, Eskimo, Hispanic and Asian women. Nearly all of the 2,000 delegates joined hands and sang, "We Shall Overcome."

the Mississippi delegation was booed, however, when it failed to join the demonstration. Conference leaders have criticized the Mississippi delegation because it is all-white and some claim its members are sympathetic to the Ku Klux Klan.

The minority resolution, proposed by representatives of each race including Coretta King, declared that minority women suffered discrimination based on both race and sex.

"Every level of government should recognize and remedy, this double discrimination," it said.

The resolution, proposed by a coalition of minority groups, mentioned specific programs faced by each group — including subminimum wages paid to Hispanic migrants and housing discrimination against blacks.

"We as minority women have been struggling individually for our rights and we recognize that we are all interdependent," Mrs. King said.

She called the vote "a remarkable moment" because many conservative opponents of the conference voted with the minorities.

Barbara Groomes of Florida added: "I hope somebody gets in touch with President Carter and tells him that this is unity day."

said the school will conduct a study of its own to determine the cost per student in the near future.

The work off-pay back plan may also have an effect on admissions and the number of people applying to the medical school.

"I don't think it will have an effect on admissions," Kelly said. "We already have far more people applying than it is possible to admit."

Bulger, however, doesn't share Kelly's optimism.

He said the work off-pay back plan is "a very significant danger" to admissions at the school, but the total effect will "depend on what the payment plan is."

"It might have an impact on a student who doesn't have a large amount of resources," Bulger said. "We really don't know for sure."

Bulger said the effect the plan may have on admissions will not be known until May 1978, when applications for admission for the incoming class in 1978 will have been received.

representatives, rejected its legitimacy and communicated only through mediators.

But then he declared: "I wish to tell you today and I proclaim to the whole world: We accept to live with you in a lasting and just peace."

He said this could not be possible without Israeli withdrawal from Jerusalem and all other lands occupied in 1967, and the creation of a homeland for the Palestinians. These are the core Arab demands.

Begin made no concession on the Palestinian question. On the contrary, he said the Hebrew word for Palestine was "Eretz Israel" — the land of Israel. Twice he was heckled by Communists who demanded that he amplify his intentions on the Palestinians.

In reference to the occupied territories, he said: "We did not take any strange lands. We only returned to our own land."

Members of the Egyptian delegation were openly disappointed that Begin had not made a more positive response to Sadat's bold gamble in coming to Jerusalem. "I'm disgusted," said one Egyptian.

But to the Israelis in the hall and to the millions of television viewers around the world, the significance of the day was not necessarily in what the leaders said or didn't say.

It was rather in the unprecedented spectacle of the president of the largest Arab nation openly exchanging conditions for peace with the leader of Egypt's bitterest foe.

It was for this symbolic breakthrough that Sadat gambled with his political future and Arab unity to become the first Arab leader to openly visit the Jewish state, and it was a theme he stressed in his address.

There is a "complicated psychological barrier between us and you," he told the Israelis, "a barrier of skepticism, of revulsions, of the fear of deceitfulness, of delusions about any action or decision that's to be taken."

That wall was 70 percent of the Mideast problem, Sadat said. "And I would like to ask you today ..., why don't we extend our hands in honesty and sincerity and good faith so that we may pull down this barrier?"

The Egyptians had said Sadat was bringing new proposals to Israel, but none of these surfaced in his speech. However, Begin and Sadat held several private meetings and it was possible some new initiatives were discussed at these.

Sadat insisted he was not in Israel to seek a separate peace, and Begin said he did not intend to "drive a wedge" among the Arabs.

Sadat arrived at the Knesset after early morning worship at the Al-Aqsa mosque, a visit to the Christian Church of the Holy Sepulcher and a tour of Yad Vashem, the massive monument to Jewish victims of Nazi Germany.

Carter urged to stop military base closings

WASHINGTON [UPI] — More than 200 congressmen from midwest and northeastern states have asked President Carter to halt the closing of military bases in their states.

The lawmakers told Carter a moratorium on base closings in their states was needed because of a discriminatory pattern of defense spending that benefits the South and the West at the expense of the more populous states.

The congressmen also asked that troops returning from abroad be sent to bases in their states and that the Defense Department make a "conscientious effort ... to narrow the gap in the regional disparity in military construction spending."

The request was made in a letter released Sunday by Reps. Michael Harrington, D-Mass.; Frank Horton, R-N.Y., and Donald Mitchell, R-N.Y.

Harrington and Horton are co-chairmen of the 204-member Northeast-Midwest Economic Advancement Coalition, and Mitchell heads the bipartisan group's Task Force on Military Installations.

The letter to Carter was signed by 148 House members, including Speaker Thomas O'Neill Jr., D-Mass.; Rep. Melvin Price, D-Ill., chairman of the House Armed Services Committee, and Rep. Robert Giaimo, D-Conn., chairman of the House Budget Committee.

The letter said the "inequitable distribution" of military bases, with most of them in the South and the West, had resulted in "an alarming exodus" of jobs and people from the Midwest and Northeast.

The congressmen said studies made for New England governors showed Defense Department employment rose 35 per cent nationally from 1950 to 1977.

During that period, they said, defense employment rose 50 per cent in the South and West but decreased 3 per cent in the coalition states.

★ DES

it is important that a woman considering use of the "morning-after pill" be well informed as to the potential implications of her decision. UHS offers professional medical and personal counseling for women in such situations.

According to Our Bodies, Ourselves (Boston Women's Health Book Collective, Simon and Schuster, '76), until 1970, vaginal cancer was one of the rarest human cancers, "virtually unknown in women under 50."

The book also said it was already known as early as 1953 that DES was not effective in preventing miscarriage. Some obstetricians continued to prescribe it for this purpose until the first link between DES and vaginal cancer was demonstrated in 1970.

It would appear that those physicians were not informing themselves as to new developments in their profession; or they had no respect for the findings of professional researchers, or they simply did not have the best interests of human beings at heart. Whatever the reason for their actions, the result is a tragedy.

There is a lesson for women in the DES story: when prescribed a medication she is not familiar with, a woman should ask to see that section of her physician's drug manual which deals with the drug in question. She shouldn't take "no" for an answer. She has a right to know what she's putting into her body, and health care professionals should respect that right.

Fraud labor claims

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Labor Department has set up a new division to investigate possible fraud in workers' compensation claims, officials announced yesterday.

The new investigations unit will look into suspicious claims in the department's three workers' compensation programs — the Federal Employees Compensations Program, the Longshoremen's and Harbor Workers' Compensation Program and the Black Lung Benefits Program.

Department officials said in a statement the unit will investigate whether any persons receiving disability compensation are employed and "have not notified the Department of Labor of their employment."

The unit also will take a hard look at possible false hearing loss claims, particularly from shipyard workers.

Congress against Clinch River veto

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Congress is in a tug-of-war with President Carter over his veto of the Clinch River, Tenn., nuclear breeder reactor project.

Right now, the anti-Carter forces appear to have the strength to win through a very tricky piece of parliamentary strategy.

The Clinch River project would develop nuclear fuel as a new source of energy.

But it would also create weapons-grade plutonium as a by-product, and Carter opposes that as part of his overall effort to reduce the production of such materials and the resultant spread of military nuclear technology.

Accordingly, on Nov. 5, he vetoed a $5.2 billion bill authorizing programs for the Energy Research and Development Administration, including the Clinch River project.

Sen. Henry Jackson, D-Wash., chairman of the Energy and Natural Resources Committee, has decided not to try to override the veto. He will try instead to draft a new ERDA authorization bill that leaves Clinch River out.

Sterilization booklet

(Her Say News Service) - Distribution of a booklet which tells women that sterilization may bring "greater sexual pleasure" has been halted by the federal government.

The pamphlet, issued by the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, tells women that the benefits of having a hysterectomy are the same as for other types of sterilization.

The pamphlet said: "You never have to... get pregnant again. That brings peace of mind to many women who may also experience greater sexual pleasure after they have been sterilized."

HEW officials said they discontinued distribution of the controversial brochures after the House of Representatives heard testimony by doctors indicating that many of the hysterectomy operations were unnecessary and irresponsible.

Protestors against Concorde jetliner

NEW YORK (UPI) — Opponents of the Concorde tied up traffic at Kennedy Airport yesterday in their last motorcade demonstration before the AngloFrench supersonic jetliner begins scheduled commercial flights to New York later this week.

As in five previous demonstrations held to protest landings of the jet at the airport, some 250 cars moved in a slow procession around the main road connecting Kennedy's terminals.

About 200 of the cars briefly blocked a main entrance to Kennedy before moving around the airport terminals. Traffic was tied up moderately for about 90 minutes and

Rhodesians plan new peace initiative

SALISBURY, Rhodesia (UPI) — Prime Minister Ian Smith said in an interview published yesterday that he has opened his own peace initiative as result of what he termed the universal rejection of a majority rule plan for Rhodesia.

"New initiatives have started and I anticipate that serious decisions will be made during this coming week," Smith told The Sunday Mail.

"It is not really a question of me rejecting the latest AngloAmerican initiative. I would say it has been universally rejected by Rhodesians.

"Therefore, let us be realistic. We cannot sit by and allow things to continue in a vacuum. I believe the time is ripe for Rhodesians to get on with the task now and settle their problems," Smith said.

Smith's remarks appeared to herald the full revival of his controversial "internal settlement" plan, which would be concluded with Rhodesia-based black nationalists at the exclusion of the more militant Patriotic Front.

Britain and the United States have rejected the prospect of a settlement excluding the Patriotic Front, which controls the guerrillas fighting to end white rule.

Smith gave no details of his new initiative. But the Sunday Mail said "it is obvious" it would involve Rhodesia-based nationalist leaders Abel Muzorewa and Ndabaningi Sithole and tribal chief Jeremiah Chirau.

The computer in my life

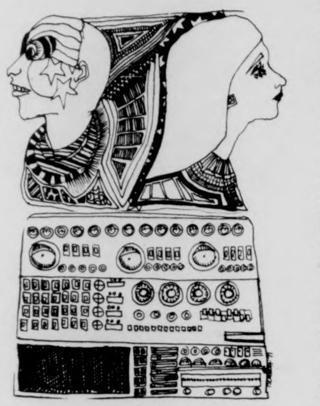
By ELLEN PLAUSKY

Do you ever have the feeling that someone, somewhere is put to get you? I do. When I looked through my scheduling booklet for a mere four hours the other day and realized that somewhere a computer has my number, I could have cried.

In my mind I can see it working diligently through the night with a copy of my transcript, figuring out what courses I'd like to take just so it can schedule them all at the same time. Maybe I should sign up for those five classes at the same time just to see what would happen. (Did I just hear a computer gasp?)



And it isn't just scheduling that I'm worried about; somewhere right now, my computer is transferring into it's memory banks a three word reminder for January: "All courses oversubscribed" I mean, I can see it coming. I just can't win, but I can compete! I've come up with some ways to determine a schedule that no computer could ever pre-guess. If you have your own computer out there working against you, too; maybe one of these would be helpful. But, if questioned, please don't tell my computer where you got them. Then my life could really be in danger.

1. The "Pick any five courses in your major" method. As well as making choosing a schedule easier, it could make you realize that this may not be the major for you after all. (or maybe you really don't want to know). If you want a little more variety, try....

2. The "Pick no courses in your major" method. This method relies on the theory that everyone could do with a change once in awhile. For the adventuresome among you, I suggest......

3. The "Toss the scheduling booklet into the air five times and take whatever's on the open pages" method. (Caution, since this method requires physical exertion, if you don't feel that you're up to it, maybe you know a Phys. Ed. major who could help out.)

4. The "Pick any five 'guts' regardless of your major" method. (This one is great for shocking the computer with your future cumulative average. Did you ever see a computer faint?)

5. The "Pick the courses you think Jimmy Carter would have chosen" method. This could very well get you into some great courses like; "Peanut Growing 101," "How to Speak Southern in a Northern World," and the ever popular, "Smiling with Your Whole Face." (This one will really confuse my computer; I have inside information that he's a Republican.)

And finally....

6. The "Choose every course your faculty advisor recommends" method. Since no computer has ever believed anyone would actually do this, it's nearly impossible for them to oversubscribe the courses for you in advance. (And, if they did figure out what you were doing, the shock would probably short-circuit them.)

One of the above methods should work to confuse your computer. At least they give you a fighting chance during pre-registration. And remember, if a computer chases you into an alley some dark night, calling out your student I.D. number, then say your prayers — the end is near.

The Madison Avenue manipulators

By ANDY TOMOLONIS

Television advertisers, faced with the task of attracting attention, employ a wide variety of tactics to entice the consumer. Once a viewer is reached, advertisers come on strong with the hard sell, claiming their product is superior in all ways to their competitors. When this is no longer effective, when Aunt Bluebell fails to convince us that Scott towels are the best buy, when we are left somewhat skeptical by the Pepsi challenge, advertisers are forced to switch their game plans. Faced with an unresponsive audience and a gross assortment of largely useless products to sell, Madison Avenue creates a need for these items by fabricating any number of problems, diseases, and socially unacceptable conditions, which only their products can cure.

Let's take a look at Helpless Hank, the inept consumer. He is an avid television enthusiast and appears to be healthy and normal. Deep inside, though, Hank knows he suffers from such unspeakable illnesses as, body odor, ring around the collar, medicine mouth, the nubs, foot odor, grey hair, and dandruff.

His wife, Simple Sarah, is in the next room, complacently polishing the polish and swatting cockroaches the old fashioned way. Clearly a non-liberated woman, she is a victim of dispan hands, girdle spillover, wrinkly pantyhouse, razor stubble, iron poor blood, midriff bulge, and the dreaded frizzies.

Their teenage children worry about acne, bad breath, and the greasies; while, their nosy neighbors drop in for a visit to see spots on the glasses and smell cat litter and last night's fried fish in the kitchen. "What could be worse," Hank and Sarah sigh, than houseatosis?"

Millions of Americans are bombarded each day with a barrage of problems they don't really have: problems created by Madison Avenue: problems which only their products can cure. Advertisers call this the need-cure method, while many who view these commercials tongue in cheek, seeing them as they really are, get nothing but the heartbreak of "sore-eye-osis."

The need for sexual identity is preyed upon by product pushers across the nation. From coast to coast, smart, well dressed ladies know that gentlemen prefer Hanes. Youngsters everywhere wonder when they will be old enough to understand the secret of Dentyne's snappy tingly taste. The more intelligent jetsetters know, however, that expensive clothes, fancy cars, and extravagant hair styles are not the way to obtain a sexual partner. They argue that whiter teeth and fresher breath are what it's all about. For them, sexual salvation comes in a tube of Close Up toothpaste.

Those who find the Certs breath test more childish than provocative can revel in an Ultra Brite toothpaste proposition. If one isn't satisfied with having a clean mouth, due to perhaps a combination of Madison Avenue diseases, there are always alternative solutions. Maybe the problem is bulging bottoms, or unsightly panty lines. Underalls will cure all that, as demonstrated by a short but sweet parade of delectable derrieres, all belonging to girls who love Underalls, because they make them look like they're wearing nothing at all.

Provocative tactics lead to perversion in advertisement when people are aroused by putting on lipstick and flicking their Bics. Does anybody really know what it is about Tickle antiperspirant that turns those ladies into laughing hyenas? Harry the newlywed certainly doesn't know. His wife will tell you why all he can do is smile. "Harry really got stroked this morning!"

The television viewer is exposed continuously to the mythical world of advertising, in which stereotyped people, living meager lives, are liberated from their drudgery with products of all kinds. It is up to the consumer to see beyond the promises and threats of Madison Avenue and separate the myth of advertising from the reality of his own world. Without this ability to discern fact from fallacy, the television viewer becomes helplessly lost in a world of plastic people projected by big business.

ERA: Not for women only

lisa melilli

> I SAID: Mighty men have encamped against me, and they have questioned not only the skill of my defenses > but my sincerity...
> Tell them to leave me damned well alone with my insights.
> (John Berryman, Defensio in Extremis]

Liberation is often seen as a one-sided benefit, that with the liberation of one group, the other group(s) will have their freedom restricted. Liberation in this sense, is seen as revolutionary — one side upsurping the other's power position by producing another power vacuum antithetical to the previous one.

However, this view is not true in context with women's liberation works for the benefit of both women and men.

Over the weekend, women representatives from every state in the Union journeyed to Texas to attend the ERA Women's Conference where the ERA amendment, the longest pending legislative item in Congress which was first presented in the 1920's for approval, was discussed and debated by ERA supporters and ERA dissidents.

The basic reasons for not supporting the ERA on the part of women and men alike is that it changes the basic set-up of society: men and women would be equal. There are no sex identified roles in society with the ERA. The ERA does not only create equal pay, equal opportunity for job positions for women, but also means that women will have to fight in a war, will have to face the same types of career choices as men. The ERA will also affect alimony procedures in cases of divorce and separation, child care, home care, even the simple definition of bathing suit attire requirements on public and private beaches and pools. Not all men and women alike are ready to change the social structure. Not all men are ready to give their leading position to be equal. They feel they are loosing something. Many feel threatened by this change because it greatly threatens their way of life, their view of the world. But is this way of life or view of the world actually worth while to hold onto?

The way society is set up now, women are put in a lesser power position then they have the aptitude to handle while men are put often times in a greater power position than they can handle. Both men and women are alienated from themselves because they are anticipated to be not as themselves, but as society would see them to be. For a woman, it is acquiescence. For a man, it is bullishness, it is no fear, it is total control over yourself and any situation you run into, particularly with women.

Men are taught from a very early age to avoid being a "fag," avoid being impish, avoid tears, avoid being the underdog. They are taught to be strong, to be aggressive. In a sense, their career decision years are much harder than for women, for although a has the fear of knowing that his income must support others. Even character development is far more crucial for a man knowing and later experiencing the emotional dependence on him of a family.

According to some men I have talked to, even the relationship between men is often frustrating since because of social pressure, close relationships, the intensive relationships that exist between women cannot, ought not to occur between men.

According to some men I have talked to, even the relationship between men and women is frustrating, that in relation to how some women feel about a man's insensitivity, that wish they could show more sensitivity.

By having women equal to men, not only will women reap benefits of equal job opportunity and the opportunity to be all that they are, independent, powerful and decisive in their own, but also men will not be forced to carry the burden of relationships, the burden of providing an economic base for families, the burden of carrying the emotional support for others.

Clearly, keeping to the old way of doing things for fear of change is foolish, as the fear of most men that they'll loose something with the liberation and equalization of women in society. For with women's liberation, everyone has something to gain. Why be defensive? Why hold onto your own insights when you are only losing?

Union council accomplishments

To the Editor:

I've heard a lot of rhetoric about UMass student unionization as a theory. I'd like to speak about some real, practical accomplishments being made right now.

Already, six to eight union councils from different departments and dorms around campus have been started and are working on the needs of the students in those departments or dorms. One such council is the Human Services and Applied Behavior Sciences Union Council.

The HS-ABS Union Council, which meets every Wednesday night at 8:00 in our newly acquired Resource Center [rm. 453 Hills South], is providing a means for us undergraduates in the Human Services and Applied Behavioral Sciences division of the School of Education to constructively affect our education, to make and keep our department strong and valuable to us, and to facilitate a communication among and between students and faculty.

In order to meet these objectives, we are working on several projects, one of which is the Resource Center. The Center is collecting and will have information available on courses, internships, graduate schools and jobs that are of interest to those in the division.

Promoting student participation at meetings and on committees in the School of Education [such as the Dean's Cabinet meetings, the Governance Committee, and the Academic Matters Committee] is another concern. We're also working on a governance proposal for how we feel the new governance structure should be set up.

And in the interest of determining the needs of all students in the division, we have almost completed a needs assessment survey form which will be sent out in the near future.

Other projects include a petition drive, a letter to those in the division, and setting up a curriculum committee, in the Human Services Program, which will offer a student-run course next semester.

I'm hoping that students will see that a lot can be accomplished when we put our talents to use and will then get together to work on things in their own departments or dorms. If you are interested in doing this or would like more information, you can go to the Student Organizing Project office, located in the Student Union building, rm. 426.

And I hope that those interested students in our own department will either come to the meetings, stop by the Resource Center or contact me, Margie Morrison, 586-2912, or Karen Klopfer, 549-0524.

Attack Schlitz, not the Collegian

To the Editor:

The Collegian has been maliciously criticized in the past for printing sexist ads. Such ads as the beautiful busted woman wearing a Schlitz T-shirt while holding a mug of Schlitz beer in her hand has sent some university students into uproars. I can understand the readers' resentment toward this type of advertising which many consider an insult to their intelligence. Few want to believe they could fall for something as low as the association of a sexy girl to a can of beer.

I do not agree that these ads should be banned from the newspaper. The Collegian*, which is free to the public, relies heavily on advertisements. If the* Collegian made it a point not to print any ad that upset the public it would be cutting its income down considerably. Also, why should the Collegian have the right to censor what the public reads? The Collegian is a source of news and it is its job to make the public aware of the changing times. It is to the public's benefit to see ads. If the reader sees that Schlitz is exploiting women we learn the extreme to which Schlitz will go to sell its beer.

If the reader disagrees with the exploitation of women then the anger should be taken out on the Schlitz company, not the Collegian*. The* Collegian is only printing what some company paid millions to create. The public's disagreement and anger can be expressed by not buying Schlitz beer and by writing letters of disgust to the Schlitz company. The Collegian cannot stop these ads from being created, they can only stop you from seeing them. And do you want to be sheltered from the real world? If not, attack Schlitz and support the Collegian.

French politics

our man in paris

By MARK WILDING

"Indisputably, the political landscape is troubled." These words, uttered by French Socialist leader Georges Mitterand in the Paris National Assembly last week, betray little of the turmoil that daily wracks the ... "

(At this moment I was interrupted by a knocking at the front door. I rose from my writing and went to see who the caller was. He was a little man with a Gallic countenance who barged his way past me into the hall. "Monsieur," he began, "I see from the inside of your door that you have no locks whatsoever to protect you from burglars and young holligans who may be about. As you know the crime rate in Paris is astonishingly high."

"Hmmm," I ventured and thought to myself that I mustn't let on to this guy that living in an apartment was a new experience for me. I must appear the bored apartment dweller. "All right, my man, throw a half dozen locks on the front door and half a dozen on the back door and leave your bill on the kitchen table. And please, no interruptions as I'm writing a very important piece for my newspaper back home," whereupon I took leave to return to my writing.)

" ... French left, a calamitous five months before the nation's elections."

The French left is composed of three groups — the tiny radical movement, the Communists, and the fast-rising ...

(This time I was interrupted by the little man's voice which cried for me from the front hall. "Monsieur, I would have as soon sacrificed my first born as interrupt you but I forgot to ask you what type of lock it was you wanted. I have a single turn lock in copper, a double turn lock in brass, or a triple turn kind using both metals."

My voice rose. "Throw on the most expensive and leave me to my business you rapacious journeyman!" I returned to my work, and after composing myself for the better part of an hour, resumed.)

" ... Socialists, who appear to be in the strongest position of any of the three to make a run at Giscard D'Estaing. One mustn't however count out former French prime minister Jacques Chirac. The feisty Chirac ... "

(At this moment the little man's popped through the door and he beckoned me into the front hallway. "Regarde Monsieur, I have put six locks on the front door and six locks on the back door. Still, there are the windows and the bathroom door. One's privacy is such a precious — "

"Listen you loathsome snail-eater, I've had enough of your ennervating twaddle! Throw locks on all the windows! Thrown them on the furniture! Thrown them on the refrigerator and the oven! Throw half a dozen more on the front and back but leave me in peace! His eyes lit up like Rontgen rays and he babbled excitedly "Merci mille fois Monsieur! It is a locksmith's dream! I will do it with dispatch!"

"Just dispatch yourself out of my way you jabbering hobgoblin!" After two and a half hours of repose I took up my treatise.)

"... leads the far right Gaullist party. Sources close to Giscard D'Estaing say the president regards Chirac as a political mover and a definite threat. Meantime Chirac keeps a low profile, preferring to do his political maneuvering in the cloistered chambers of ..."

(Interrupted by a din in the outer hallway I proceeded thither to find the wretched locksmith displaying his handiwork to about twenty neighbors. "It is done Monsieur! There are locks everywhere! You have easily he most secure maison in France!"

I rushed frenzied into the middle of the group and, grabbing him by the collar, shouted "Just give me your bill and the keys to each one of these metal monsters you soldering miscreant!" He did so and, feeling exhausted from the days tribulations, I went straight to bed.

The next day, returning from my morning jog, I realized that I'd forgotten the keys to the front door. Quite at peace with myself I walked to the local hardware store where I purchased an ax.)

Letters Policy

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian welcomes all letters to the editor. They must be signed and include the author's address and phone number. Organizations may submit letters, but they must include a name and phone number for reference purposes.

Letters must be typed, double-spaced, at sixty spaces per line, and no more than two pages. They should be sent to the Excutive Editor, c-o the Collegian, or dropped off at the Collegian office.

All letters are subject to editing for either content or space according to the judgement of the editors. Due to space limitations, there is no guarantee that all letters received will be printed. Letters for a specific publication date must be submitted by 4:00 p.m. the day preceding that date.

COURSE DESCRIPTIONS

The following courses were inadvertantly left out of the spring 1978 Course Description Guide:

PSYCHOLOGY

PSYCH 206

M. Bernard, J. Sweeney

ORGANIZATIONAL PSYCHOLOGY

Organization: Lecture-discussion, plus some simulations-role plays. Aim: Emphasis on developing knowledge of persons as participants in organizations, organizations as human environments and "fit-interaction between persons and organizations. Development of ability to apply this knowledge to oneself and specific organizational situations. Focus will be on a membership view (vs. a management one) dealing with levels of persons, groups and organizational design-structure as they affect members experience. Readings: Anderson and Carter "Human Behavior in the Social Environment. Schein, E. Organizational Psychology plus some handouts. Requirements: learning-psychological contract, four short "objective" pass-fail tests and 3-6 page essay-paper. Prerequisites: Intro to Psychology course.

PSYCH 290C

COGITATION

Office & Hours: Tobin 432, to be announced. Organization: Lecture-discussion, plus laboratory in skill application. Aim: To present a few of the more well-understood and widely accepted psychological principles established by congnitive psychologists and instruct in the application of these principles. The principles will be used to improve performance in situations requiring: accurate, detailed observation and reporting of events; comprehension and summarization of textual and lecture material; memorization; evaluation of evidence; and, problem-solving. Readings: Highbee, Your memory: How it works and how to improve it; and two or three other similar paperbacks on studying and problem-solving. Requirements: Short exams over knowledge of the theory behind principles and evaluation of relative degree of success in application of the principle. Prerequisites: Psychology 100, Psychology 110, or equivalent. Added Notes: Students will be encouraged to work with materials associated with other classes they are taking or have taken. Final Readings selections: Higbee, see above. Adams, Conceptual blockbusting. Buzan, Use both sides of your brain. Locke, A guide to effective study.

PSYCH 310A (210)

E. Dzendolet

SENSATION & PERCEPTION

Office & Hours: 213 Middlesex House, by arrangement. Organization: Lecture. Aim: To acquaint students with 1) the simple sensations and perceptions in the different senses, and 2) the explanations of these phenomena in terms of physical, neurophysiological, and chemical concepts. Readings: Study notes. Requirements: Four 1-hour examinations. The lowest will be dropped. There will be no make-ups. Prerequisites: Psychology 110, or other scientific or biological background.

PSYCHO 310H-Honors D13

Alwitt

SENSATION AND PERCEPTION

Office: 433 Tobin. Hours: Currently, Tues. 1-3. Organization: Lecture and discussion. Aim: This is an honors section of the regular sensation and perception course. Topics will be covered in more depth than in 310, and there will be more chance for discussion because of the small enrollment. The course will cover ways we obtain, encode, modify and use information from the sensory world. Sensory physiology and theories of perception will be discussed, with an emphasis of vision and audition. Readings: Probably one or two tests plus additional readings. Requirements: Probably two midsemester exams, a final exam, and several out-of-class projects and reports. Prerequisites: Psych 110 or equivalent. Psych 241 or equivalent would be helpful. Enrollment limited to twenty.

PSYCH 320A

J. Donahoe

LEARNING AND THINKING

Office & Hours: 531 Tobin: MWF 1-2. Organization: Lecture-discussion with some demonstrations. Aim: A survey of the fundamental concepts and findings with classical and instrumental procedures and in language and memory. Readings: To be distributed in class. Requirements: Frequent short-answer essay examinations with opportunities for retake examinations to improve knowledge. Prerequisites: Psych 110 or Psych 120 or permission of instructor. Added Notes: $8.00 lab fee pays for readings, no additional purchase of test.

PSYCH 330A (250)

Neil R. Carlson

PHYSIOLOGICAL PSYCHOLOGY

Office: 527 Tobin. Organization: Lecture-discussion. This course discusses the physiological bases of behavior. Topics include: 1) Cells of the nervous system. 2) Transmission of information and decision-making. 3) Biochemistry and pharmacology of the nervous system. 4) Basic anatomy of the nervous system. 5) Research techniques 6) Sexual development and behavior. 7) Control of food intake. 8) Emotional behavior and psychosurgery. 9) Reward, punishment and the biochemistry of schizophrenia. 10) Physiological bases of learning and memory. 11) Sleep and arousal. Readings: Physiology of Behavior, by N. Carlson, and a workbook by L. Standish. Exams: Weekly quizzes (with makeup). Study questions for the quizzes are included in the workbook. Note: The primary means of information transmission will be the textbook and workbook; lectures and discussion will supplement the written material. Prerequisites: Psychology 110 (120) and the desire to learn.

PSYCHOLOGY 330H-Honors D-6

R. Gold

PHYSIOLOGICAL PSYCHOLOGY

Office: Tobin 526 (545-0934) Organization: Two lectures per week. Aim: To master the biological bases of behavior. Topics will include the biological bases of motivation, sleep and dreaming, pleasure, and sensory processes. The rudiments of neuroanatomy, neurophysiology, and the endocrine systems will also be covered. Readings: Textbook by Carlson. Requirements: Weekly 15 min quizzes will determine the 3 credit grade. For the Honors (4th) credit a laboratory project, in class presentation, or term paper will be evaluated. Prerequisites: Psy 110 or a background in zoology.

PSYCHOLOGY 335A

M. Friedman

EMOTION AND MOTIVATION

Office and Hours: 524 Tobin: after class and by appt. Organization: Lecture. Aim: This course will consider so-called motivational phenomena from a physiological point of view. The first part of the course will be a brief survey of basic physiology relevant to the material covered in the remainder of the semester. We will then discuss hunger, thirst, salt appetite, sexual behavior, and maternal behavior. Finally, the mechanism by which internal physiological events affect behavior will be discussed. Readings: A packet of approximately 20 journal articles will be handed out in class. Requirements: One quiz on the physiological material and four exams on the rest. The exams are open-notebook multiple choice. Prerequisites: Psych 102 or permission.

PSYCHOLOGY 350A

Prof. E. Tronick

CHILD DEVELOPMENT

Office & Hours: 417 Tobin. TuTh 9:30-10:45. Organization: Lecture. Aim: This course will focus on human development over the first several years of life. It will review data on infant and young children's emotional and cognitive abilities and place them in a developmentalevolutionary framework. Readings: Child Psychology, Heatherington and Park (probably). Requirements: To be announced. Prerequisites: Introductory Psychology.

PSYCH 350B

H. Horn, E.P. Lorch

CHILD BEHAVIOR AND DEVELOPMENT

Office and Hours: 11C Bartlett: MWF 9-11; 403 Tobin: TTH 2-4. Organization: Lecture-discussion. Aim: Emphasis on normal child development from before birth through middle childhood. Particular topics include the development of motor abilities and perception, learning and thinking, language, personality, and social interactions between parent and chil-, and peers. Readings: textbook and book of readings. Requirements: two exams and a final. Prerequisites: Psych 101, 110, 150, or permission of instructors.

PSYCHOLOGY 335H-Honors D8

John J. B. Ayres

(Honors Section taken for four credits)

EMOTION AND MOTIVATION

Office: Middlesex 301, hours: to be announced. Organization: Lecture-discussion. Enrollment: 25 maximum. Description: The course deals with explanations and theories of behavior. We begin by considering the properties of explanations and theories in general then move to specific instances.

We'll examine theories th$t man's behavior is largely inherited, theories that man's behavior is largely learned but impelled by primitive, unlearned, biological drives, theories that emphasize learned drives and emotions, theories that emphasize the incentive properties of rewards; and finally we'll consider the view that man is not pushed about by drives at all but is instead pulled around by the reinforcing consequences of his actions. The evidence for these theories will derive from anthropological investigation, from naturalistic observation of subhuman primates, fishes, and birds, and from laboratory investigations on rats and other species. In general the course is heavy on learning theory and light on physio. Requirements: Five short-answer essay exams and a term paper. Texts: Tentatively Ardrey's African Genesis, Pfeiffer's Emergence of Man, Bolles' Theory of Motivation, and several short stories.

COURSE REVISIONS AND ADDITIONS

INTERPRETER'S STUDIES 581

All students interested in Interpreter's Studies 581, Techniques of Consecutive Interpretation, should sign up for French 581 for Spring 1978. The preregistration of students in majors other than French will be changed to Interpreter's Studies 581 over the January break. The prerequisites are fluency in one or more foreign language. It is open to undergraduate and graduate students.

The Freshman Rhetoric Program

Women's/ Men's Rhetoric, 110W

Section 1, TuTh, 11:15, (686517)
Section 2, TuTh, 11:15, (686524)

Note: The student who enters these sections must have completed a first semester (Group I) rhetoric course. The course focuses on helping the student to improve writing skills.

TOPICAL FOCUS: WOMEN'S RHETORIC

An exploration of the ways in which women communicate images of themselves, other women, and the world in which they work and live.

Women's literary and oral tradition will provide the focus, and an attempt will be made to include voices of women from other cultures besides our own. Literature, music, and film will be used as resources for out study. Informal lecture and discussion, with short papers due throughout the semester. There will be frequent in-class and out-of-class writing assignments. Course will be taught in 2 sections on Tuesdays and as one large section on Thursdays.

Some possible readings: "A Room of One's Own" — Virginia Woolf, "Towards a New Psychology for Women" — Jean Baker Miller, "The Woman Warrior" — Maxine Hong Kingston (Autobiography), "Daughter of Earth" — Agnes Smedley (Novel), "Machinal" — Sophie Treadwell (Play), various short stories from "American Voices, American Women," and poetry of Adrienne Rich, Anne Sexton, Tess Gallagher, Ai, and Carolyn Forche.

Section 3, TuTh, 1:00, (686531)
Section 4, TuTh, 1:00, (686548)

Note: The student who enters these sections must have completed a first semester (Group I) rhetoric course. The course focuses on helping the student improve writing skills.

TOPICAL FOCUS: FRIENDSHIP AND MARRIAGE: RHETORIC FOR MEN AND WOMEN

The semester will be divided into three parts: examination of assumptions and stereotypes; examination of friendship between women and friendship between men; examination of relationships between men and women, both sexual and non-sexual.

Material for discussion will come from personal experience and from reading assignments. Some authors who will be looked at include Plato, Montaigne, Doris Lessing, Saul Bellow, Bob Dylan, Joni Mitchell, Simone de Beauvoir, Ernest Hemingway and D.H. Laurence. We will also look at Ms. magazine and Playboy magazine. There will also be some films.

Requirements will be one 7 to 10-page paper for each of the three parts of the course as well as frequent in-class writing exercises.

PSYCH 105

The correct schedule for Psych 105 is: Lec. 1, Tu 2:30-3:45, Skinner Auditorium. Students will be assigned to discussions on Thursday, 2:30-3:45 or Wednesday evening.

PHYSICS 142

Physics For Life Science Majors (II), Physic 142, will also be offered spring semester in the evening through Continuing Education. Lecture - Tuesday, 7-10 p.m.; Lab - Thursday, 7-10 p.m. 4 credits.

teaching a weekly seminar on journalism muckraking of the early 20th century. The courses, journalism 491-A, will meet Monday nights from 7 to 10.

Boylan's lectures will center on the brief, climactic and turbulent period of exposing big business trusts and their effects on child and woman labor, patent medicines and the political machines of the cities, states and United States Senate.

Students will read muckraking pieces by Upton Sinclair, Ray Stannard Baker, Samuel Hopkins Adams, David Graham Phillips, Burton Hendrick and B.O. Flower. Literature analyzing the muckraking period will also be used — Hofstadter's "Age of Reform," Wilson's "McClure's Magazine and the Muckrakers," Harrison/ Stein's "Muckraking: Past, Present and Future" and others.

Grading will be based on written work and class participation. Students should register with permission of the journalism program advisor in Machmer E-12S.

Boylan, who has lectured at UMass in the past, will conduct another seminar in the spring on journalism ethics.

The Western European Studies Program, dealing with specific Western European problems, will again be offered next semester. All courses are taught in English.

The program focuses on societies both with unique historical traditions and a common heritage and destiny. For further details see Prof. Mankin at Herter 429.

Distinguished Teacher Award nominations due Wednesday

The Distinguished Teacher Award has honored 55 teachers. The Provost's Office yearly presents six Distinguished Teacher Awards of $1,000 each, three for full-time teaching faculty and three for graduate teaching assistants and associates.

All members of the University community may make nominations.

Since the validity of the awards depends upon the best teachers being nominated, the committee urges everyone to consider nominating those teachers whom they have found to be truly distinguished. The following is provided for your information.

Qualifications: A nominee must be a full-time teaching faculty member (or TA-TO) who primarily teaches undergraduates; he or she must have taught here for three years, and two semesters of teaching evaluations for all classes must be collected by the DTA committee. The DTA committee is seeking evidence of the following characteristics of outstanding teaching: ability to stimulate students through challenging ideas and effective communication; ability to relate to many types of students, along with concern for student needs; ability to interpret and relate the results of contemporary scholarship; a deep and real knowledge of subject matter; distinguished performance in both large and small class formats.

Commitee: The Distinguished Teacher Awards Committee, which chooses the award winner, is formed in the following way: 1) Each Distinguished Teacher who is still a staff member is invited to serve for a period of two years. A teacher who is on sabbatical leave is invited to serve upon his-her return. Teaching assistants-associates are invited to serve for one year. 2) The president of the Undergraduate Student Senate is invited to designate an undergraduate student representative. 3) The president of the Graduate Student Senate is invited to designate a graduate student representative. 4) Deans of those schools and colleges not representated on the committee by a Distinguished Teacher are invited to name a representative to serve for a period of two years. 5) The chairpersonship rotates every two years among the various schools and colleges in alpahbetical order. When a school or college has more than one representative on the committee, the dean designates the individual to serve as chair.

Process of Selection: Once it has been determined that a nominee is eligible for an award (three years of service, undergraduate teaching, full-time status), the appropriate dean and department head-chair are notified of the nomination.

Information is sent to a representative of the department (the liaison person) requesting that evaluation forms be distributed to classes, colleagues, counselees, and so on. The DTA committee requests that departments make every effort to collect information from the broadest variety of sources, including alumni-ae.

Nominees should provide the liaison person with names of persons qualified to write evaluations of their work, as part of the process of reaching as broad a selection of opinion as possible, but beyond this nominees should not be involved in the evaluation process nor in the collection of data.

After information on two semesters teaching has been gathered, the nominee's file in complete and the DTA committee meets to evaluate it. All the files of nominees for a given year are read carefully and discussed at length; through a gradual process of elimination the field of candidates is narrowed until finally the three top candidates are selected.

Orchard Hill Observatory has openings for students

Your Birthday

By Stella Wilder

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 21 — Born today, you are a person of charm, energy, and imagination, a combination that insures your social and career success. Your approach to most problems is unconventional, but the results of that approach are almost always precisely what is hoped for. Your main desire is to satisfy your urge for character development; beyond that, you will accept gratefully whatever comes of a beneficial nature.

You are never discouraged by setbacks, but are usually spurred by them to increased action, more deliberate and more accurate calculations, and more humble and determined application of your creative talents. Some may accuse you of loving your leisure to excess. More accurately, it is your instinctive knowledge of the value of rest and recreation and hence your insistence upon balancing work with play.

You are ambitious, but you never allow this to dictate actions against your moral grain. High standards keep you on the "straight and narrow" and a strict sense of ethics keeps you from wasting your time, talent, and energy. You believe in your ability to achieve your goals and you will fight hard against those who would keep you from testing that belief.

To find what is in store for you tomorrow, select your birthday and read the corresponding paragraph. Let your birthday star be your daily guide.

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 22

SAGITTARIUS(Nov.22-Dec.21) — An emotional approach to a problem at home takes away any pleasure in finding a solution.

CAPRICORN(Dec.22-Jan.19) — Work out your own ideas, or you may be forced to accept blame, not praise, for a breakdown of plans.

AQUARIUS(Jan.20-Feb.18) — An honest, straightforward answer disarms even those who began questioning armed to the teeth!

PISCES(Feb.19-March 20) — You should find satisfaction your activities if you include children. The elderly may make unusual demands.

ARIES(March 21-April 19) — Make a decision early in the day, and avoid having to do so in the midst of a crisis.

TAURUS(April 20-May 20) — Insist upon your right to speak for yourself, or you may not receive the benefits you deserve.

GEMINI(May 21-June 20) — Try hard to look objectively at the work of the competition. Admit honestly to its high quality.

CANCER(June 21-July 22) — Let others know where you stand, or you cannot expect them to support you in your efforts.

LEO(July 23-Aug.22) — Today you may be able to spot a winner on sight. Make use of your ability to predict the immediate future.

VIRGO(Aug.23-Sept.22) — Don't ask for what you don't want; you are likely to get what you demand today, particularly in spiritual matters.

LIBRA(Sept.23-Oct.22) — This is not the most auspicious time for making your plans public. Bide your time.

SCORPIO(Oct.23-Nov.21) — Analyze the situation carefully before you commit yourself to material or spiritual aid. A' may not be well.

Curt P. Kohlberg

Inside the turnstyle: Yonkers

The weekend of November 5th seemed like it was years away. It was just a dream, not something that would actually happen. But as the car was being filled with my traveling accessories, I realized that I was on my way to Yonkers Raceway in New York, which has the reputation of being the number one harness track on the east coast.

In just a short time I would be there, testing my handicapping talents on strictly first class racing (very little fixing occurs).

Yonkers is a track where the smallest purse on any weekend night is worth more than a championship clash at any other trotting facility I have ever attended.

A track where such world renowned drivers as Henri and Herve Fillion, Del Insko, Lucien Fontaine (the leading driver of this meet), Stanley Dancer, and Billy Haughton perform regularly.

To be perfectly honest, I wasn't going there to win any specific sum of money, I just wanted to say that I had been there.

The trip to Yonkers only lasted about three hours, due to the fabulous driving of Eric (Mario Andretti) Weihrauch, and some fancy map-reading by yours truly. We checked into our first class hotel and relaxed for a couple of hours before the 8:00 p.m. post time.

Upon arrival at the one-half mile raceway, I was met by a Mr. Cohen, the public relations director of Yonkers. Cohen was a young, hard working gentleman who knew his "stuff," and I'm sure that Yonkers is glad to have him.

After he led us to our pressbox seats high above the grandstand, we received statistical information about the meet, which incidently was ending the very same night. Also in the pressbox were Spencer Ross of C.B.S. (who was broadcasting the results of the fifth race, The Croton Stakes, won by Crash), a dozen or so other journalists and Gerry Mastellone, the track handicapper.

In short, Mastellone is one of the nicest guys I have ever met at a racing establishment, and is also one of the most knowledgeable horseplayers I have ever known. He was never too busy to talk to me, his best selections were winners, and the information he introduced to me will definately enhance my future handicapping adventures. So, as far as accommodations are concerned, Yonkers rates near the top of the list.

Some of the statistical information I received was astonishing. The average attendance was 8,848 for the 167 day meeting, and the average handle was $1,296,200.

These two figures indicate the fact that harness racing is a big sport in New York, and how great a track Yonkers truly is. These two figures are roughly equivalent to the same statistics of two (or more!) of New England's finest racing facilities when compiled together.

I feel that there are four major reasons for this: 1) Yonkers has the best drivers and trainers in the country. 2) The purses attract all the best horses, which in turn attract the best gamblers, which in turn attract their big wallets. 3) Yonkers has been around and has operated successfully for along time. Its reputation alone attracts a good percentage of the horseplayers from three states (Pennsylvania, New York, New Jersey), all of which enable the gambler to go to the readily accessible off-track betting establishment. 4) A lot of races at Yonkers are viewed on television, because New York is the harness racing capital of the east, and therefore an enormous amount of people are aware that big races are run there.

The stage was set for an enjoyable night, and within a blink of an eyelash the racing form found its way into my hands, readying me for what I had to predict and wager my dollars on.

What happened that night in the press box will surely be remembered for a long time to come. Two UMass students hit eight out of 10 races, and traveled home rich. This writer had the most profitable night of his career, hitting five exact as and a "Big triple," and "raking in" some six hundred dollars in profit.

I was in disbelief. Eric was psyched.

The other people in the press box just couldn't believe that two students who had never been to Yonkers before could ever win so much. But alas, it had happened. We were big winners.

Steady Josie ($3.80), Saint Clair Evan ($21.60), and Dead Ringer ($6.00) provided us with hundred dollar betting cushions as they were the victors in the first three races of the night. Our investments just kept on multiplying and our wallets steadily increased in width. And to top it all off, the winning three horses in the big triple all appeared on my tickets.

The $150.00 payoff was chocolate icing on my devils food cake, a bottle of A-1 on my filet mignon.

The trip had been both enjoyable and financially profitable. And as we left Antoine's, one of New York's famous all-night clubs, the fringe benefits of staying in a hotel also came in handy (so to speak). Next weekend these two handicappers travel to Roosevelt Raceway, trying out some new "investing" techniques.

Cunningham keys Pats

BUFFALO, N.Y. [AP] — Sam Cunningham scored two fourth-quarter touchdowns on runs of 31 yards and one yard to help the New England Patriots keep their playoff hopes flickering with a 20-7 victory over the Buffalo Bills yesterday.

Cunningham's 31-yard gallop on an inside sweep, capped a 76-yard drive that began after the Bills only score of the game, a 24-yard pass from Joe Ferguson to fullback Jim Braxton.

John Smith kicked field goals of 33 and 25 yards for the Patriots, who are now 6-4.

Only 27,598 fans showed up to see the Bills fall to 2-8.

After a lackluster first half, quarterback Steve Grogan began moving the Patriots, and keyed the drives with his own running.

Top 15 a possibility

Harriers hit Spokane for NCAA's

By MIKE BERGER
Collegian Staff

Coach Ken O'Brien can't believe it. He's in Spokane, Washington today with seven members of his UMass cross country team in the National Collegiate cross country Championships. At the beginning of the season, O'Brien wouldn't have thought for a minute he would be there.

"When we began the season I was worried about Stetson Arnold coming off hepatitis, Mike Quinn's ankle, and about the strength of Providence and Northeastern. I was even more worried as the season wore on as both Arnold and Quinn got injured. But everything began to come together at the season," said O'Brien.

By virtue of an 11-2 dual meet record, Yankee Conference title second place finish in the New Englands, and most recently an IC4A win, the harriers are aiming for anywhere from fifth to the 15th place in the nation.

The race today, to begin at 11 a.m. Pacific Coast time (2 p.m. EST) will feature 33 of the best Division I Collegiate cross country teams with 300 runners competing.

The meet will also determine All-American status for the first 50 American collegiate runners. Arnold (1975) and Quinn (1976) have earned the title and it seems likely that they will earn it again. Also under consideration is Lou Panaccione, who has finished 20th in both the New Englands and the IC4A's.

Other runners competing for the harriers will be co-captain Frank Carroll, seniors Tom Wolff and Bob Neil and sophomore Mike Morris.

Neil, who most recently won the junior varsity IC4A's, will enter his first Nationals race as will Carroll, Wolff, Morris, and Panaccione.

Morris, who ran JV all season, placed 48th in the IC4A's last week and was put into the lineup for his aggressiveness, according to O'Brien.

The favorites for the first five team positions are Oregon, Washington State, Texas-El Paso, Eastern Tennessee and Providence.

"Those teams," said O'Brien, "are clearly the best teams in the nation. The real competition will be for the fifth through 15th spots. I think on a good day we could finish fifth and at very worse finish in the latter portion of the top 20."

The runners expected to challenge for the top five individual spots will be Henry Rono (Washington State), Alberto Salazar, (Oregon, a Massachusetts native), Sampson Kimombwa (Washington State, native of Kenya) and the 'Irish Connection' from Providence — Gerry Deegan and John Treacy.

The race itself will be run on Hangman's Valley Golf Course, which is 6.1 miles. It's a course similiar to Boston's Franklin Park, with rolling hills, some woodland, and flat fairways.

Minutemen six dropped in roughhouse struggle

By MICHAEL MCHUGH
Collegian Staff

It could easily have been the Spectrum or Boston Garden Saturday night, but certainly not Orr rink, where a handful of inebriated ULowell and UMass fans broke bottles, harassed players and created an atmosphere comparable only to Armageddon.

It was a hockey game that turned into a gladiatorial battle.

In the hockey game, the visitors, thanks to a three-goal outburst within a time span of 3:29 in the second period and a 'straw that broke the camel's back' goal in the third period, defeated the Minutemen six, 5-2, before 800 fans.

Sam Adams, not the Patriots' lineman but the Chiefs' forward, zipped the puck past UMass goaltender John Riley at 11:22 of the third period. Adams' goal proved to be the 'straw,' as it turned a catchable 4-2 lead into an insurmountable 5-2 margin.

The gladiatorial battle featured 32 penalties whistled between both teams, with the majority of the penalties coming in the third period.

The ugly fireworks from the fans ignited in the waning moments of the final period. A group of UMass and Lowell fans became involved in a fracas behind the penalty box that scattered students, as well as families with little children in the stands.

After the fight broke up, the drunks turned their wrath onto the players visiting the penalty box. If they couldn't intimidate the players with obscene gestures, they turned to spitting at them. All this havoc took place without a policeman in sight.

"I had my doubts as to whether it was a hockey game or not," said UMass coach Jack Canniff.

"It was more like a war. We have a sound hockey team that can play good hockey when it wants to play good hockey, but inebriated people caused things tonight (Saturday night) that I don't consider hockey. We didn't skate too well either, we were hesitating quite a bit. It really wasn't a good outing," he added.

"I thought we played well defensively," said Lowell coach Bill Riley. "We concentrate on defense and hope we can get a goal from time to time. UMass played well, they used their size and tried to intimidate us like the Philadelphia Flyers. However, we have faster skaters and didn't let their intimidation take anything from our game."

The three-goal outburst by Lowell in the second period was perhaps the key to the game. With the score tied at one, the Chiefs exploded for three goals within a time span of 3:29.

Captain Barry Yeadon started the goal scoring parade at 9:17 when he took a pass from Dave Sullivan and slipped a powerplay goal by Riley.

Steve Jamieson got the second of his two goals at 11:26 when he stickhandled in and out of the Minutemen defenders and slipped the puck past a prostrate Riley.

Craig MacTavish completed the parade at 12:46 when he took a pass from Sullivan once again and punched home goal number four for Lowell.

All this scoring came just after UMass had tied the game at 1-1 at 8:31 when Don Murphy poked home a goal in a crowd outside the Lowell net. Ron Valicenti and John Peters were credited with assists.

The Minutemen appeared headed down 4-1 going into the final period, but Peters had something to say about that. The burly right winger powered home a goal at 18:29 after taking a pass from co-captain Bill White in front of the net.

Riley was magnificent in the middle period. The score could have easily been 10-1, but he thwarted Lowell time and time again with lightning quick reflexes. The senior was peppered with 33 shots in just two periods of play. The featured stop was a breakaway save on the Chief's top scorer John Costello.

Swimwomen dunk UVM, 80 51, for 4th win

By ELLEN DAVIS
Collegian Staff

The women's swim team ended its first week of competition Saturday by defeating the University of Vermont, 80-51 in a home meet at NOPE.

Despite the absence of one of its top swimmers, Deb Schwartz, the team pulled through, bringing its season record to 4-0.

UMass got off to a good start by taking first place in the first six events to make the score 40-12 going into the required diving competition.

The 200 yard medley relay team of Kathy Jurcik, Maryanne Primavera, Celia Walsh, and Lise Hembrough led the way with a time of 2:02.7; followed by Lynn Lutz who won the 500 freestyle in 5:57.

Jeri Otey hit the wall first in the 100 freestyle, with a time of 58.1; and Kathy Jurcik led the field in the 50 backstroke with a 30.6 finish.

In the 50 yard breaststroke, Primavera swam her best of 35.9 to add another 5 points for UMass, and Walsh took the 100 butterfly with a time of 1:06.5.

In the required diving, veteran Suzy Strobel accumulated 127.45 points to win for UMass and teammate Leslie Dunphy followed in second with 126.5 points.

Two more victories came in for UMass in the 50 freestyle and the 100 backstroke, with Otey winning the freestyle event in 26.2 seconds and Jurcik taking the backstroke event with a time of 1:06.6.

UMass suffered its first loss in the 100 yard individual medley, but came back in the 200 freestyle with first and second places by Walsh and Lutz.

The UVM "catfish" dominated the rest of the meet, by winning the 50 fly, the optional diving event, the 100 breaststroke, and the 200 freestyle relay, but it was too late.

The UMass team will be on the road again tomorrow night, for a 7:00 p.m. tri-meet with the University of Connecticut and Central Connecticut at New Britain. Although the team beat Central Connecticut last year, they lost to UConn by a lot, so the meet should be the toughest of the season so far for UMass.

Surging Eagles smother gridders

CHESTNUT HILL — If a football game were divided into three periods, UMass would have defeated Boston College, 7-0, Saturday night.

But a grid contest lasts four periods, and the Minutemen soon found out that they could have easily done without the last 15 in their final game of the season.

The Eagles tied the score just 33 seconds into the quarter, and then took advantage of four UMass turnovers and went on to post a devastating 34-7 win here at Alumni Stadium before 30,846 fans.

The loss ended an eight-game winning streak, and the Minutemen finished regular season with an 8-2 record.

"We let that seven points hold up for three period and a little more," said UMass coach Dick McPherson. "But, unfortunately for us, this is a four quarter game and we just ran out of gas."

Indeed, a staunch Minuteman defense held the Boston College at bay for 45 minutes, but the Eagles' high-powered offense and bruising defense then took command and put 34 points on the scoreboard in a little over nine minutes.

Quarterback Ken Smith, who was the brunt of some BC boos in the first half for throwing three interceptions, guided the Eagles to their first score.

After a John Romboli quick kick gave BC the ball on its own 42, Smith ended the third period by rushing to midfield.

When intentional grounding set up a second and 23 situation, Smith hit wide receiver Dan Godbolt on a 36-yard pass play to bring the ball down to the UMass 24.

From there, fullback Dan Conway (130 yards on 23 carries and three TD's) bolted down to the UMass eight on a draw, and then waltzed through a big hole in the right side of the Eagle line for the tying touchdown.

The first of four straight Minuteman turnovers — a Dennis Dent fumble on a perfectly diagnosed end-around — came on UMass next possession, and BC the ball on the Minutemen's 22.

On the next play, Smith hit flanker Paul McCarty with a perfectly-thrown touchdown pass.

Another UMass turnover led to some more icing on BC's cake. On the Minutemen's first play after regaining possession, Mike Fallon overthrew John Gladchuk and instead hit BC safety Paul Murphy. It marked his second interception of the game.

Yeoman-like work by Conway in BC's six-play, 69-yard scoring drive gave the Eagles their third touchdown. He took care of the honors by blasting over from the two, and also carried five times for 50 yards in the tidy drive.

A Dave Douvadjian fumbla on the Minutemen's next series gave BC the ball again, and Conway picked up his third touchdown by driving into the end zone from one yard out. A key to the drive came in the form of a pass interference caal on Dave Croasdale, which put the ball on the UMass one.

The salt - in - the - wound score came after a John Romboli fumble, which linebacker Clint Gaffney recovered at the UMass 14. Mike Curry took a last-second, picture-perfect pitchout from quarterback Jay Palazola and ran in from the 11.

"Once we got in a hole, we just couldn't get back in the game," McPherson said. "When we tried to play catchup football, we're in trouble."

But for a long time, UMass gave BC all it could handle as the Minutemen thwarted drive after Eagle drive.

Three first half interceptions helped UMass keep the Eagles grounded, while the tough rushing defense limited BC to only 32 yards in 21 carries and also forced two fumbles.

Meanwhile, the Minutemen scored their lone touchdowns with only 47 seconds left in the second period. After a Kevin Sullivan interception gave UMass the ball on its own 46, Fallon found Dennis Dent and Romboli on consecutive completions to move the down to the BC 21. On the next play, safety Doug Alston interfered with Kevin Cummings in the end zone.

A Fallon keeper around left end gave the Minutemen their first lead over a BC team since 1972.

But poor field position kept the Minutemen pinned in their own end most of the third quarter, and a swarming BC defense helped keep them there.

The domination showed clearly in the statistics. Fallon, who was five-for-12 passing at halftime, was not able to complete a pass in the second half.

On the ground, Dent led the way with 48 yards in six carries, while Douvadjian, filling in for an ailing Billy Coleman, netted 44 in 13. Notably, though, Hank Sareault could manage just 11 yards in 11 attempts.

Coleman, who saw only brief action, picked up six yards in three carries. "Billy felt a lot better on the grass than on the astro-turf," McPherson said, referring to BC's field and Coleman's bad ankle. "The surface really bothered him."

Several other Minutemen received assorted bumps and bruises. Most seriously, linebacker defensive end Steve Telander tore knee ligaments and underwent surgery yesterday. He will miss Saturday's playoff game.

Joe Harrington received "one helluva" blow to the chest, McPherson said, and stirred up concern in the UMass camp.

Gridders to face Lehigh

By RICH ECKEL
Collegian Staff

UMass coach Dick MacPherson's number two ranked college Division II team yesterday learned that its opponent in this Saturday's first round playoff game will be Lehigh College from Bethlehem, Pa.

In related news, the Minutemen also were notified that 12 members of their Yankee Conference championship team had been selected first team YanCon all-stars by a vote of the league's head coaches.

Lehigh, which plays an independent schedule and was ranked eighth in the last Division II poll completed its regular season Saturday with a 35-17 victory over Lafayette to up its record to 9-2.

"I'm not that familiar with them," said MacPherson, after receiving word from NCAA officials. "However, I do know they beat UConn 49-0 and URI 42-16. That tells me something."

The other playoff pairings announced yesterday by the NCAA have UCal-Davis (10-0) hosting Bethune-Cookman (8-3), North Dakota State (8-1-1) will face Northern Michigan (7-2) at home, and Jacksonville State (9-2) will travel to Northern Arizona's (9-2) home field.

Lehigh, in compiling its 9-2 record, played three Division I schools, five Division II opponents and three Division III rivals. The Engineers defeated Penn, 14-7 and VMI, 30-20, to post two impressive wins over higher classed teams. They lost to Rutgers, 20-0, for one of their defeats. Lehigh's other loss came in its second game of the season, when the Engineers were upended 28-15, by Division III opponent, Balwin Wallace.

According to Lehigh Sports Information Director Joe Whritenour, the Engineers have a high-powered offense that scored 364 points this season for a 33 point-per-game average. The defense has allowed just 138 points.

Whritenour said Lehigh's offense has relied mostly on its passing game and the statistics back him up. He said the offense is led by quarterback Mike Rieker, a 6-2, 200-lb. senior, who has completed 60 per cent of his passes this season. Rieker has thrown for 2,431 yards and 23 touchdowns. The 23 touchdown tosses set a single season Lehigh record.

Rieker's favorite receiver, according to Whritenour, is junior Steve Kreider, who caught 53 passes this year for 1,181 yards and 12 touchdowns.

"We don't have what you would call a blistering running attack," said Whritenour. "We run mainly to keep the defense honest and then watch out for the pass."

The winner of Saturday's game to be played at Alumni Stadium (12:45 kickoff) will meet the victor of the UCal-Davis - Bethune-Cookman contest. If UCal-Davis wins, the victor at Alumni Stadium Saturday would travel to California for a second round game on Dec. 3. Should Bethune-Cookman win, then the winner here Saturday would be the host for the second round. The finals, should UMass make it, will be played in Wichita Falls, Texas.

Meanwhile, although suffering from Saturday's 34-7 loss at BC, the Minutemen still had something to smile about when they learned that 12 of their players had been selected to the YanCon all-star team. UMass and UNH dominated the team by placing 19 of the 22 players selected to the first team.

New Hampshire tailback Bill Burnham was the only unanimous pick to the team. UMass's tight end Kevin Cummings, UNH quarterback Jeff Allen and Burnham were the only repeaters from last year's team.

UMass placed seven players on the offensive squad and contributed five to the defensive unit. UMass also had seven team members earn second team honors.

"It's just fantastic," said MacPherson.

Booters lose; end successful year

Garden City, N.Y. — Class. Nothing but class.

Playing on a frigid, windswept field here, the UMass soccer team battled but lost to Adelphi University by a 1-0 score in the opening game of the ECAC tournament last Saturday morning.

It was UMass' debut in post-season tournament play. The loss wasn't the real story though, as the Minutemen proved that they could hold their own and play evenly with an offensive powerhouse like Adelphi.

"It was anybody's game," said UMass coach Russ "Cap" Kidd. "It was an honor to come down here and play in this tournament and our showing should help our image in the Long Island area."

Adelphi dominated the first 15 minutes of play in the first half before the Minutemen adapted to the Panther style and the new type of ball that was used in the tournament. After that it was end to end action with no real scoring threats until late in that half when Minuteman Joel Mascolo had a golden opportunity only to be foiled on a questionable defensive tactic employed by the Panther defense.

Mascolo was about ten feet in front of the Adelphi goal when the ball squirted out to him. Before he could get a shot off though, one of the Panthers fell on him from behind and dragged him to the ground, thwarting any attempted shot.

The second half opened the same way with neither team getting any really good scoring opportunities. This lasted until 25:04 was gone, when the MInutemen saw the goal scored that would eventually end their season.

The winning goal came on a play that started out looking like a harmless threat. The Panthers dribbled the ball down the field and dumped it off in the left corner where Y. Ben-Haiim took the ball and challenged the Minutemen defenders. Ben-Haiim dribbled the ball to goaltender Mark Hodgdon's right before he let go a centering pass that looked as though it wouldn't make it through the cluster of players now forming in front of the net.

But it did, and found its way to the foot of Nimrod Dreyfuss who was camped in front of the goal. The pro-prospect didn't waste any time as he drilled a shot that soared over Hodgdon's outstretched hands, struck the inside of the upper crossbar, and careened into the net.

It was somewhat tainted though, as some of the Panthers were guilty of obstructing the Minutemen on the play.

"The failure of the official to call the obstruction led directly to the goal," lamented Kidd.

The goal was somewhat of a letdown to Minutemen defenders Larry Aronson, Pat Veale, Mark Vassalotti, and Mike St. Martin, who had been doing an unblemished job of containing the agile Panthers.

St. Martin should be particularly cited for his aggressive tactics when challenging the charging Panther offense. The "Saint", as his teammates call him, is very adept at using his body to stop an opponent.

On one instance, UMass had several shots within the space of ten seconds, but the shots of Tasso Koutsoukos, Mascolo, and Bob Abt were either blocked by the defense or were wide of the net.

Eventually, time ran out and the 10-5 Minutemen found themselves facing the end of their season.

But, as previously indicated, the Minutemen have nothing to be ashamed of as they made an impressive showing in their first sampling of post-season play. They have established themselves as a solid soccer team in the New England area which is a credit to Kidd who has done an outstanding job of recruiting without any scholarship aid.

"Hey, it was disappointing, but this team has come a long way and with some of the younger players on this team, UMass should have a good team for the next few years," said outgoing senior and co-captain Ed Niemiec. Niemiec's partner in captainship, Larry Aronson, shared his views and expressed his disappointment over the loss.

"They're the most skilled team that we've played all year, but we had just as many scoring opportunities as they had," explained Aronson.

Saturday's game marked the last time that seniors Willie Sorenson, Hodgdon, Andy Morre, Niemiec, and Aronson wore the maroon and white of UMass.

Student Judiciary Rejects Definition of Third World

Craig Sherwood

by Renee Mobley

The Student Senate Judiciary, on Wednesday, November 16th, handed down a decision on the definition of Third World. The jury, after a forty minute trial and a three hour deliberation, ruled the definition unconstitutional.

The definition submitted by the Third World caucus specifies Asian, African, Latin and Native Americans as those students who may vote in Third World elections and hold Third World Senate seats.

The Judicial decision was prompted by a complaint filed by former student senator Craig Sherwood. Sherwood, a caucasion, ran on the senatorial ballot set aside for Third World students. He issued his resignation from that seat on November 16th but he continues to push his complaint in the court.

Sherwood said that he filed the complaint because he feels that the definition, issued by the Third World caucus, is too limited and that it prevents other minorities from getting representation on the senate. He feels that the fifteen senate seats, set aside for Third World students, should include religious minorities, all ethnic groups, women and gay people.

Members of the Third World caucus of the student senate assert that the definition they submitted to the senate is one which they have been using in theory, since the fifteen seats were set aside in 1972. Putting the definition in writing and placing it in the senate by-laws was merely a formality to prevent the white majority from controlling the outcome of Third World elections.

The definition was approved by a two thirds majority vote of the senate and it would have been entered into the by-laws if the judiciary had not voted against it.

Attorney General Jeffrey Lutsky represented the student senate in defense of the definition. Lutsky argued that members of the Third World community suffer racial discrimination unique to them and that the needs of the third world community are different than the needs of any other minority groups.

Lutsky's main witness, Student Senator John Young, explained how each senator must have a defined constituency. "Without the definition, the third world constituency consists of any and everybody who considers themselves discriminated against" said Young.

Defense Attorney Lutsky argued that it would be ridiculous to have a third world caucus consist of everyone on campus. He pointed

★Victory To The Freedom Fighters Of Southern Africa

Mr. Bheki Langa, exiled South African, addresses audience at presentation last Thurs. night.

Coordinated with the demonstration on South Africa which was held last Saturday on the Amherst Commons, was an extremely informative lecture which was held at 7:30 p.m. last Thursday night at the Prince House Lounge in Southwest. Mr. Bheki Langa, director of The Center For Racial Understanding, made a presentation, which was both scholarly and politically revolutionary entitled, "The International Dimensions of The South African Crisis."

Bheki Langa is a native of South Africa who is currently exiled in the United States. For the past few years he has been living, studying and working in the Amherst area and is now the director for the Center of Racial Understanding which is located at Moore House in Southwest. Even though the director's salary was arbitarily cut in half by the Southwest Assembly, since the beginning of the semester, Mr. Langa has intensified his personal participation with other organizations which are working to increase student awareness of the battles which are currently being waged, from Amherst to South Africa, to eliminate racism (white supremacy) and its ghastly effects from the face of the earth.

Mr. Langa began his presentation by correctly analyzing the present stage of the South African Crisis. He is convinced that, "In the very near future there will be a blood bath in South Africa which will surpass that of Vietnam and will be unequalled in the pages of world history."

He then paid tribute to the martyrs of the South African revolutionary struggle: namely, Steve Biko who is the synthesis of South Africa's present, also of South Africa's future. He died at the age of 30, an activist, in the captivity of his oppressors. He had been arrested, an activist, after the anger of his generation had erupted like a volcano in Soweto on June 16th, 1976. Yet to the last he spoke for all of South Africa andfought for a common South Africa. He also paid tribute to the valiant young South African students, who have been gunned down for peacefully marching on the streets, as well as the numerous South Africans who have either been banned or forced into exile for their protest to Vorster's blatantly racist regime. Their courage, their determination, their vision of the South Africa of the future, and above all, their ready acceptance of the personal sacrifices they will have to make to bring it about can only result in total African freedom.

Recently a charade, which was described in the news media, as a success, occured at the United Nations when the major western countries agreed to impose a limited arms embargo on South Africa. However, the South African Government is virtually self sufficient in arms manufacture. Thus, limited arms embargo is totally meaningless to the flow of the tide of African freedom.

After a lenghty, political analysis of the effects of the historical conflict between the native African people and the immigrant Dutch, English, French and Portugese settlers Mr. Langa concluded that the constitution and all the laws of the Republic of South Africa were founded on inequality and the current struggle between the Africans and the white supremist settlers has resulted in bitter hatred. The issue in South Africa isn't just racism but also capitalist expansion based on the easily available, abundant, cheap labor.

At the conclusion of Mr. Langa's extremely informative presentation there was a question and answer period during which time one very alert female student raised the issue of the usefulness of diplomatic pressure exerted on the South African government through the hundreds of American owned multi-national corporations which are operating in South Africa. In addition to this, diplomatic pressure can also be placed on South Africa through sanctions agreed on by member countries of the United Nations. In response, Mr. Langa said that today, South African society is under a state of seige, with government military police openly killing people who dare to question the white supremist mentality which is unexcuseably blatant in South Africa. The Vorster regime has run out of laws to stem the tide of African freedom and self determination.

Thus the battle for who will control South Africa is now in the hands of the African Freedom Fighters who are fighting, not only against Vorster and his regime, but also, Chase Manhattern Bank, Gulf, Mobil and Amherst College along with the hundreds of other American and European based corporations which daily subjugate the lives of over 15 million Africans. These American cooperations derive billions of dollars worth of profit annually by exploiting the abundant cheap labor in South Africa.

The inhuman suffering which the Black South African population has been forced to endure for centuries at the hands of white facist, demands that racism be ended and that the wealth of South Africa be re-distributed among the African population. Consequently, a lot of people will have to die, for it is violence alone which can achieve this. The Freedom Frighters are up against, what is called in South Africa, "The Lagga Mentality" which is uncompromising white supremacy. Victory to the Freedom Fighters of Southern Africa.

On Saturday a group of 165 people marched through Amherst Center to support a U.S. embargo against South Africa. The demonstration was jointly sponsored by the committee for the liberation of South Africa and the New Africa House Steering Committee. The group chanting "U.S. out of South Africa" marched down North Pleasant Street with picket signs demanding the end of U.S. corporate investments in South Africa.

The group was first addressed by Afro-Am Professor Micheal Thelwell, Greg Williams of the American Friends Service Committee and Nana Seshibe a black South African at Amherst Commons. According to Thelwell "it is true that South Africa is one of the wealthiest nations in the world today, but there is a vulnerability to that nation despite its wealth. South Africa is totally dependent on the capitalist world. The racist regime of South Africa is kept alive by 19th and 20th century racism and capitalism he said. So much of the money has to be used by South Africa to keep up its racist policies. Without the support and patronage of the United States, Britain and France the country would collapse he said. He called for an end to S.A. 19th century racist policies in 1977.

Strong officials most harassed

BY Mary R. Warner
3rd & final of series

"Black politics" is defined as "that newly established, still emerging body-politic that is committed to precluding the fulfillment of racist national and international policy," says the recently released report on harassment of black elected officials.

Not all black politicians are representative of the institution of black politics, the report continues. It is those who are engaged in making fundamental alterations in power relationships and, concurrently, in the distribution of economic resources, who are most prone to be harassed, it says.

The ultimate motivation for the harassment, the report concludes, is the threat posed by the emergence of the black political movement to the status quo.

But whatever the impetus—conscious or unconscious racism, or protection power and economic interests—the effect of harassment is to jeopardize the objectives of black politics of justice and equality, findings show.

An association with the mounting attacks on affirmative action programs is unavoidable. Accordingly, the report includes discussion of the roles of former liberals, neoconservatives, white extremists and white social scientist with regard to the prevailing public mood, the charges of "reverse discrimination" and the patterns of harassment of elected black officials.

Furthermore, the report notes that evidence is surfacing suggesting that the harassment is not restricted but extends to black appointed officials and to black professionals.

Indeed, it appears to extend to black leadership generally, the obvious case in point being U.N. Ambassador Andrew Young.

The confluence of harassment of black leadership, charges of "reverse discrimination," and the horendous unemployment rates in the black community, asserts the report, constitute a crisis situation and an ominous threat to advancement of human rights in this nation.

The report concludes with a series of recommendations for action directed toward various audience—the federal government, black elected officials, the religious community, human rights workers and organization and the public at large.

Carter Supports Jobs Bill "Deal"

WASHINGTON — The Humphrey-Hawkins full employment bill has been comprised to reach a goal of four per cent unemployment in five years instead of the original three per cent unemployment in four years, according to administration sources.

Sponsored by Sen. Hubert Humphrey, D-Minn. and Rep. Augustus Hawkins, D-Calif., the bill is designed to cut the unemployment rate which is now seven per cent.

For months an effort has been made to win President Carter's support for the legislation.

In a press conference last week, President Carter said he expects to make an announcement "within the next few days."

"There are some important aspects of the bill that have been modified recently," Carter said.

He said the bill now includes "a strong anti-inflation commitment" and no longer has "direct authorizations for programs that might have been very costly."

Carter said he expects a successful conclusion to negotiations on the bill with those modifications and that the measure then will go to Congress with his endorsement.

He also noted that his economic stimulus program strongly emphasizes jobs, that the comprehensive education and training program is designed to produce 725,000 jobs by June and that his welfare reform proposals would create 1.2 million jobs.

He said the plans create "the highest level of jobs of this category since the New Deal days under Roosevelt."

"But it is a tedious, slow process," Carter said. "I think the general worldwide economic slowdown is causing this problem to be felt in all nations. We hope, though, that it will come down next year."

He said there is a "heavy emphasis in almost everything we do to cut down unemployment in our country," and "I believe every person in our country who is able to work ought to have an opportunity for a job."

Black Congressmen To Be Filmed

WASHINGTON, D.C. — The Joint Center for Political Studies is planning to produce a documentary film on the 45 black Americans who have either served or are serving in the United States Congress from 1870 to 1977.

The film is designed to inform the general public of the significant contributions made by minority legislators to the nation.

To enable it to carry out the project, the center is seeking information on living relatives and descendants of the legislators. The research project is made possible by a grant to the center from the American Revolution Bicentennial Administration (ARBA).

Persons having information about relatives of deceased black congressmen or their descendants should contact: Dr. Lenneal J. Henderson Jr., associate director of research, Joint Center for Political Studies, 1426 H St., NW, Suite 926, Washington, D.C. 20005 (202) 638-4477.

Bakke Case Won't Split Organization

By David E. Anderson

WASHINGTON—Despite strong differences of opinion on the Bakke reverse discrimination case, 77 national organizations will continue to work together "to secure full civil rights for all our citizens."

The groups, in a statement released by the Leadership Conference on Civil Rights, acknowledged they had fought over the case of Allan Bakke, a white man who charged special programs for minorities kept him out of the University of California Medical School.

The case is now before the Supreme Court.

Our differences on the merits as well as on the ultimate impact of the Bakke case are deep and not to be minimized," the organizations said. "But neither should they be permitted to obscure the shared goals that still unite and bind us together."

"Whatever the decision in the Bakke case, we shall work together in the future, as we have in the past, to secure full civil rights for all our citizens and to help realize those social and economic conditions in which alone the fulfillment of those rights is possible," the statement said.

Signers of the statement said they would continue to fight for government policies and programs that "establish as a matter of right a job at a living wage for everyone willing to work or who can be qualified for work by training..."

They also pledged to work for "A guaranteed income, sufficient for living in dignity, for all those unable to work; a decent home in a decent environment for all; education to the limit of each person's ability and medical care for all in sickness and in health."

Bakke supporters signing the statement included the American Jewish Committee, the American Jewish Congress and the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith.

Anti-Bakke signers of the letter included Americans for Democratic Action, NAACP, the National Education Association, the National Urban League and United Automobile Workers of America.

Others signing the cooperative pledge included the Amalgamated Clothing and Textile Workers Union, Amalgamated Meatcutters and Butcher Workman, American Baptist Churches, American Federation of Government Employees, American Federation of Teachers, Central Conference of American Rabbis, Church Women United, Communications Workers of America, Industrial Union Department—AFL-CIO, Industrial Ladies Garment Workers Union, League of Women Voters, National Bar Association, the Newspaper Guild, and the Southern Christian Leadership Conference — UPI

Public Service Announcement

All CCEBS students should note that on Tuesday, December 6th, CCEBS will sponsor its annual Career Day in the Newman Center. There will be over thirty organizations and companies represented at this year's Career Day. This is a unique opportunity for CCEBS students to find out about a wide variety of job opportunities. Organization representatives will be available to talk with students from 2:00-5:00 p.m. in the Social Hall of the Newman Center. In addition to this, a limited number of Career Day Luncheon seats are being reserved for students. The luncheon is free and will be held at 12 noon in the Newman Center. Anyone interested in attending the luncheon should reserve a seat by signing up immediately with Brian Maher in Room 208 of the New Africa House. Luncheon seats will be filled on a first-come, first-served basis.

Huey Newton to Face Murder Trial

OAKLAND, Calif.—Black Panther leader Huey Newton must face trial in Superior Court for the slaying of a young prostitute and pistol-whipping of his tailor, a Municipal Judge ruled last week.

Newton, 34, is charged with shooting to death Miss Kathleen Smith, 17, on the night of August 6, 1974.

At the time, he was running the Panther Party from a penthouse apartment in Oakland after being released from prison in an earlier case in which he had been convicted of killing a policemen but won a reversal in a higher court.

In order to avoid prosecution, Newton fled to Cuba. He recently returned voluntarily.

He was ordered to face the murder charges in Superior Court Nov. 21.

Municipal Judge J. Robert Friborg heard a week of testimony during the preliminary hearing, including statements by two prostitutes that they were present when the shooting occurred.

Preston Callins, once Newton's tailor, said he could not recall being beaten up by Newton. However, other testimony was introduced indicating Callins, at the time of the beating, had blamed Newton.

The preliminary hearing was also marked by efforts on the part of Newton's attorney, Sheldon Otis, to force the government to disclose FBI files which he and the defense contended would show a conspiracy against the Panthers. (UPI).

Carter choice admits paying White citizens council dues

BELZONI, Miss. — President Carter's nominee for the Corporation for Public Broadcasting board has admitted to having been a dues-paying member of the White Citizen's Council.

Belzoni city attorney Irby Turner Jr. said last week his only involvement with the white supremacy group was to attend one meeting and pay dues.

Turner said he severed ties with the group in the early 1960s because he was concerned about the direction in which it was headed.

"My total involvement with the group consisted of attending one meeting in a high school auditorium and paying $10 dues," Turner said. "I never had anything to do with policy of the organization."

According to the National Citizens Communications Lobby, Turner also "donated land for an all-white segregated private school which his children attend and on whose board he serves as a member."

Other charges question his fitness for CPB board membership.

Since his nomination on Oct. 19, Turner has been the focal point of protests from civil rights groups and the Congressional Black Caucus.

The Senate Communications Subcommittee held a public hearing on the nomination on Oct. 26, but no public witnesses were called.

The Caucus and other civil rights groups are pushing to have another public hearing scheduled to call witnesses to testify about Turner's fitness for the position.

Another meeting has yet to be scheduled.

Carter said at a news conference last week he was not aware the former state legislator had been a member of the white supremacy group formed after the U.S. Supreme Court's 1954 desegregation ruling.

In a letter to the sub-committee, the Caucus alleges that Turner "has committed systematic acts of discrimination based on race and sex."

The citizens' lobby also said that Turner "has violated minimum wage laws regarding his own farm employees..."

Hahn asks Carter to probe inner-city insurance rates

LOS ANGELES—Los Angeles County Supervisor Kenneth Hahn has asked President Carter to appoint a presidential task force to investigate the problems of "excessive, unfair, and unjust" insurance premiums for motorists living in the inner-cities of the U.S.

In a recent letter to the president, Hahn said "There are approximately 129,100,000 motorists in our country and perhaps one-half of them are paying unfair and exorbitantly high insurance costs."

Hahn suggested the task force include Housing and Development Secretary Mrs. Patricia R. Harris and Commerce Secretary Mrs. Juanita Kreps.

The supervisor also suggested Attorney General Griffin Bell should "look into the possibility of price-fixing by the insurance companies.

"I believe there have been violations of anti-trust laws as I have observed large insurance companies have uniform rates and have agreed on a policy of discrimination which makes insurance unavailable to millions of people," Hahn said.

"The automobile insurance companies discriminate against persons because of race, occupation, marital status, age (especially the elderly), sex and handicaps," he said. However, the discrimination is especially heavy against the persons of the urban areas because of the false claim of insurance companies that it is more hazardous to drive urban rather than rural areas."

Dawson 5 Lawyer Accuses Judge of Bias

ATLANTA — Chief defense lawyer for the Dawson Five, Millard Farmer, has accused the Georgia judiciary of racial bias and covering up the wrongs of other judges.

The Dawson Five—all young blacks—are accused of the first-degree murder of a white man in South Georgia.

Farmer attacked the judiciary after an appeals court ruling reversed the suppression of a confession by the alleged triggerman in the case.

The court ruled that the decision to bar the confession was made improperly at the time.

The defense had contended that the confession by Roosevelt Watson, 21, had been obtained by coercion—specifically, threats of castration and electrocution — while he was wired to a lie [illegible]

The alleged confession was made orally, never written down, and was later denied by Watson.

At the preliminary hearings, a former Dawson policeman testified that he had watched while another officeer held a pistol to the head of another defendant, cocked it, and demanded to know where a pistol used in the killing was thrown.

The defense contended that the five young men were framed and were too frightened and illiterate to understand what was happening to them.

Farmer said the new ruling on the alleged confessions was made "to cover up the wrongs of other judges."

He added, that all Georgia judges should examine themselves as to their racial attitudes, with particular attention to membership in private clubs that exclude blacks.

He said, however, that he was prepared to go to trial in the Dawson case even though he believed the ruling by the appeals court was improper.

How To Be An Organizer

Some points in becoming a better organizer is to first recognize your own internal contradictions. The People themselves are aware of their collective contradictions and they must take a direct course of action to correct them. An effective organizer must at least be able to admit to the masses of people whom they are involved with, when he or she are wrong. It is extremely important to be consistent in whatever one attempts to do. Being on time is very important for an organizer if they desire to have good work habits for the group. The organizer must be able to work with all people and never be dogmatic. Another important point is having a genuien concern about the people's feelings inside and outside of the organization, if one ever expects more recruits into the organization. More steps in becoming a better organized individual to organize the masses will apppar in the next issue of Nummo News.

Do Black Students Care About the Coming Generation?

By TONY VAN DER MEER

WHEN ONE SITS DOWN AND VIEWS THE HISTORY OF BLACK People's struggle over the past 20 years, and relate it to the present situation of black people, the question that comes to mind is: DO WE CARE ABOUT THE NEXT GENERATION?

Black people like sister Ella Baker, Robert Williams, Akbar Mohammed Ahmed, Dr. Martin L. King and Malcolm X shed blood, sweat, tears, and some gave their lives, so that the generation coming (us) could have a better life. These freedom fighters made endless sacrifices so that we could get better jobs, a better education, better housing, better health care, and be treated like HUMAN BEINGS.

But what are the results of their struggle? Today, students are graduating from high schools and colleges and can't read and write properly. "Mis-education" is a common thing of black people, in fact, they don't know who some of the freedom fighters are i.e. Ella Baker and Robert F. Williams.

Life in the black community is very HARD! Health care in the black community is very POOR! The unemployment rate for black people is very HIGH! High school and college students are very Dumb! (in relation to the knowledge of their history).

The point is that, these Freedom Fighers were concerned about the coming generation, and they struggled for change. Black students during that time also struggled for change. They too were concerned about the coming generation.

But, are black students of today concerned about the coming generation? If not, why not? If so, then why are we still being mid-educated, why are our little brothers and sisters still watching Tarzan; where the whie man controls the jungle (white supremacy). Why are they watching ISIS who is portrayed as being white, especially when she was a Black Egyptian goddess!!! Why are we letting an outcast like ALLAN BAKKE claim "reverse" discrimination; threatening the special programs and Affirmative Action that black people won through STRUGGLE over the past 20 years.

Why are students killing themselves by partying, snorting "cocaine for their brain", screwing until they can't be screwed, fighting each other as if there isn't somebody else stepping on their necks. Why are these contradictions so common at a time when black people can't find work, when money hungry white people are killing women, children, and men in Southern Afrika? While this government permits t.v. stations to sell the Krugarrand (with a large percentage going to the murderous South African governmnet) especially when this government (amerikkka) advocates Black Majority rule. (Will the real government please stand up!)

Do students think that the Neutron Bomb is for flies that Jimmy Carter is for Human Rights that things go better with coke? that freedom is free?

What do students think this government will do to them if it will kill a non-violent man like Dr. Martin Luther King? Just look how they dropped atomic boms on the Japanese people, and damn near exterminated the Native Americans. Look how they brought black people over here! Check out how they killed Fred Hampton and George Jackson. What were the U.S. doing in Vietnam, those people never did anything to America.

Why, in 1977, one can hear black people say: "I'm looking out for Self." What about the children of tomorrow? Marvin Gaye said: "Save The Children," what happened? Is a $25,000 job our biggest aspiration. Is the look of "Essence" and "G.Q." magazine more important than black people having HUMAN RIGHTS! (Black power: Self Determination)

Brothers and Sisters, Please WAKE UP! Time is running out! Just think, if the U.S. government wanted to, they can take a vote and put us back in physical SLAVERY! They already have "chains on our brains." Richard Pryor asked: "How long will this Bull ... go on? THE ANSWER IS UP TO YOU!

Tony Van Der Meer is a student at Northeastern University.

DARE TO STRUGGLE ...
DARE TO WIN!!!
IF THERE IS NO STRUGGLE ...
THERE IS NO PROGRESS!!!!
STAY STRONG!

P.S. "SAVE THE CHILDREN."

What Are We Thankful For

People are dying, people are starving in South Africa yet it is the U.S. who is one of the main reason people are dying in South Africa. The U.S. along with Multi-National Corporations are responsible for the Death of Steve Biko, leader of the Black concouisness movement in South Africa. The National Administration of this country are also responsible for the death of children and adults in South Africa. They are responsible because they keep investments in a known racist government. Concerned students and people will be coming together on November 24, 1977 in Washington D.C. to request the National Carter Administration to set a U.S. embargo against the Union of South Africa. We will meet in front of the White House to demand that the Carter Administration call for a U.S. embargo against that racist government.

Students from UMass will be sponsoring transportation to and from Wash. D.C. We will meet in front of the White House at 10:00 Thursday morning for the demonstration, also we will have a press conference at 10:30. Transportation will be leaving from Butterfield House at 11:00 Nov. 23. For more information concerning the trip to D.C. call 546-4538 before Tuesday at 6:00 p.m. This demonstration will be sponsored by Dick Gregory and the National Black Students Association. The People Must Unite!

626 more jailed in S. Africa

JOHANNESBURG — Nearly 200 children were among more than 600 blacks arrested by South African police in a new crackdown on dissent. The government also took wartime powers over industry.

With helicopters hovering overhead, police sealed off a dusty, black township near Pretoria and rounded up 626 blacks.

Police said 410 persons were arrested for "passbook" offenses. Adult blacks were required to carry the bulky identification document at all times, which shows where they are permitted to live and work.

Police said they picked up the 198 school children to determine if they were "in need of care." Police booked about 20 of them on charges ranging from public violence to possession of "dagga" (marijuana).

It was the most serious government action against dissent since Oct. 19 when three black publications were shut down, 47 black activists arrested and 18 groups disbanded.

That crackdown, nicknamed "Black Wednesday," prompted the U.N. Security Council to impose a mandatory international arms embargo against the white government.

In a separate incident, police said they fired shotguns into a band of 50 youths who caused "extensive damage" by hurling stones at police patrols at Cardock, a hitherto peaceful sheep farming town 450 miles south of Johannesburg. No injuries were reported.

Meanwhile South African Police Minister Jimmy Kruger, has admitted for the first time that leader Steve Biko died of brain damage in police custody, but said "a man can damage his brain many ways."

Asked by reporters if Biko died of brain damage, Kruger replied: "That's right," but he insisted there was no evidence of police involvement. "There are all sorts of possibilities," he said.

An autopsy reportedly found that Biko died of brain injuries caused by a blow to the head and that he suffered broken ribs and kidney failure.

Biko was the 20th black detainee, held without trial, to die in South African police custody in the past 19 months. He also was the most prominent and his death sparked off a worldwide uproar and demands for a full inquiry.

In New York, U.N. Ambassador Andrew Young, said South African Prime Minister John Vorster, faces hell for "the sinful life he has adopted as national policy."

Young told the governing board of the National Council of Churches the lives of South Africa's 19 million non-whites "are being jeopardized" by Vorster's apartheid policy of racial segregation.

In Johannesburg, South African leaders have denounced Young as a "racialist" and accused President Carter of using double standards in calling for the respect of human rights.

Two government ministers, in separate speeches also defended the government's crackdown on black dissent.

Tanzania launches ambitious primary education program

DAR ES SALAAM — In preparation for the launching of Tanzania's ambitious universal primary education program (UPE) this month, more schools and additional classrooms have been built through self-help schemes and government aid.

It is expected there will be about 6,000 primary schools capable of accommodating some one million beginners, compared with just over 5,000 schools last year, that enlisted about 850,000 new entrants (or 85 per cent of all the school-age children in the country).

Another important task underway is the registration of all children who will be joining school for the first time this year, to find out their distribution so that allocations for teachers and other basic requirements may be made in time.

The UPE program, probably Tanzania's most ambitious current project, is expected to take up about 30 percent of the present financial year's national education budget and is the costliest single project under the education budget.

Already, some 15,150 new teachers have been trained through a special correspondence course and on-the-job training. Another 14,000 are receiving similar training, with the goal that when the program begins, there will at least be 40,000 primary school teachers.

One of the nagging problems for the government in the past years is that it has never been possible to fill all places in primary schools for a number of sociological reasons.

A survey conducted by the Ministry of National Education has recently shown that most people in coastal and pastoral areas attach little or no importance at all to education for their children.

To the herdsmen, looking after cattle is considered more important an occupation for their children than going to school. In the coastal areas and probably several other areas up country, early marriage of daughters is responsible for their poor school attendance.

In a bid to stop this sort of thing from obstructing a smooth implementation of the UPE promise, the government intends a bill making all parents who fail to send their children to school liable to prosecution.

The penalty for a conviction is expected to be a fine and a six-month, jail term.

According to Prime Minister Edward Sokoine second offenders will have their sentences doubled.

Last year's enrollment of 848,293, though higher than all previous years, failed by 150,670, to fill all the places in school.

Profiting from apartheid

Why U.S. vetoed economic sanctions against South Africa

S. Africa bending on hated 'passes'

PRETORIA, South Africa—The much hated pass books that have to be carried by tribal homeland blacks working in white-only areas, will soon be replaced by identity and travel documents issued by the various tribal homeland governments.

Prime Minister John Vorster met with tribal homeland leaders recently and agreed to eliminate the pass books, called "dompas (stupid pass)" by blacks.

The decision would allow blacks from the homelands to have their families with them while working in white areas. Men from the homelands who now work in white areas must live in all-male residence halls.

It was not clear when the new rules will go in effect or if the migrant workers would be punished if they do not always carry their documents. Presently, migrant workers are fined or jailed for not carrying the pass books.

It appeared that the estimated 8 million urban blacks who live in townships and have no ties with the homelands are excluded from the concessions.

New S. African arrests

If the superprofits U.S. corporations take out of Black workers in South Africa were taxed 100 percent, as the Communist Party USA proposed last week, the corporations would quickly end the aid they are giving the Vorster dictatorship.

The Administration's policy of alleged "moderation helps only the racist Vorster regime, U.S. corporations and overall reaction. It harms not only the South African working class, but U.S. workers and democracy. Runaway U.S. corporations swell their anti-labor treasuries from South African profits, while denying jobs to workers here at home. In addition their support for apartheid abroad fans the flames of racism at home — the same racism used to divide workers and keep wages down.

Ambassador Andrew Young failed to express the outraged sentiments of the U.S. people when, last Friday, he called the Vorster regime's savage roundup of some 700 Black people one of "a series of irrational and fearful things."

"I believe that the sickness that is present in South Africa has got to run its course," Young declared.

That may suit U.S. corporations, which suck the blood from workers in South Africa and the U.S., but it is harmful to the interests of U.S. workers and all democrats.

The situation demands not delay, but speed. The U.S. should break diplomatic relations! Declare an economic embargo! A 100 percent tax on profits from South Africa!

South African Doctors Emigrate to U.S.

HOUSTON — South Africa doctors are seemingly making a steady exodus from that country and already, about 50 have settled in the Houston area within the past nine months.

In the past six months, 169 doctors have reportedly left that country.

The situation apparently is serious enough in that the South African government has threatened to stop the emigration of professionals, especially doctors.

Those who have settled in Houston are reluctant to talk about why they left South Africa. However, one doctor did say that Houston was "put on the map" by the advertisements of local hospitals recruiting doctors in a South African medical journal.

The doctors did say that they left because of fear for their families with the South African political situation, opposition to the apartheid system and financial gain.

It is expected that even more South African doctors will be coming to the U.S. since 400 of them took the visa qualifying exam for U.S. emigration in Johannesburg in September.

Kenya To Buy Expatriate Farms

NAIROBI — Kenya is to receive money from Britain to help in buying farms owned by British citizens.

An agreement between the two countries was signed recently in Nairobi by the Kenyan Minister for Finance and Planning and the British High Commissioner.

Nigeria Finds More Oil

LAGOS — Oil has been found by the Nigerian National Petroleum Corporation in Cross River State in the east of the country. The corporation's exploration and production division found oil in four out of six wells drilled in the state.

Geological data is now being studied with a view to exploiting the discoveries. Nigeria is black Africa's largest oil producer.

Search For Mineral Wealth

GABORONE — Japanese geologists may soon be searching for mineral riches in Botswana. After a recent preparatory visit, the Japanese representatives returned to Tokyo saying that a team of geologists would be returning to start the work.

Botswana already has diamond and copper-nickel mines, while large deposits of coal have been discovered.

"Help Yourself"
Housing In Zambia

LUSAKA — The city council here has launched a "help yourself" scheme to upgrade the squatter townships in the capital. About three-quarters of the city's population of around 500,000 live in the townships.

The scheme, backed by the central government, includes the provision of piped water, roads, social amenities and sewage disposal. Under the scheme, the city council has set up a housing unit to help squatters build new and better homes.

They are given professional help and advice, have a say in the final decisions where communal services are sited and a loan to help buy building materials.

Introduction to the Advocate Program

By Johanna P. Brassard

This article is the first in a three part series examining a beneficial, active, yet little publicized organization on the University campus. The objectives of this series are to be informative and illustrative as to the organizational, functional and needful aspects of the program.

(The information for this week's article was graciously provided by Bob Winston, he Director of the Advocate Program.)

The Advocate Program (AP) is affiliated with the School of Education at the University through that school's Juvenile Justice Program. The administrative offices, a rec room and classrooms of the Advocate Program are located in a long, low, white clapboard building close to the school of Education — Montague House. Several members of the AP — including the Director Bob Winston and the Assistant Director Rich Bell — are currently involved in the basic repair and renovation of the house.

The AP began almost six years ago in 1972. It was one of several programs started in response to an idea of Jerome Miller, then the commissioner of the Department of Youth Services in the Commonwealth of Massachusetts. He felt that the incarceration of delinquent youths benefitted neither the youths nor society. The program of the University attempts to advocate adolescents rejected by society and dejected about themselves.

Montague House is primarily a day program, and is open from 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. five days a week.

However, the entire staff is on call twenty-four hours a day, seven days a week.

Up to thirty-one kids between the ages of fourteen and seventeen can be served by the AP. They are all from the Commonwealth and are referred to the program by the Departments of Public Welfare and Youth Services. Kids from every racial background are accepted, but it is difficult to avoid recruiting primarily white adolescents since most of the advocates available are white. There is a real need for the members of the Third World Community to offer their active support to the program.

Non-student families as well as undergraduate and graduate students of the University provide long term residential foster care for one adolescent. These advocates offer friendship, care, support and mature guidance to their ward for as long as the child is involved in the program, which is usually from six to eight months.

A brief outline of how certain adoelscents are admitted to the AP. The Departments of Public Welfare and Youth Services refer many court involved youths to Richard Bell, the Assistant Director of the AP. He and the Clinical Consultant review the individual case histories in order to find suitable candidates for the program. Interviews are arranged with candidates by them.

If a child is accepted by the staff, he or she goes to a pre-placement group home. This is a diagnostic and assessment center. The Pre-Placement staff and each youth evaluate the educational, medical and dental needs of the youth. They then draw up long term educational, vocational, discharge and living plans which also projects a termination date for the youths stay in the program.

After a short stay at the group home, each child is placed with an Advocate family or student, following the program outlined for them by the pre-placement staff. Each individual is also assigned a Field Supervisor, a person who works closely with the child and his-her advocate. During the first month of the child's stay, he is seen every day by this supervisor, who acts as a friend and counselor.

Administrative members, Advocates and kids work in conjunction for the good of the kids. These children have access to Valley and University educational, recreational and medical facilities. Most children attend a teen learning center at the AP - very few (approximately 10 per cent) of the kids attend Valley Public Schools. Athletic, cultural and recreational events are scheduled every day — with transportation provided by the AP itself or the child's advocate. A Recreational and Special Events coordinator is responsible for this entire area of the AP. Also, any child with severe emotional difficulties is referred by the Clinical Consultant to outside professional mental health facilities.

As important, as education and recreation, perhaps more, is the mental health of members in a society, although education and recreation do play in integral part in developing an individual's ability to cope with society. A primary component of this health is self-esteem, only gained through love, encouragement, and success in various endeavors. The Advocate Program provides delinquent youth with the spiritual support and physical facilities to develop that self-esteem.

After their stay children are sent either to their families of origin or to independent living situations. In both cases, the program monitors their re-integration into society for approximately two months. The staff is concerned that each individual will become a happy, coping, productive member of society.

Next week: A detailed overview of the administrative staff — Their duties and functions.

Open Birmingham trial in 1963 bombing

By Terry Cannon

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., Nov. 14 — For 14 years the murder of four little girls in the Klan bombing of the 16th St. Baptist Church here has haunted Birmingham and the country.

Today Robert E. Chambliss, Klansman and a one-time city mechanic, goes to trial for the bombing that ripped through the basement of the church on a Sunday morning in September, 1963.

"It was a real nightmare," recalls Sallye B. Davis, mother of Angela Davis and a lifelong resider Birmingham. "Here in a church, a place of safety, those lives where snuffed out."

Ms. Davis was a friend and co-worker of several of the parents whose children were killed or injured that day.

Previous Arrest

Chambliss was arrested shortly after the bombing occurred but was released for lack of evidence.

"People felt that the Klan was responsible," Ms. Davis told this reporter. "We talked about it through the years about how the guilty person was still free."

Chambliss is being defended by Art Hanes, Jr., a Birmingham lawyer, whose father, Art Hanes Sr., was mayor of Birmingham shortly before the bombing.

Hanes has remained tightlipped about what evidence he will produce in defense of his client.

The prosecutor will be Attorney General Bill Baxley, who is running for governor of Alabama.

"Some think Baxley brought the case to trial because he's running for office," commented Ms. Sallye Davis. "I admire him despite what his motives may be. The fact is that after all these years, the man is being tried.

Likely Witness

One of the witnesses for the prosecution may be FBI informant Gary Thomas Rowe.

Rowe, a Klansman involved in the 1965 shooting murder of civil rights worker Viola Liuzzo, escaped conviction by testifying against his co-defendents.

In 1975, Rowe testified before a Senate committee that the FBI failed to follow up on tips he gave them about Klan activities.

The 16th Street Baptist Church was a center for the movement led by the Rev. Martin Luther King, Jr., and the Rev. Fred Shuttlesworth during the early 60's.

"The Sunday of the bombing," Ms. Davis recalled, "the little girls were going to sing in the choir. They were in the basement putting on their robes when the bomb went off."

After 14 years the horror still lingers.

In a separate but related action, the head of the Georgia States Rights Party, J.B. Stoner, is being extradited in Birmingham for the bombing of Rev. Fred. Shuttlesworth's church during the same period.

Dynamite bombings of homes and churches in the area where Ms. Davis has lived since the 1940's were so common that the neighborhood became known as "Dynamite Hill."

"It got so I was afraid to go to sleep at night", Ms. Davis said. "We had to have guards out at night to protect the churches and homes of Black people in the area."

The Struggle Continues

On Thursday, November 17, 1977 Muhammed Akbar spoke here at UMass about racism in this country, and in South Africa. He spoke about what happened in the 1960's and 70's with the student movement. Akbar also dealt with the Civil Rights Movement in that time period in history. He focused on the role of the student movement during that era. Muhammed suggested to the students there that they should study the Student Non-violent Coordinating Committee in order to avoid making the same mistakes.

Brother Akbar told members of the South Africa Committee that what they did at UMass, (divestment of stocks in South Africa) was an important event in the South African Nationalist struggle for independence. He also suggested that they continue their current efforts.

On November 19, the Southern Africa Committee called for a demonstration in protest of what is going on in South Africa. Akbar also stayed and participated in this demonstration on the Amherst Commons calling for a U.S. embargo against South Africa.

U.S. drops pressure against Haiti's Duvalier

By Pieter Van Bennekom

PORT AU PRINCE, Haiti — American diplomats are apparently satisfied with the human rights progress made in Haiti over the past several months and have stopped pressuring President-for-Life Jean-Claude Duvalier to make even greater concessions.

They feel such pressure might be counter-productive at this moment and hope that Duvalier will, of his own accord, make further improvements in the lot of his mostly impoverished and illiterate five million citizens.

But the real question is whether the Haitians themselves will be content with just a little freedom and just a few human rights.

Jean-Claude, now 26, took over from his father, Francois "Papa Doc" Duvalier, in 1972 and has liberalized Haiti quite a bit since — with some not-so-subtle nudging from the U.S., especially since the Carter administration started its human rights campaign.

Gone, at least from the government payroll, are the Ton-Ton Macouttes, Papa Doc's private army and most of the other trappings of terror of his regime. Gone also are all of Haiti's political prisoners, at least the 104 surviving ones, released on the 20th anniversary of the Duvalier dynasty last September.

The publication of some anti-government political comment in the weekly Jeune Presse and elsewhere is being tolerated these days, even though the Inter-American Press Association still lists Haiti among those countries which do not have freedom of the press in the Western Hemisphere.

Strikes and unions still are illegal but some labor activity is getting results instead of brutal repression these days.

Faced with labor protests spilling over into street demonstrations and even the occasional occupation of a radio station to air complaints against employers, the Labor Ministry took the unusual step of announcing that it is open to receive complaints from workers against employers about abusive or illegal behavior.

It even got tough with some factories which had been flouting Haiti's labor laws by paying their employees less than the $1.20 day minimum wage, calling them "apprentices" and firing their entire labor force every two months to hire new "apprentices."

On the political front, the government is considering a plan to have mayors elected next year, although it is still an open question whether free municipal elections will be allowed or whether voters will be asked to approve by acclamation that candidate chosen by the ruling Duvalierist party.

But despite the liberalizations, Haiti, the poorest nation in the Western Hemisphere with an illiteracy rate of over 90 percent and a per capita annual income of only $120, remains an authoritarian society.

At the heart of that society is the institution of the presidency for life occupied by Jean-Claude, which stifles any possibility of the people deciding for themselves what kind of government they want.

The U.S., which has been helping to feed hungry peasants in Haiti for years with humanitarian aid, is not pushing Duvalier to abandon his lofty title of president-for-life, feeling that any pressure on that issue could be counter-productive.

"If we push him too far, he might get mad and fall back into repression," one American official said recently.

"We have to hope that of his own accord, he will make further liberalization in human rights. But we can't touch the institution of the presidency for life.

"The trick is to bypass that institution and get other reforms made so it doesn't matter any more, so the government will have to be responsive to the needs of the people, whether it is headed by a president-for-life or not," the diplomat said.

According to this school of thinking, if the government undertakes a genuine antipoverty program to bring health care and education to the poor and allows free labor activity, a free press and some form of elections for lesser officials, then it wouldn't matter whether Jean-Claude calls himself emperor or president-for-life.

Bobby Hutcherson and his Quartet

Bobby Hutcherson and Quartet — photo by Bari Njiiri

By Kevin Jones
Nummo News Staff

Black Classical musical history was again created last night at UMass, through the artistry of Bobby Hutcherson and his sidemen. The concert, presented in the Campus Center Auditorium on Sat., Nov. 19 was long. The two sets lasted from 8:00 until 11:00. You could tell the musicians were giving their all; the music and communication to the people was their primary objectives without any other extra frills.

The kind of music played was Black Classical in it's finest sense; As McCoy Tyner has phrased it, "Bobby Hutcherson is one of the greatest musicians in the world today." For those who could not be there, it was like showers of notes folding over you in relaxing waves. The notes from Bobby's vibes and marimba were sparkling and clear and fresh. Bobby's music is very understandable. Although an innovator, he plays within a certain tradition. For instance, some of the pieces played were old standards such as, "Star Eyes" by Parker, "Salt Peanuts" by Gillespie and other tunes by Thelonious Monk. Also included was "Little B's poem", an original by Bobby. "Little B" is also found on Bobby's newest album, Knucklebean. I have heard this album and it is fine.

Bobby's sidemen at this date were Michael Carvin on drums, Ron McClure on Bass, Ronnie Matthews on piano. Michael Carvin, from Houston, Texas, plays with power and sensitivity. You feel his strong personality coming out through the drums. His background includes an 8 year relationship with Bobby Hutcherson.

Ron McClure, originally from Hartford, has worked with Mike Knock, Hutcherson and Jor Henderson. His playing provided a strong rhythymic bass over which Bobby showered sharp popping tones. Ronnie Matthews, pianist, completes the quartet. He has worked with Woody Shaw, Dexter Gordon and others of similar magnitude.

These men, when questioned about musical philosophy, maintained a firm stance about the music being positively called "Black Classical." Beyond that, there are no attachments of philosophical elaboration. I gathered that what was important was the music itself, the immediacy of their performance.

Bobby Hutcherson, born in 1941, master of vibes and marimba, was raised in Southern California. He has an incredible resume of working with historical figures in our music. Since he came East in 1961, he has performed and recorded with, Masters such as Eric Dolphy, Archie Shepp, Hank Mobley, McLean, just to name a few. He is famous for his use of 4 mallets at a time and is also noted to be the first vibraphonist to play his instruent as if it were a drum. He stands immediately after Milt Jackson in line, in the legacy of Black Classical music.

Counterinsurgency in the Womb: Plot to Sterilize Poor Women

The Ford and Rockefeller foundations, the United States Agency for International Development and HEW, the Health Education and Welfare Department, are responsible for conducting a long standing mass sterilization campaign among women who comprise ethnic nationalities, the working class poor and women on welfare in the United States. Outside this country, women throughout the non-liberated areas of the Third World are made target for forced sterilization. On November 16th in New Africa House, the Committee To End Sterilization Abuse sponsored a multi-faceted informative and cultural presentation to re-emphasize to the communities of women on campus the imminent danger of coercive sterilization.

Standing before a banner demanding STOP FORCED STERILIZATION-ALTO A ESTERILIZACION FORZADA, Suman Bohm presented a background context for the evening's program. She analyzed the strategy of the bourgeoisie in its efforts to control the rate of reproduction within insurgent populations threatening corporate-U.S. imperial hegemony. Puerto Rico was referred to various times by the speakers because Puerto Rican women were targeted for this type of genocide— that is, two generations of women have been sterilized or 35 per cent of women of child bearing age. Most of these sterilizations have been conducted without a woman's consent and in 1965, an astounding 90 per cent of sterilizations were post-partum operations. In addition there is a master plan which specifies the optimal numbers for any specific labor force. Suman Bohm stated, "Sterilization is a racist and classist method of reducing the world's population.

It is imposed against women of the poorest and hardest working sectors who represent the greatest threat to capitalist power." She pointed out that rather than distribute resources and food, and rather than distribute social services, jobs and housing, capitalist interests want to continue to "Control money and power" and therefore will invade a woman's body making sterilization an "instrument of terror." She noted that at present in the U.S. 20 per cent of all married Black women are sterilized, three times more than in 1973. With less than a million remaining Native Americans, 25 per cent of the women have been sterilized. In total there are one and a half million women sterilized in this country, the majority of whom are poor. She concluded that intelligent birth control is part of the drive in a liberation struggle to emancipate women but that women themselves must take part in creating a total health service system that would include this. She also cited how in her home country

Tiger Mountain Cafe

The Asian American Students Association sponsored a spectacular event entitled Tiger Mountain Cafe, an Asian American coffeehouse on Saturday night, November 19. There were about 275 people packed into the 10th floor lounge of the Campus Center sharing music and poetry with some very talented Asian American artists. Not only was there music and poetry, but also a short film, a slide show, and political presentations by various activists from the Asian American community. The artists included Fay Chiang, a poet, Charlie Chin, a guitarist from New York's Basement Workshop, as well as local talent provided by Walter Lew from Hampshire College, Fred Houn and Michael Washington.

The political activists included Liz Young, who gave a brief presentation on the Young-Chin case, a representative from Asian Americans for Equality showing a slide show on the Chang police brutality case in New York's Chinatown, and Butch Wing, a representative of the Anti Bakke Decision Committee, showed a film on the Bakke demonstration held in San Francisco, where 4000 people came out in support on October 15. During a short break, there was some Asian refreshments, including sushi and Korean rice cake along with Jasmine tea. To close off the evening Avatar, an Asisn American jazz band, entertained the crowd. The six person group capped off a very intense evening for many of the participants.

Contraception Of Their Plan

My child
of many peoples,
my womb betrayed,
gutted by their hand,
is salted seed.

My child
of many peoples,
our broken homes
their science says,
like the salmon,
we won't make the river of jumps
or we'll forget the way, like we forget broken treaties like we forget smashed drums and lynched necks like we forget low wage pay feeding hunger.

My child
of many peoples, eyes free from scars
will see and harden, but remember land and woman are the jar that stores any change of season;
grow, learn and fight,
then with the planets in place deliver life.

Expect to see positive changes occur he said. South Africa is isolated from the rest of the world. The actions of the gov. right now is just a last attempt by a bankrupt regime he said. Right now there is an extraordinarily progressive era in South African policies.

Greg Williams of the American Friends Service Committee was in Southern Africa for the month of August. While there he met with liberation leaders President Kaunda of Zambia and Nyerere of Tanzania. Williams who also met with refugees who told him to go back and tell the people of the U.S. to put pressure on their government. We have nothing against the U.S. people they said, but in order for us to do our job in liberating our country, the people of the U.S. must tell their corporations to get out. The African people do not want to Africanize the present structure, with black faces in token positions Williams said but want to overthrow the whole system.

"The American government is you. It is you Americans who are the oppressors. It was the U.S. government who saved South African after the student rebellions said Nana Seehibe. She went on to say that it is better for us to die now than to prolong our pain by living in such an oppressive environment. America she said has a big say in the government of South Africa. By putting pressure on the U.S. gov. you are also putting pressure on the South African gov.

out that the whole purpose for the seats would be defeated.

Lutsky plans to appeal the decision of the court. "The court ignored the weight of the evidence which I feel was on my side" said Lutsky. "A miscarriage of justice occurred."

Members of the Third World caucus expressed the same sentiments. "I feel sure the decision was going to go the other way" said Senator Julie Hall. The prosecution had no witnesses and did very little cross examination.

All of the Third World senators present felt that the lack of Third World representation on the jury might have been a big factor in the final decision.

Members of the caucus plan to stand by their definition. They made these sentiments clear in a written statement to the senate. "We reserve the right to define ourselves and our constituency."

of India, to fulfill quotas, trucks have gone through the streets of a village picking up all in sight. In one specific incident not only were young women sterilized who had never married or had had children, but some people were sterilized for a second time. Following receptive applause to this presentation, she introduced a dance artist from India.

Rohini Bhate from Poona-Maharastra performed dances related to the ancient mythology of her country. She wore a bright orange sari with a gold-flowered purple panel falling vertically to her bare feet. Rohini Bhate explained intermittently between dances the meaning of her movements, the chants, the music and instruments — all of which brought the ancient lore to life. She danced out the dialogues of dieties. At times her movements were so slight, created by a many-year dedication to her art. These slightest of movements, usually the eyes dancing, preceded vocalizing and syncopation between the flowing movements of her arms and the faster rhythmic sequences from foot work. Anklets of bells and audible bracelets answered her dance. At times her bare feet would slap the surface of the floor to create yet another accent to the music. Whether explaining carefully or dancing in service to her art and traditions — Shiva and Vishnu, the story of the bee caught within the petals of a lotus flower — her translations and interpretations by way of Indian classic dance forms were very readable and very much appreciated.

Helen Rodriguez, a founding member of CESA and also a pediatrician who did clinical work in Puerto Rico in the 1960's, introduced a detailed exposition of the purposes and extensiveness of sterilization with the warning, "We are witnessing a time of repression and regression. What we gained in the 60's is being set back." She was referring to specific women's rights won primarily through the efforts of poor and working women like health care services which provided information concerning contraception to women, which provided pre-natal and post-partum care for women from clinics stressing education, and which won legalized abortion. Abortion has always been available to the rich. Now funding is being withdrawn from clinics that provide abortions and instead allocations are being directed toward sterilization programs. So in fact the powers that control the purse strings of agencies that were organized to distribute health services to poor and working women or women on welfare, have negated libralizing legislation because of the cessation of funding for free or low cost abortions.

Women want safe contraceptives and free abortions — legal and medically safe. The bourgeoisie wants to take our money — public funds — and apply it to a sterilization campaign that has been underway since the turn of the century. Rodriguez told how a doctor in 1880 had sterilized 400 women after appraising their state of "inferiority." Because of eugenics laws on the books in 27 states, between 1909 and 1964, "inferiors" inside and outside institutions have been sterilized — over 64,000.

She was particularly emphatic when she revealed how HEW has advocated hysterectomies (removal of uterus) with all its complications and after effects over salpingectomies (removal of fallopian tube) or laproscopic tubal ligations. She noted that there are more hysterectomies being performed than appendectomies making it the most frequent operation in this country, or four times as many than in Sweden and twice as many as in England.

Besides documenting the expenditures for sterilization among Black, Brown, poor and low wage working women from the Rockefeller and Ford foundations ($20 million in 1968), A.I.D., and HEW, Rodriguez described a recent victory by women who are willing to fight against these monied racist forces. Women's and political organizations have unified to the degree that they made New York State legislate informed consent stipulations which can cut down on sterilization abuse. She urged that HEW be subjected to a public campaign which would demand that they provide-informed consent information and a 30 day waiting period to guarantee before a sterilization operation. She also urged that hysterectomies be curbed. She stressed that any Congressional legislation would have to include protection of young women by stipulating that only women over 21 years old can be sterilized and to provide explanatory literature to women to be sterilized in the language that they speak. Sterilizations cannot be allowed when a woman is coming out from under anesthesia for childbirth or under treatment for other medical conditions. She urged women to take part in this campaign noting that HEW has a current budget of $250 million to continue its abusive and brutal sterilization program. Women and men in the audience appreciated this evening bringing into the community guests with information that can raise the level of awareness on this issue of sterilization to the point that such powerful outlaw agencies as those described will be forced to curtail genocidic sterilization. The dance too by Rohini Bhate conveyed a cultural aspect to a very long struggle for societal liberation that women have participated in alongside their brothers.

Good Mothering Through Breastfeeding

"Childbirth for the Joy of It", "Prepartion for Breastfeeding", "Great Expectations" and "Talking About Breastfeeding" are four great films to be presented by the La Leche League of Northampton at a special film night. The Film Night is planned for 7:30 p.m. Thursday, December 1, 1977 at the People's Institute, 38 Gothic Street, Northampton.

La Leche League is a nonsectarian, nonprofit organization dedicated to "Good mothering through breastfeeding."

Donation on Film Night will be $1.00 per person or $1.75 per couple. Refreshments will be served and a discussion with local LLL leaders will follow.

These films provide an insightful look into the various aspects of childbirth, nutrition, and breastfeeding. This series of films should be of particular interest to parents, prospective parents, students, and members of the health care community.

For more information contact Sherry Tatro, 16 Myrtle Street, or Meg Simon, 24A Summer St., both of Northampton.

Calypso's Search for the Britannic

The never-before-told full story of the mysterious World War I sinking of the British hospital ship Britannic—bigger and mightier than her sister ship Titanic and the greatest seagoing passenger luxury liner ever built until the Queen Mary—will be revealed by Capt. Jacques Cousteau on 'CALYPSO'S SEARCH FOR THE BRITANNIC,' the first 'The Cousteau Odyssey' special to be broadcast over PBS this season, Tuesday, Nov. 22.

A program highlight is the reunion of 86-year-old great-grandmother Sheila Macbeth Mitchell with the remains of the Britannic as it lies today at the bottom of the Aegean Sea. Mrs. Mitchell was a 26-year-old volunteer nurse when the Britannic was struck and sank on November 21, 1916.

Invited by Cousteau to view the liner's rusted, encrusted hull some 60 years later, Mrs. Mitchell flew to Athens, Greece, from her home in Edinburgh, Scotland, and from there went on to join the Calypso team in the Aegean Sea. She travelled to the bottom of the Aegean in the Cousteau Society's diving saucer to view the Britannic in its watery grave.

Mrs. Mitchell recalls what life was like on the Britannic right through to the dramatic moments after the ship was struck and provides her reactions to once again seeing the great ship on which she had served.

The Britannic had been pressed into service as a hospital ship by the British during the First World War. Whether it sank because it struck a mine or was torpedoed was never known until Cousteau and the crew and divers of Calypso discovered and explored the Aegean Sea site where the Britannic lies.

Originally built as a luxury passenger liner, Britannic was repainted for its service as a hospital ship. The entire ship was painted white, with a deep horizontal green stripe and huge red crosses on her sides to clearly identify her for what she was. She had made five safe journeys through submarine and mine-infested seas, transporting 15,000 maimed and wounded British troops back to England.

LUCILLE BALL SPECIAL

Lucille Ball, one of television's premiere comediennes, is reunited with familiar sidekicks Gale Gordon and Vivian Vance (right in photo) and the trio is joined by guest stars Ed McMahon and Steve Allen for 'The Lucille Ball Special' to be broadcast on CBS-TV Monday, Nov. 21.

In the comedy-drama, Lucy Whittaker (Miss Ball) makes a telephone call to the President, invites him to dinner and causes a comedic commotion to erupt in her small-town neighborhood. The mood is thus set for an hour of laughter, from one-line repartee to farce to slapstick—and a 'surprise ending.'

McMahon guest stars as Lucy's husband and the proprietor of the local bowling alley. Allen appears as himself. Gordon is Lucy's doughty father-in-law and Miss Vance is her best friend and neighbor. Mary Wickes portrays Aunt Millie and Mary Jane Croft is seen as Midge Bowser, wife of the town's mayor, played by James E. Brodhead.

HAPPY DAYS

As a gag, some snobbish characters invite Fonzie to a high society party and—although the Fonz doesn't fit in—they learn something about class in ABC-TV's 'Happy Days,' Tuesday, Nov. 22.

In 'My Fair Fonzie,' the Fonz meets pretty socialite Cynthia Holmes. When her snooty brother Millard sees Fonzie in all his leather-jacketed splendor, he thinks it would be a lark to invite him to the yacht club party. Richie and Lori Beth are also invited and join the Cunninghams in giving the Fonz a crash course in etiquette.

Ron Howard stars as Richie and Henry Winkler as Fonzie (in photo). Guest-starring are Lynda Goodfriend as Lori Beth and Sam Freed as Millard.

FAMILY PLOT

Alfred Hitchcock's latest thriller 'Family Plot' premieres Nov. 26 on 'NBC Saturday Night at the Movies.'

The master of suspense's 1976 film follows the dangerous exploits of a shady medium and her boyfriend (Barbara Harris and Bruce Dern, in photo) searching for the missing heir of an aged, wealthy woman (Cathleen Nesbitt). What the pair doesn't know is that the object of their quarry is a cool jewelry merchant (William Devane) who, with his alluring mistress (Karen Black), engages in a sinister sideline—kidnapping and gem smuggling. What they also don't know is that the jeweler suspects that someone is tracking him down and is plotting to eliminate his pursuers.

Ed Lauter, Katherine Helmond, William Prince and Marge Redmond are featured.

Directories won't show until end of semester

By BRAD GOVERMAN
Collegian Staff

Student telephone directories, printed with $2,500 in student funds, may not be ready for distribution for another "two or three weeks minimum," according to David Coburn, staff assistant in the UMass office of Production Design Services.

Delivery of the books, usually distributed in October, has been delayed for the last two years by what administrators claim are computer malfunctions. The soft-cover directories include listings of all available addresses and phone numbers of undergraduates and graduate students.

Because of this year's computer failure, an accurate computer readout of where people live was delayed for a month until the housing problem was finally settled, according to Jay Martus, administrative assistant from the UMass Office of Residential Resource Management.

Martus said the decision to hold off printing the directories until housing overcrowding could be settled was made by Robert Campbell, acting director of the Office of Residential Resource Management, for "reasons of accuracy." Campbell, on vacation for two weeks, was unavailable for comment last night.

Although an accurate address printout is now available, the directory is being held up in the Campus Production Design Services office for technical reasons, according to UMass Production Specialist Walter Saunders.

Saunders said he just started working on the physical layout of the directory and could not anticipate when the job would be completed or when the printer could schedule a date for the directory to be printed.

Saunders said some of the pages were too light to be photographed for printing and may have to be done over again.

When asked if Coburn's two to three week estimate was accurate he said, "It's better than nothing." He did not elaborate further.

According to Martus, this year's computer malfunction can be traced to programming.

Martus said a program was designed to fill all dorm rooms and allow for an overflow of 500 students.

According to Martus, the computer program lost the 500 extra students when the tape stopped running and belched the overflow onto another tape. The overflow tape was not discovered until after all rooms were assigned, he said.

This same computer goof-up resulted in the housing crisis which left 400 of these students without dormitory room assignments.

Martus, who worked alone on the directory project, said he managed a couple of improvements this year.

Martus said enough directories will be published this year to supply one for each student instead of one per room as was done in past years. Copies will also be available for commuters in the Campus Center Store at cost, which is unknown at this time.

As for next year, Martus said he is investigating the possibility of merging the student directory with the staff and faculty directory. Martus said the cost for such a project could be offset by advertising, a system other schools have used quite successfully.

Arabs blast Sadat's visit

BEIRUT, Lebanon (UPI) — The lashing Arab denunication of Egypt President Anwar Sadat's visit to Israel threatened a major shift yesterday in alliances in the volatile Middle East.

Syria, Libya, Algeria, Iraq and Palestinan leaders branded Sadat as a traitor and joined initial moves toward a wide Arab "rejection front" to counter Sadat and lay down tough conditions for any peace settlement.

There were a few words of praise for Sadat. Sudan declared its support of the pace trip and said Sadat has not deviated from the "principles of the Arab struggle."

Libya, a longtime advocate of the "rejection front" which rejects any dealings with Israel, dispatched Prime Minister Abdel Salam Jalloud first to Damascus for talks with Syrian President Hafez Assad and then to Iraq today for further consultations.

A spokesman for the Palestine Liberation Organization repeated calls for an urgent summit meeting grouping the PLO, Syria, Iraq, Libya, Algeria and Marxist South

Sadat, Menshe say 'end the war'

JERUSALEM [UPI] — Egyptian President Anwar Sadat and Israeli Prime Minister Menahe Begin announced a momentous agreement yesterday that there would be "no more war, no more bloodshed, no more threats" between the two nations.

The unwritten non-belligerence pact was disclosed in separate statements by the two leaders near the end of Sadat's historic first visit to Israel by an Arab leader.

The two men whose countries have fought four wars in 29 years also agreed to try to work out a permanent Middle East peace settlement through negotiations in Geneva although most of the Arab world rejected Sadat's mission of peace.

Sadat, who referred to Begin as "my friend", ended his visit at 4:13 p.m. (9:13 a.m. EDT) when his private Boeing 707 jet took off from Ben-Gurion airport for Egypt, escorted part of the way by Israeli-made Kfir C-2 fighters.

Egyptian MIGs picked up his flight and he arrived in Cairo to a tumultous reception by millions of Egyptians. He drove from the airport to his home in an open car past the cheering throngs despite threats by a fanatical Syrian Palestinian group to assassinate him.

Sadat, 58, and Begin, 64, at a joint news conference and later through formal statements expressed their willingness to negotiate a final peace despite outstanding problems.

There were pledges of security, but there was no mention of the two demands Sadat made Sunday in his history-making speech before the Israeli Knesset — total withdrawal by the Israelis from all land occupied in the 1967 Six Day War and the establishment of a Palestinian state on the West Bank of Jordan.

"We have decided no more war between our nations," Begin said at the home of President Ephraim Katzir, with Sadat seated by his side.

"We shall have no more wars between us," Sadat said, Begin at his side.

"We shall establish peace and we shall live in peace," said Begin, whose election as a hardline prime minister sparked fears of a fifth Middle East war. "We have outstanding problems. We shall solve them through negotiations as great civilized ancient nations should do."

"Let us hope that God may guide our steps to peace and security," said Sadat, who joined with Syria to launch the 1973 Yom Kippur war in an effort to regain the lost territories. "I agree it should be our slogan — security for you, security for us without interference from any other side."

Begin had made an equally dramatic statement earlier when, with Sadat again by his side, he told a joint news conference in the Knesset of their mutual non-belligerency pact:

"During the visit of President Sadat to our country and to Jerusalem, a momentous agreement was achieved already. Namely, no more war, no more bloodshed, no more threats and collaboration in order to avoid any lengths which may lead to such tragic developments."

Begin referred to his five-minute message broadcast direct to the Egyptian people Nov. 11 in which he appealed to an end to war and said, "that mutual pledge was given in Jerusalem. And we are very grateful to President Sadat that he said so from the platform of the Knesset, personally to me and today again to my colleagues in parliament.

"It is a great moral achievement — for our nations, for the Middle East, indeed for the whole world."

Amhersı town budget reductions called

By DAVE GRAM
Collegian Staff

Town Manager A. Louis Hayward last night called for across-the-board departmental budget cuts of five per cent so the town can meet financial obligations and maintain level funding for fiscal 1979.

In a letter to the Board of Selectman, Hayward said "The Town's financial prospects for the coming year reflect little or no growth in revenues. On the other hand, we have known contractual obligations which will by themselves cause an increase in the Town's operating budget." Hayward went on to call for "a more efficient service delivery system and a critical examination of value of each program" to the town.

When Hayward specifically asked the Board of Selectmen to reduce its expenditures in such areas as telephone and postage costs, he met with some protest from board members Diana Romer and Nancy Eddy. They called the reduction proposals "unrealistic."

In other business, the Selectmen discussed last week's Town Meeting vote to test for water in Lawrence Swamp. Town Manager Hayward called for the establishment of "a technical advisory board" to assist in planning the testing and use of the swamp's water. After some discussion, the Selectmen voted to give the consulting engineers Tighe and Bond the go-ahead to begin testing, assuring that the technical advisory board, once established, would assist in planning for the swamp.

The Selectmen then adjourned to a work session with the Town Finance Commission and Planning Board. Hayward introduced his Town Manager's report of recommended capital improvements for fiscal years 1979 through 1983. Hayward said over the next five years, the town would need, among other things, two new police cruisers, two new ambulances, new trucks and tractors for the public works department and a new roof for the Town Hall. No vote was taken since this portion of the meeting was purely an informational session.

Board Member Nancy Eddy brought to the attention of the Selectmen a letter from Gov. Michael S. Dukakis dealing with local concerns about Chapter 766 expenditures. Chapter 766 is the state law requiring local school districts to take responsibility for the education of children with sppcial needs.

The governor summed up his report by saying that his administration "recognizes that the local school should be the funding agency only as a last resort". He said that the state will closely with local and federal officials to assure that all possible sources of revenue for Chapter 766 cases are identified and utilized.

Advantages of having dorm leases presented

By JANIS FINSTEIN
Collegian Staff

A representative from the Residential Lease Task Force discussed the advantages of having a lease to protect tenants of UMass.

The representative, David Barenburg, said that dorm damages may take all semester to fix and nothing can be done. He also said it was unfair for rents to be raised without any improvements in dorm conditions. With the attainment of a lease, he said, these and other things will be better dealt with.

Presently the Student Senate is in favor of a lease and at their next meeting will be receiving a packet containing the proposal for the lease. They will be discussing it with each house council in order to get feedback and to find out problems in the dorms.

Each Sylvan Area Government member received a proposal for the lease and a questionnaire on dorm problems. There will be further discussion on the lease at the next meeting, which will be held on Wednesday, Nov. 30.

In other business, Sylvan Area Government members voted to form a hiring committee to select two judges from the Sylvan area to be on the Student Judiciary. One of the judges will be a woman and the other a man. Neither of them will be seniors.

Six cars vandalized

By MATHEW KOVARY
Collegian Staff

Six cars were vandalized on campus last week, according to campus police.

In an unusual incident, a "jogger" was reported to have trampled the hood of a '71 Ford Pinto early Sunday morning while parked in lot 62, Debra Jones, the owner of the car, said.

"There were jogger footprints all over the hood of my car," Jones said, "and my left front fender was dented."

Other than the footprints, the police have no leads in the case.

Police are now looking for two stolen cars. A '59 VW Sedan belonging to Michael Reardon was stolen last week from the parking lot in the Fraternity-Sorority Park, police said.

Another car, a '73 Ford Mustang belonging to Cheryll Erickson was stolen Sunday from lot 65 behind Stockbridge Hall. The car was valued at $1,000, police said.

In other news, a Ford LTD, parked in lot 44, was stripped of two tires and two wheels Friday night, police said. The car belongs to Robert Palmer of 603 Cashin.

In a similar incident, two tires, two wheels and a car battery were stolen last weekend from a Mercury Cougar while it was parked in lot 49, behind Butterfield. The car belongs to Chris Cakkinias of 315 Greenough.

Police apprehended a 17-year-old male last weekend, believed to have vandalized a '66 Ford Mustang parked in lot 25. Police said they caught the youth with $175 worth of automobile parts.

In another crime, an antique diamond ring, valued at $700, was taken from 314 Wheeler while the room door was unlocked, police said. The ring belonged to Nancy Greeley.

5-Colleges receives $1 million endowment

By KAREN PARMENTER
Collegian Staff

Santa Claus arrived a little early this year for Five Colleges, Inc., thanks to a gift from a 1912 Smith College graduate. Five Colleges has received a endowment which could total one million dollars.

According to Five College Coordinator E. Jefferson Murphy, the bequest was made by Grace N. Niel, who died in August. The money was part of a trust fund set up the late James E. McNeil for his daughters, of which Ms. McNeil was the last survivor. An equal amount of money was left to Smith College by McNeil.

As outlined in the gift, only the income from the funds may be used by Five Colleges, between $40,000 and $50,000 said Murphy. He also said the funds can only be used to bring in visitng faculty to the Five Colleges: Smith, Amherst, Hampshire, Mount Holyoke and UMass. Murphy said specific plans have not yet been made for the money.

In addition, Five Coleeges has received a $150,000 matching grant from the Carnegie Foundation of New York, said Murphy. He said the Five Colleges had applied for the grant several months before news was received of the bequest, and that part of the funds will be used to match the Carnegie grant.

The coordinator said part of the grant money will go towards expanding coordination among the Five Colleges in several areas, including anthropology, linguistics, theater and some foreign language departments.

Murphy said although the exact total of the bequest is not known, the stocks and bonds which make up the bulk of the fund are worth approximately $900,000. Murphy estimated the remainder of Ms. McNeil's estate, the exact value of which will not be known until spring, is expected to bring the total to roughly one million dollars.

The stocks are currently being held by Boston Safe Deposit and Trust Co., said Murphy. The company will retain control of the stocks until this spring, and, once the value of the entire estate has been determined, can be turned over to Five Colleges.

"Also discussed was a move for an Arab mini-summit to combat the liquidative U.S.Zionist solution for (a settlement through) Arab submission," Damascus Radio said.

Hours before Sadat landed in Israel Saturday the PLO rejected in advance any peace accord or plan that might come out of the visit.

Radio Damascus indicated a wide hardline alliance would demand at a minimum the total Israeli withdrawal from occupied Arab lands and establishment of an independent Palestinian state without preconditions. Such a hardline alliance has been a longtime dream by such nations as Iraq and Libya.

Radical Arab moves to form a wide, hardline front have been hampered in the past by Syria's steering of a middle road between moderation and rejection. Syria is a key "confrontation state" bordering Israel, and was Egypt's ally in the 1973 war.

Sadat, in his address to the Israeli parliament Sunday, also called for Israeli withdrawal and a Palestinian state. But Syria, the PLO and the Arab radicals dismissed the calls as window dressing aimed at mollifying the storm of Arab attacks on the Sadat visit.

Linguist says the mind molds language

By BETH SEGERS
Collegian Staff

Language has infinite communication possibilities, but is molded by the finite structure of the mind, according to a prominent linguist.

Dr. Barbara H. Partee, UMass linguistics professor, made her remarks to a crowd of 250 people at a Chancellor's Lecture Series talk in the Campus Center Auditorium entitled "Logic, Language, and the Mind."

The Chancellor's Lecture Series, founded in 1974, recognizes distinguished members of the UMass faculty who "transcend the usual boundaries of academic disciplines," according to Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery.

Partee's address was the second of four lectures scheduled for the 1977-78 academic year.

Partee, a linguistics professor here since 1973, received her doctorate at Massachusetts Institute of Technology in 1965. She later joined the faculty of the Linguistics Department at the University of California at Los Angeles. Recent accomplishments include her appointment last year as a visiting fellow at the Center for Advanced Study in the Behaviorial Sciences at Stanford, California.

Emphasis in the lecture on linguistics reflected Partee's academic career. "As an undergraduate, I loved math and language but didn't see any relation between the two until I studied linguistics."

Her lecture centered around the goal of relating the structure of language to the structure of the mind through the study of logic and linguistics.

Maintaining that there are no primitive languages, Partee said that all languages are equally complex structurally, and able to express complex ideas. Because of the mass communication influence and cultural assimilation, new words are added as the need arises, she said.

"We are constantly producing and understanding sentences never heard before," Partee said. The infinite characteristics of language are contrasted by the mind, which imposes a finite set of rules to determine what sentences are to be used.

Partee supported her statements with a translation of English into "standard logic" in an effort to synthesize the work already done by two authorities in the field, Chomsky and Montague. She also spoke of an interdepartmental seminar at UMass called "Language and Information Processing Seminar".

Michael A. Arbib, professor of Computer and Information Sciences, and a member of LIPS, said the two-year-old seminar program combines the study of linguistics, psychology and computer sciences to show the interdependence of the subjects and how they relate to one another.

Arbib, referring to Partee's lecture last night said, "I've been to several of these Chancellor's Lectures Series through the years and I really think it was the best."

6,000 killed in cyclone, tidal wave in India

NEW DELHI, India (UPI) — India's national news agency yesterday reported more than 6,000 persons were killed by a cyclone and tidal wave that smashed the southern Indian state of Andhra Pradesh, washing entire villages out to sea.

The tropical cyclone — the equivalent of a hurricane or typhoon — roared in off the Bay of Bengal and raked the coastal area north of Madras with winds of 60 to 90 mph Saturday night and Sunday. It was followed Sunday by a devastating tidal wave.

The state-run Samachar news agency said more than 100,000 persons were left homeless by the one-two punch of the natural disasters, reportedly the worst ever to hit the southeast India region.

Officials said the tidal wave alone may have drowned several thousands of villagers because it apparently washed away as many as 10 villages and swept the inhabitants into the storm-tossed Bay of Bengal.

"The cyclone left more than 100,000 persons homeless," Samachar said. "It tore tin roofs from shacks and demolished thousands of thatched huts occupied by fishermen and other residents along the coast in Andhra Pradesh state, north of Madras."

Samachar said the death toll was official but did not give any further details.

Rescue helicopters dropped food packets where possible to those marooned by the disasters, but officials said many areas had not been reached by the relief efforts.

Top state officials flew over some of the badly hit areas yesterday and reported the storm was the worst in the history of the region.

Whole villages were reported under water with sheets of asbestos and tin roofing floating alongside furniture and other objects from demolished houses. Vast areas of rice fields were reported flooded.

Hardest hit was Guntur City, about 250 miles north of the state capital of Madras, where a newspaper said 628 persons were killed.

CARE officals in charge of relief work in Guntur City said more than 1,500 persons were killed there and 100,000 left homeless.

The weekend cyclone was the second to hit south India in 10 days. A cyclone earlier smashed into Tamil Nadu state to the south, killing more than 400 persons.

Play-off game presents difficulties for students

By MARK HORAN
Collegian Staff

Students planning to attend the UMass football playoff game against Lehigh Saturday face two obstacles: finding places to sleep and finding an extra $2 for admission.

UMass students usually need only their student I.D.'s for admission to UMass games because they pay an athletic fee in their tuition bills.

Student government representatives this week have been working to change both problems. Undergraduate Student Senate co-President Jon Hite yesterday said he is working with University administrators in an attempt to open dorms on Saturday at noon and to also have the admission fee waived for UMass students.

Dormitories have been scheduled to close Wednesday night and reopen Sunday at noon.

Hite said students who have academic or employment reasons for staying in dorms can stay if they speak with their heads of residences.

Vice-Chancellor for Student Affairs Robert L. Woodbury yesterday said the dormitory problem is an "area issue" that is being worked out by residential area directors.

"I would not be opposed to early openings," said Woodbury.

Central Area Associate Director William Taylor yesterday said he does not want to open the dorms early because he is concerned about his staff.

"It has been a difficult semester and the staff is exhausted," Taylor said. "I am concerned that the staff gets a rest. I don't want to lose good people."

Area directors are meeting this morning to try to work out a policy for the weekend, according to Sally Freeman, director of the Community Development Center, which is responsible for residence hall personnel.

"I have no definite position right now," Freeman said. "I want to get a look at what the whole situation looks like."

Athletic Director Frank McInerney said he has no idea what effect the residence hall policy will have on attendance at the game.

"There are so many variables involved," McInerney said, noting plans for the long holiday weekend and the weather as factors which may determine a student's decision to attend the game.

He did say however, that advance ticket sales may be affected by a University decision on opening the dorms a day early or keeping them closed.

Students "may wait until the last minute" to buy tickets, McInerney said.

Hite contends students should not have to pay admission because the game should be defined as a University event. Hite said he feels the gate receipts will only benefit a certain number of students.

Hite explained that gate receipts and television money from the game will be placed in one general fund for Division II playoff participants. The money is then redistributed to the participants and the money will go into the Barber Scholarship Fund, which is for the limited athletic scholarships given at UMass, Hite said.

Hite said he would take the matter to the Provost's Office because the Athletic Department is under the vice-chancellor of Academic Affairs.

"Admission should not be charged of students because they pay for the stadium. Students pay $8 in their athletic fee to support the stadium," Hite said. "Students should not be charged for a University event."

McInerney said the University has no control over the admission fee because it is a National Collegiate Athletic Association event.

Attorney appointed to Board of Trustees

By GAYLE YOUNG
Collegian Staff

Gov. Michael S. Dukakis has appointed James B. Krumsiek, a Long Meadow attorney, to the University Board of Trustees. Krumsiek will replace former trustee Carolyn Rowlands, who resigned last month protesting what she says is the Governors control of the board.

Krumsiek's appointment will make a majority of the board Dukakis appointees. He will be the second representative from the western part of the state. One of Rowland's accusations when she resigned was that the Governor was not appointing enough trustees from the Amherst area.

Krumsiek, 41, graduated from Amherst College in 1958 and Boston College Law School in 1967. He was admitted to the Mass. bar in 1967 and is a practicing attorney of labor law.

From 1974 to 1975 Krumsiek served by appointment on the Long Meadow school committee and has been a trustee at the American International College since 1976.

The Governor received Krumsiek's nomination from the Mass. Department of Education. He met with Dukakis for an hour last Monday and was informed of his appointment the following day.

"He impressed us as a bright, capable attorney who had an interest in public service and the willingness to contribute to the University," said Richard Ames, a spokesman for the education department.

Krumsiek told the Collegian in a telephone interview last night that he could not yet comment on his predecessor, Carolyn Rowland's reasons for resigning because he has not yet served on the board.

"The board is independent in name," said Krumsiek, "and I hope that it would be independent in practice." Krumsiek also said he was coming onto the board "with a totally open mind."

Whether I am one of the governor's majority will not be an influence on how I think or vote," said Krumsiek. "I will of course listen to the governor but that will not control my vote. I will base my decisions on available information and will make the best judgement I am able."

Krumsiek, who has not yet been sworn in, will be present at next month's board meeting.

Dukakis is still in the process of appointing another trustee to take the place of Catherine Clark, who died early last week.

Chomo-Uri provides women's perspective

By MARCIA MURPHY
Collegian Staff

Chomo-Uri is a multi-arts magazine offering readers a chance to read about "women's perspectives on a changing society," according to its creators.

Chomo-Uri, a non-profit publication, was founded at UMass in March 1974 by the coordinators of a feminist's art program at the University.

Grants from the National Endowment for Arts and the Mass. Council on Arts and Humanities fund the magazine, which costs $1.50 per issue and is published three times yearly, in February, June, and Sept.

Women who submit work to Chomo-Uri are "looking for a publication outlet and want to share their material," said Annette Townley of the Chomo-Uri staff.

Townley said the 150-200 women who submit material for each issue are mostly graduates with experience in their art, but undergraduate submissions are welcome.

Chomo-Uri, meaning "Mother of the Turquoise Pearl," "is the Tibetan name of the world's highest mountain which the English named after a man — Mt. Everest," according to Townley.

Townely said seven volunteers decide which submissions to publish and work collectively to print Chomo-Uri.

"Science Fiction and Other Fantasies" and "Women and the Law" will be future special editions of Chomo-Uri.

Work not published in Chomo-Uri is returned to the owner with suggestions for improvement.

Chromo-Uri is sold at the University Store and is available, to buy or borrow, at Everywoman's Center in Goodell Hall.

Documents show FBI planted anti-war campaign

WASHINGTON(AP) - The FBI once considered installing its own man as imperial wizard of the Klu Klux Klan, and the agency wrote and published a fake "student" newspaper in waging a campaign to discredit anti-war leaders, according to documents released yesterday.

The FBI plans were revealed in painstaking detail yesterday when the agency released its voluminous counterintelligence file showing the use of thefts and dirty tricks to harass political groups.

The so-called COINTELPRO files, 53,000 pages filling three cabinets, showed the questionable tactics employed by the FBI to discredit student activists and organized political groups.

Much of the material previously was made public, but the complete files released at the J. Edgar Hoover Building showed the scope of questionable counterintelligence tactics, many used against persons and groups never accused of criminal activities.

The 15-year campaign of political harrassment was suspended by the FBI six years ago but the bureau still classified 15,000 pages as secret.

It took four years to edit the COINTELPRO files and prepare them for release. An FBI spokesman said his "wild guess," was that it cost $100,000 to comply with the Freedom of Information queries that opened the files.

One document revealed the reliance on stereotypes by a San Francisco FBI agent who disparaged blacks in a crudely worded memo explaining the difficulty in harassing black activists.

The Southwest Men's Center is "a place to explore sex roles in American contemporary society ... to see just what these sex roles have done to us," Scott McKearney said, a counselor-coordinator at the organization.

The SW Men's Center, John F. Kennedy dormitory, facilitates workshops, provides free counselling, and initiates colloquia on men's issues offered in the Southwest area.

McKearney, along with Scott Weston, counsels and organizes workshops, while a third staff member, Frank Dorman, heads the colloquia and "comes up with new ideas."

The Men's Center also has a steering committee of approximately nine men.

Dorman, head of residence for JFK upper, said the Men's Center's purpose is "to help men lean on each other." He added, "For too long, men have looked to women for support."

Weston said the Men's Center is "not a footnote to women's issues. It teaches you to love yourself, and about what commonalities men have."

McKearney said "there is a whole lot that stands between men." The Men's Center acts as "an alternative to go to when something tragic has happened," said Weston.

Weston said there are presently seven discussion groups, and he describes them as "open, supportive, and talkative."

He adds, "They're a valuable place to take personal issues and even good feelings." The center promotes "Openness and the guts to cry."

Dorman said it helped build, "the guts to show weakness."

Weston said a variety of topics are discussed at these groups, and recently two particular popular subjects have been separation and divorce. He recently facilitated a support group involving men 35 to 40 years old, most of them in administrative positions at UMass. Weston said, "They brought a lot to the group — varied life experiences." He said many of them were divorced or separated.

"There's a stigma to being alone in our society. Men are learning it's possible to be alone or to be with other men," Weston said.

Another common issue often discussed at these groups is competition among males in today's society. "The competitive nature has been limited to competition for men until recently. The question is constantly asked, 'Are we going to win or lose?' " Dorman said.

Weston said, "Relationships with men are often loose relationships."

Men must often hide their feelings of anger behind the macho roles they are expected to play, he said.

He said he wants to initiate support groups in apartment complexes because he believes the Men's Center "should reach out into the community."

He added, "I think it would be important and helpful there to develop an interest" in men's issues in order to alleviate feelings of alienation often linked with living in such areas.

Workshops sponsored by the Men's Center have been run about 150 times this year. Many of these workshops, Weston explained, feature a film followed by a discussion.

Two movies commonly shown are "Men's Lives," a documentary describing the social conditions which males undergo in this society from boyhood to old age; and "A Man," a film about the difficulty most men have in expression emotion and affection.

Weston said the Men's Center has cooperated with the Alcohol Education Project at UMass and has sponsored workshops concerning sexism and alcoholism.

"One of the questions we try to answer at these workshops is: Why is alcohol a necessary routine?" Weston said.

McKearney said, "When you are drunk, you can be silly or sad ... it's cool to cry."

Dorman added many people regard alcohol as a "safety valve."

The Men's Center advertises its workshops, support groups, and colloquia through the Collegian and area publications, such as the Southwest Newsletter.

Vaccine for pneumonia newly cleared by FDA

WASHINGTON [UPI] — A vaccine effective against the most common types of pneumonia — the nation's fifth leading killer — has been cleared to go on the market early next year, the Food and Drug Administration announced yesterday.

The agency said tests have shown the bacterial pneumonia vaccine to be effective "in at least 80 per cent of the people who receive it," and may offer protection to those with sickle cell anemia, who are particularly susceptible to pneumonia.

Although the armed services developed a similar vaccine during World War II, this marks the first time the FDA has approved one for general use.

The announcement said initial use of the vaccine, called "Pneumovax," will be among the elderly and the chornically ill where pneumonia risk is highest.

"Despite the wide use of antibiotics pneumonia today is the fifth leading cause of death in the United States, killing an estimated 25,000 Americans annually," the FDA said.

The vaccine consists of "killed" pneumonia bacteria containing substances which stimulate the body's natural defenses against the disease.

The FDA said in tests on about 30,000 volunteers beginning in 1973, the only side effects were temporary discomfort where the vaccine was injected and a slight fever for the following 24 hours.

The vaccine should reach the market early next year, the FDA said, and because pneumonia frequently hits among relatively inactive older people in crowded conditions, it probably will become a fixture in nursing homes.

Duration of the vaccine's effectiveness is not yet known, the manufacturer said, but previous tests indicate the protection may remain for up to five years.

Panther leader pleads innocent

OAKLAND, Calif. (UPI) — Black Panther leader Huey P. Newton pleaded innocent yesterday of the murder of a prostitute and the pistol whipping of his tailor.

Alameda County Superior Court Judge Alan Lindsay set Jan.2 for a hearing at which dates for the trial and arguments on motions will be determined. Newton, 35, is free on $80,000 bail.

He is charged with the fatal shooting on an Oakland street of Kathleen Smith, 17, a prostitute, and with the pistol whipping of Preston Collins, 53, a tailor.

At a preliminary hearing in municipal court, a prostitute testified that in 1974 she saw Newton get out of a Lincoln Continental, pull out a pistol and shoot Miss Smith. The tailor also testified, but he insisted he now was unable to remember crucial details.

Miss Smith lay in a coma for several weeks before she died, and during that period Newton, who had been questioned by police, disappeared. He returned voluntarily to Oakland in July after three years in Cuba.

Owner of theater jailed for obscenity

BOSTON (AP) — The owner of a Boston movie theater was sentenced to 18 months in jail yesterday after being found guilty of obscenity for showing the movie "Autobiography of a Flea."

Judge Kent Smith of Superior Court also fined Anthony Mascolo, 55, of Boston, owner of the Pussycat Cinema, and his corporation, $5,000.

Both the sentence and fine were appealed, and Mascolo was released on bond pending the outcome.

Also under appeal is a previous sentence of one year and a fine of $5,000 for a similar conviction stemming from the showing of the movie, "Only With My Husband."

McClellan retires after forty years

LITTLE ROCK (UPI) — Sen. John McClellan, D-Ark., whose 40 years in Congress made him one of the most powerful men in Washington, announced yesterday he would retire at the end of his current term.

Already a handful of potential candidates, including the governor and two congressmen, have indicated they might seek the office.

The public decision by Arkansas' 81-year-old senior senator had been expected for some time. He had been in poor health, having had a pacemaker implanted in his heart earlier this year.

But McClellan said he reached his decision to retire Jan 3, 1979, before he developed health problems.

"There is a proper time to aspire, a time to achieve and a time to retire," McClellan said at a sometimes emotional news conference attended by family, friends and his colleague, Sen. Dale Bumpers, D-Ark.

Later, he told reporters he had "pretty well worn myself out" in the office.

McClellan, chairman of the Senate Appropriations Committee, spent 50 years in public office.

Dangerous signals postponed launch

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. [UPI] — Space agency officials scrubbed the launch of a European weather satellite yesterday for the second consecutive day because they couldn't locate the source of a radio signal on the rocket's destruct frequency.

Kennedy Space Center Director Lee Scherer said the launch of the Meteosat 1 satellite was cancelled for last night and no new date had been set.

NASA said the postponement was necessary because launch personnel "have not yet been able to determine the source of a signal received on the command destruct frequency during electrical checks on the vehicle last Wednesday.

"Engineers and technicians are continuing to try to determine the source of the signal and simultaneously studying engineering changes that might be made to the vehicle," the space agency statement said.

A spokesman said, however, that he understood that officials don't believe the signal would have destroyed the Delta rocket launch vehicle had it lifted off.

"It was a very weak signal, but it was on that frequency," the spokesman said, adding that the Sunday and yesterdays scrubbings were a precautionary measure.

A source said that while he could not remember a launch being postponed for such a reason in 20 years, he had not heard the possibility of sabotage being discussed by officials connected with the launch.

Referrals to women given for abortions

HER SAY NEWS SERVICE — Canadian doctors who refuse on moral grounds to perform abortions for women who request them must now refer their patients to doctors or clinics which will perform the operation.

The new rule was approved recently by the Canadian Medical Association. The rule requires doctors objecting to any medical procedure to refer elsewhere patients who request it. A CMA spokesperson said, however, that the rule change was aimed at abortion.

HOUSTON: After Conservatives staged a walk-out near the end of the historic four-day National Women's Conference, the remaining majority of delegates joined hands in a symbolic show of unity as the conference was adjourned 11-21, after some 25 feminist proposals were passed. (UPI)

Women's Conference ends with 25 proposals passed

HOUSTON [AP] — The first National Women's Conference ended yesterday in much the same manner as it began — with a feud between the feminist majority and a minority who claimed the forum mispresented the views of most American women.

And the four-day conference — funded by a $5 million federal grant but marred by repeated verbal clashes between the participants — adjourned before its agenda was finished.

The final day's session began late and dragged on listlessly while many of the 2,000 delegates fretted about missing flights back home.

After rejecting a proposal to create a federal women's department to advance the equality of women, the conference concluded without the delegates considering proposals for implementing women's rights goals.

And, in a repetition of factional strife that characterized earlier conference sessions, leaders of the minority claimed their positions were given short-shrift treatment by the conference's presiding officers.

Bella Abzug, the conference chairman and former congresswoman from New York, didn't see it that way. The conference will serve as "a galvanizing influence" for women and encourage more activism, she said.

Minority delegates had been on the losing side when the conference adopted resolutions embracing many of the goals of the feminist movement, including ratification of the Equal Rights Amendment and equal rights for women homosexuals.

In spurning creation of a federal women's department, the delegates chose instead to have a national women's commission established to carry out the conference recommendations. The commission would assess the progress made toward achieving equality and make provisions for a second national conference at an unspecified date.

Ms. Abzug said she wasn't concernced that the conference left unanswered the question of how to implement women's rights goals. She said the National Commission on the Observance of International Women's Year, which sponsored the conference, would consider implementing proposals before sending the recommendations to President Carter.

The government-sponsored conference drew delegates, alternates and at-large representatives from 56 states and territories. The law which authorized the conference required that there be a geographical, ethnic, age, racial and economic balance.

The conference, which adopted 25 pro-women's rights resolutions, had been charged with identifying the barriers to sexual equality in the United States and making recommendations for removing them.

The minority group claimed about one-fifth of the delegates were in its camp. A coalition of conservative groups, which aligned themselves with the minority conference view, staged a series of counter-convention rallies and meetings in another part of town.

Student incorporates intern credit for Peabody political job

By PATTI TROPED
Collegian Staff

Can a 22-year-old UMass student majoring in English run for public office and get college credit at the same time?

One student found a way. In a telephone interview last night John Ferrante, a first semester sophomore from Peabody, explained how he incorporated college and politics by way of an internship.

"I wanted to run for a Counselor-at-Large position in Peabody anyway," Ferrante said. "But I thought I'd try to find a way to get credit at the same time, rather than taking off for a semester. I went to the office of internships, and after deciding on a procedure, and getting some of my professors to sponsor me, I was on my way."

Ferrante said he had thought there might be some problem because he would only be a first semester sophomore, and it normally takes 45 credits, or second semester sophomore standing to be granted an internship.

"But because I was an older student, and had a high cum, (3.6) the dean gave his approval," he said.

Ferrante was elected to the two year term on Nov. 8 and will be sworn into office on Jan. 3.

"Until then," he said, "I'm in limbo as far as the job goes. But I have papers to write on the campaign in order to get the internship credit. That keeps me busy enough," he said.

The position of Counselor-at-Large is a part of the city council of Peabody. There are 11 council members, including six Ward Counselors, who represent their own particular wards, (divided by population) and five Cousselors-at-Large, who are responsible for taking the whole city into consideration.

Ferranti explained, "Sometimes the Ward Counselors try to grab too much for their own particular ward; the Counselors-at-Large make sure things run smoothly and equally throughout the city."

Ferrante said the job includes reviewing the city's budget, as well as taking care of the problems Peabody's citizens might have, such as obtaining a license or permit, or having a sidewalk fixed.

"The position will probably require me to work three nights per week. I hope to be going to school during my time in office; probably UMass-Boston," he said.

Ferrante said his campaign cost him $1500; one-third from his own pocket, and the rest from fund raising.

"I started by calling my old high school friends and asking them to help. Eventually the whole thing snowballed. We distributed pamphlets door to door, and even stood outside at 7 a.m. to catch people on their way to work."

Ferrante said their was some resentment toward his age and amount of experience on the part of the older members who may have lost.

"At 22 I'm the youngest," he said. "One member was so mad about my beating him for re-election that he left the council completely, although technically he's still in office until I'm sworn in."

Ferrante, who served on the Undergraduate Student Senate during his freshman year, said there are some marked differences between UMass' and outside politics.

"What I'm doing now is on a much larger scale," he explained. "Where there was a $10,000,000 budget to work with at UMass there is now $35,000,000 to manage for an entire city. People are also more serious about what they want done. Students are only around for four years, what goes on in the senate doesn't have a long term effect on them. On the other hand, the citizens of Peabody expect to be here for life; they are very much interested in the decisions we make."

Ferrante said his long range plans include, for a start, finishing up his degree. He said he feels his English major will be a good background for anything he decides to pursue.

"I'm considering law school later on, with a definite emphasis on public service," he said. "But what I'm most interested in right now is doing a good job in office."

Where are the phone books?

Why, with the end of the semester approaching faster than you think, hasn't a student phone book been published?

You can get very few student phone numbers by dialing 411, telephone company information. You cannot get any dormitory room numbers from New England Telephone and Telegraph Company's information operators.

When commuter students register for classes, they give the University their home phone numbers if they want them listed. If you live in a dorm you don't have to bother because they already know what the number is. These numbers are then given to student directory telephone operators, the 545-1515 information numbers and generally, usually well into the semester, the University gets around to publishing and distributing phone books.

But it's nearly Thanksgiving, and still the only way to find a UMass student phone number is by dialing The Student Directory. Good luck.

The reason for the lateness this year is a computer foul-up in which the names of 500 UMass students were misplaced, thus making it impossible to compile any accurate directory (see story pg. 1).

All too frequently you have to suffer through countless rings before the overburdened operator can finally attempt to help you, that is, if the line's not busy.

And when you eventually do get an operator, you're told to call back in 15 minutes because "the computer is down," (an expression you hear almost every time you try to check a book out of the library) which means "out of order," just like a malfunctioning candy machine.

And you might just wonder why the junk heaps haven't been "deep sixed" in the Connecticut River, and in fact, as far as you're concerned, they may as well be resting on a sand bar in Hadley for all the good they do you.

Furthermore, the Student Directory closes at midnight, and from then on you have as good a chance of getting a student number as you do of catching an octopus under the Calvin Coolidge Bridge in Northampton.

The simple solution would seem to be to give everybody, including the operators, a phone book.

The university, however, seems unable to deliver the goods. If the administration can't do it, though, the students can.

If students are capable of publishing a course description guide and a daily newspaper, of running a radio station and managing a 1.2 million dollar budget, surely it would be no big thing for us to compile a phone book. We would most likely do a much better job than the people who aren't doing it now.

Respectfully dissenting

paul yanowitch

Justice Yanowitch; dissenting.

My brother Melia insists, in his opinion dated 11-18, in providing the community with an intemperate and unfounded attack on my views opinions and deeds. Indeed, he goes so far as to condemn me for a severe lack of a suitable ideology, suitable being the key, for it is manifest from his meanderings that the mere difference of opinion on our parts has invariably led to my 'moral bankruptcy'. If 'moral bankruptcy' is to be the phrase so highhandedly and carelessly applied to any person who varies, with one vote, from the path selected by our self-appointed sage, then I stand suitably convicted, without trial, for this heinous offense.

While my brother Melia may profess an ideology so sharp and keen that it serves as a deadly lance for his indiscriminate attacks, he palpably lacks a more suitable and trustworthy defense. He seems to have lost sight of the fundamentals, careful and concerned analysis, in the name of his eclectic ideology; he has foregone the once considered necessary investigation into all the facts and circumstances, and in its absence he tramples onward, ignoring warnings and harbingers of his future doom.

Mr. Melia is as concerned, it seems with Robert Wood's wet dreams as was Mr. Paulin (who is no one's brethren). Ignoring the context in which it was applied, and the obvious intent, my brethren snatches a phrase from my previous endeavor and callously and unashamed holds it aloft for public ridicule. "Civility and decorum" are bywords hastily culled and clumsily splintered and cast at my bleeding feet. I would have thought that my self-assured critic would press upon points more tenuous, and substantive, in his acerbic critique. Yet, his impoverished attempt sets out to triumphantly battle these two basic tenets of civilized reasoning.

I, too, have endured the litany of horrors so ungraphically depicted by my brother Melia, yet I remain an adherent of the more traditionally reasoned and logical attack, and insist, perhaps mistakenly so, on careful and researched criticism. Perhaps, if circumstances and substance are of no import, I should resort to a reply that Mr. Melia can scarcely be offended with; "if Mr. Melia's level of intelligence was even one iota of that amount mirrored in his sublime visions brought on by his orgiastic encounters with sheep and little boys, his column would never have been written."

My brother Melia seems equally concerned with my obsequiousness, first postulated, then assumed, and finally gloriously proven. I scarcely need to expose the underlying propositions relied on by my brother Melia to expose the unsound reasoning process so immaturely appreciated.

It seems that I have 'consistently' voted with the faculty on the Academic Matters Council, a proposition, as of yet untested, that results ipso facto in my lowly status as one who seems subject to constant derision and denegration.

The first proposition that I must present to my brethren is that the Rhetoric vote I have been so ignorantly attacked for is the sole difference in my voting record and that of my student co-representatives. However, they seem vainly protected from the spurious attacks in these pages that have befallen me, or recall by our 'supreme legislative body'. One must then tacitly assume that Mr. Melia's turgid logic has led him, on the basis of one vote, to reason that I am a syphocant and a 'brown-noser'.

Has Mr. Melia, as would any responsible and educated individual, taken the time or effort to secure knowledge about the Rhetoric vote that led to this debacle? I assume so, for at least he believes that he has critically absorbed the facts and intelligently arrived at a solution, that he has taken various steps to insure the validity of his position: that he has assiduously studied the Rhetoric program, its problems, foibles, faults and strengths; that he has ascertained the facts and concerns voiced at the meeting of the Council when the resolution was adopted; that he is prepared to demonstrate, in a clear and precise manner, why a vote in favor of the resolution presents a prima facie case for obsequiousness. I have to assume that Mr. Melia has done all this, for without this preparation, Mr. Melia rests his case on the putatively valid assumption that one vote with the faculty means I am a decadent administrative lackey and a syphocant. To merely state the proposition, I feel, is to conclusively recognize its invalidity.

My respect for students obviously exceeds that of my brother Melia, for I recognize that to disagree with a policy stated by the Senate does not render my position invalid. I can only assure the community that the student population here is a diverse one, where a myriad of concerns, causes, ideologies and political views can be found. Before we attempt to draw a hard and fast line at some intangible border and proclaim so proudly and assuredly that this is the position of the students, let us reflect once more on the issue, and perhaps realize that no such intransigent proclamation can be made. One may differ in opinion with my brother Melia and still be an advocate for students' interests. To attack this proposition is to sentence a sizeable number of concerned students to a fate worse than death — to be called 'scabs', 'sellouts', 'inimical to students', 'brown nosers', and other colorful adjectives.

The sooner we realize that a majority vote of the Senate (if one may call it that, so arrived at a colorful session of our legislative body where dope and booze are constant companions; where representatives flee in droves after their own interests have been served; and where full and free debate are as rare as a schedule book on pre-reg day) does not serve to silence debate on the issue or obviate the need for minority views, or even serve to end all debate and minority views on the issue, the sooner we show more respect for our peers.

I fear that my brother Melia has shown callous disrespect for our peers by tacitly assuming that he and his fellow politicos have the true answer to students' needs, and that anyone who finds himself-herself disagreeing with that answer will shortly face summary execution in our proud legislative body. I fear we do more harm to propose and insist on only one view for all our representative bodies in the name of student unity, then we would admit that the student body has varied concerns, ideologies and answers to our pressing problems.

Because of the above reasons, I respectfully dissent; I am authorized to say that no one dares join me in my opinion.

Death of a Marxist Irishman

b.j. roche

UMass has been host to a number of famous (and infamous) visitors, none of whom could put away more Jack Daniels than Seamus Costello. But then, whiskey is an integral part of Irish politics.

Costello (pronounced KOS-tel-la) came to the campus from Dublin in August, 1975, as part of the Irish Forum, a gathering of 50 representatives from all sides of the Northern Ireland conflict. The major groups represented were the Irish Republican Army and the Ulster Defense League, a militant protestant group; and various religious and political groups, like the Orange Order, an organization of Protestants who dislike practically everyone, much like our own KKK. But Costello had come as a maverick. Because he was the head of a new party, the Irish Republican Socialist Party.

The party, which had among its supporters Bernadette Devlin, looked at the Irish conflict not purely as a religious or political one, but as an economic conflict as well. The I.R.S.P. was concerned with the working classes all over Ireland, not just in the North. In his speech, given in a heavily guarded downstairs room of the Campus Center, Costello called for the establishment of a united 32 County Democratic Socialist Republic, free of British political and economic domination.

As a politician, Costello had the charm of a street-smart John Kennedy. He presented his ideas quietly and rationally. He didn't quote passages from Marx, or theorize on the capitalist system to his audience; indeed, he didn't have to. Most of the Irishmen were familiar with unemployment, poor housing and British interventions of various kinds. Costello wanted to end the conflict, but he also wanted a better deal for the working people in Ireland.

He was no angel. When Sinn Fein party President Tomas McGilla accused him of being a killer, Costello stood silent. But then, death, too, is an integral part of Irish politics.

The conference lasted a week. Each night following the day's discussions, the real debating took place. In a Campus Center Hotel room on the eighth floor into the late-night morning, the whiskey would flow. Costello held court in a corner, where contingents would come and go and discuss ideas with him. He made a good impression. Even on his enemies. Even the press members liked him.

Perhaps that impression was too good, because he also presented a threat to certain groups. Even though they had some common goals, the I.R.S.P. and the I.R.A. did not share the same analyses of the Irish question.

The I.R.S.P. had ideologically split the Sinn Fein — thus he had enemies from all sides.

On October 5, 1977, Costello was shot to death in a crowded Dublin street by an unidentified man. He had four children. The headline in the Boston Globe described him as an "extremist", but you wouldn't have known that to talk to him. He simply made a lot of sense.

B. J. Roche's column appears every other Tuesday in the Collegian.

Co-ops offer power

eg tarpinian

Consumer cooperatives are a resurgent phenomenon. Individuals, families and small businesses are finding that the best way to deal with inflation and low quality goods is to take distribution, organization and often times production into their own hands.

Coops offer low prices, better quality goods and an atmosphere which is often much more conducive to socializing than your average commodity outlet.

The most significant aspect of the growing cooperative movement in this country is that it is something that unites people of varying political persuasions, lifestyles, and interests. In the face of increasing economic hardship, people have shed the obstacles to unity and cooperation in order to better their own situations.

This effort shows us what it takes to get people together to work for a common goal. You must present them with something which is not only ideologically palatable, but which also hits them in the pocket book. There aren't too many people in this society who are willing to give up a free evening — in a week of meeting deadlines, driving a bus, preparing lectures for the next class, working on an assembly line, or studying for exams — to unite around a common idea, or view of the world. There must be something tangible, concrete.

On the UMass campus there are over twenty student-consumer coops. They range from eating places like Earth Foods and the People's Market, to commodity coops like the Stereo Coop and the Photo Coop, and financial institutions like our Credit Union. They are run by and for students. Their prices are low, and their work is of high quality.

We must get away from the realm of material reward to consider the political and social implications of student-run coops and services for a moment.

First, the UMass student body excels in the variety of services it has relative to other universities and colleges. Don't be fooled, this is not because of the administration's or the Board of Trustee's benevolence, but because of the work of students. All of the student services and coops are funded by the Student Activities Tax (SATF) which we pay each semester. All services are either run completely by students, or with the guidance of student-paid full time staff members. This is unique, for students on this campus are building the economic base necessary to become a powerful force within the University, and the Amherst area.

Secondly, student run coops and services offer the student the opportunity to improve or gain skills which he or she would not have learned otherwise. A better learning experience than operating a small enterprise for the community can rarely be found at UMass.

Thirdly, coops teach students the virtues of cooperation and 'community services' first hand. Many of the ideas taught in the classroom — like the beauty of abstract individualism — are discredited on the job, and others — like the desirability of helping fellow citizens and comrades — are proven to be valid.

Fourthly, it creates a basis of commonality. Case in point: the successful efforts of the speedily formed 'coop-coalition," which organized an effort to prohibit the campus center administration from charging rents for coop space in the C.C. — a campus center which students pay for through their C.C. fee each semester.

Fifthly, regarding student awareness and cooperation: it brings students of all different political slants together to work on a common venture. This is good, as it shows students that even though there are things which divide us, we, as a definite social grouping, have things to deal with collectively. It shows us that if push comes to shove we can get together and work together.

Sixthly, student coops and services show students concretely that their fellow students are doing something for them. It also shows them that they're getting something for their money.

Finally, it provides students interested in organizing their colleagues around issues of student powerlessness within the university an issue. It's double edged:

1) At some point the Administration will, when students become too economically and socially self-sufficient, say "good-bye coops, bring in the bank, grocery store, vegetarian restaurant....."

2) The other side is the issue of 'can you organize students to fight for their rights?' I say yes! There is one qualifier, however. You must satisfy basic needs: good food, a place to deposit money, cheap high-fi equipment etc. When students see their union helping them through services, they won't feel so bad about boycotting their Campus Center fee when the coops' existence is threatened.

Students are responsible. Students can control things that are very basic to them. All power to the coops! All power to students!

'Union Maids' on PBS

To the Editor:

On Nov. 21 the film 'Union Maids' will be shown on PBS, Channel 57, Springfield. The film highlights union organizing [the Committee of Industrial Organizations] in the Thirties through the eyes of three women, Stella, Sylvia and Kate.

The first-hand account is an engrossing insight into the people behind the organization. American History is Workers' Stories, his and herstory, and belongs to them who shape it. The battles these women fought, together with millions of other American working class people represents a glorious period in our history and all are strongly encouraged to tune in.

Fluoridation causes controversy

To the Editor:

The article on controversial fluoridation in Washington in the Nov. 15, issue of the Collegian by Arnold Warshaw was interesting.

Rep. John J. Delaney Dem. of N.Y. has introduced a bill, H.R. 328 to prohibit any federal funds to be used to fluoridate public water supplies. This may have started the controversy in Congress.

Sweden, after a very careful study of the effects of fluoridation, decided to outlaw the fluoridation of public water supplies. It is interested to know that Prof. Arvid Carlsson, one of Sweden's most renowned pharmacologists, upon requesting to know what clinical-epidemiological studies the fluoridation promoters referred to in their claims, found that not only no such studies could be found but also learned that some promoters of fluoridation, including Prof. Ingve Ericosson, of the World Health Organization, has a vested interest in fluoridation. When one realizes the tremendous increase in the price of sodium fluoride after it was used in water supplies, one can see why many are so determined to promote it. Evidently the Swedish Parliament was not influenced by vested interest.

I hope that this student will follow up on this controversy in Washington; he may discover exactly what the Swedish Parliament discovered.

'A plus plus' for masterpiece

To the Editor:

I would like to commend Fifi Ball on her extremely humorous article in Friday's editorial page, titled "Abolish Grades." In it she suggests we throw out grades because they're not nice and breed competition [legionnaire disease equivalent]. She suggests, as one brilliant alternative, to do "nothing." This way students will want to learn instead of being forced to learn. Without marks, students will cram into classrooms, eager to learn, and study constantly when not sleeping. Ha! Ha! She wrote this obviously tongue in cheek, knowing very well that students would cram the campus bars, eager to party, and the only thing they would study is possibly a schedule for the movies [and the Collegian, of course.]

She offers another suggestion that really cracks me up. Individual comments by the professor!! Can you imagine the professors in my two of five courses of a hundred plus students, evaluating my attention span during their mass assembly, microphoned lectures? They don't even see me, never mind know who I am, or how I'm doing. I mean I'm in the 28th row.

She goes on to say in her humor column that competition, an evil invented by grades, is harmful to learning, evidently mocking students who are afraid of competition, and should have stayed in grammar school a few extra years to prepare for the ordeal.

I really love the way Fifi pretends to be dead serious throughout her article. Classic humor! She deserves an "A plus plus" for the masterpiece.

HEADY HEADLINES that have been appearing in the campus press, of late, give pause: "Oil Ashore That's Going Ashore" is how The Echo of W. Conn. State college labeled a piece retracing the 12 oil tanker mishaps of the 26 days between Dec. 15, 1976 and Jan. 10, 1977.

The Daily Evergreen titled a piece on a list of typists for student papers "Let their fingers do the typing."

Meanwhile, down in chilly Florida, telling about the resurgence of the nudist colonies of the Sixties, the Miami-Dade Community College Catalyst drew readership with "Nudists just grin and bare it."

And one columnist in the aforementioned Echo labels his movie review as "Going Ape for King Kong."

So much for cleverness.

- - - - -

ADD INNOCENT HUMOR in the press: a UMass campus police report on a one-car accident read that "the subject's car had gone off the road and was found to be under the influence and was subsequently arrested."

Another example of why Johnny can't write?

- - - - -

SHRINK STAFF TO SHRINK is the heady headline that appeared recently over a story in the Georgetown U. Voice. It announced that a member of the Psych Center would be leaving the campus for private practice.

- - - - -

FRIED RATS have been responsible for the termination of employment of the director of the art gallery at Cal State-Los Angeles. He had been charged with responsibility when a local artist torched three rats as part of an exhibit.

"I didn't think he was going to do what he did to those rodents."

The Arizona Daily Wildcat repeated the story it had picked up from CSULA's University Times.

Oh, rats!

- - - - -

LONGEST KISS RECORD was attempted at Indiana University, not long ago, with the proceeds to go to a venereal disease clinic, according to a piece in the Indiana Daily Student.

Held at the "Jam Factory," contestants were aiming to break the Guinness listing of 119 hours and 12 minutes.

The story appeared under the ids headline, "Kiss for VD this weekend."

We can't wait.

Internship

Applications will be accepted until Dec. 2 for an internship with the Everywoman's Center Newsletter for spring semester 1978.

The intern will work 7 to 15 hours per week and arrange for 3-6 credits. Applicants should have a fairly strong writing background and an excitement about the concept of women's news and women's media in general. As the Newsletter focus is both on and off campus, the intern should be familiar with and-or interested in the communities surrounding UMass.

The Newsletter seeks to be an anti-racist, anti-imperialist news vehicle, with an understanding of class issues as they relate to women, and of lesbian issues.

The intern will work with three other women in production of the Newsletter, which is printed every other month. This will include thinking of ideas for articles, researching and writing articles, doing interviews, typing copy, and doing camera-ready layout.

Anyone interested in this internship should come to Everywoman's Center or call Buffy at 5-0883.

Teacher certification

The Teacher Certification Program at UMass is accepting applications past its original Nov. 1 deadline.

Acceptance is open on a space-available basis for most elementary and secondary certification programs. Applicants must have a bachelor's degree and submit a formal application with a transcript and two letters of recommendation.

The program is offered by the Division of Continuing Education in cooperation with the School of Education. For additional information, go to the Teacher Certification Program, Hasbrouck Building, or call (413) 545-2040.

Jack Scott

Sportswriter to lecture

Sportswriter and activist Jack Scott will speak on "Violence in Sports" Nov. 28 at 8 p.m.

He is now finishing a book on the 1977 NBA playoffs which, in part, deals with the fracas between Portland Trail Blazer forward Maurice Lucas and the Philadelphia Seventy-Sixers' young, tough center, Darryl Dawkins.

Scott will reveal the media psychology behind sensational headlines, his association with Blazer center Bill Walton, and the varied "violences" that do not make headlines — the violence athletes do to their bodies and the "violence" inflicted on people's physical lives by the environment, or by corporate-pushed products like processed foods and drugs.

Scott and his wife shared a household with Bill Walton, taking part in the vegetarian fare, and with him actively supported for the Native American movement.

Tomorrow at 3 p.m., Scott will hold a workshop on "Racism and Sports" in the Hampden Student Center in Southwest.

For more information, contact the Distinguished Visitors Program by visiting the office, Student Union 415, or calling 545-0920.

Art exhibition

A five-college faculty art exhibition begins today at the UMass University Gallery, and will continue through Dec. 18.

Twenty-seven area painters, photographers, print makers, and sculptors of national acclaim have each chosen their works that will be displayed.

The more than 100 art works on display impressively reveal the range, diversity and accomplishment of the artists teaching at these four colleges. This exhibition marks the first time the artists of these institutions have shown their works together.

The University Gallery in the Fine Arts Center is open Tuesday, 11:30 a.m. to 8 p.m., Wednesday through Friday 11:30 a.m. - 4:30 p.m., Saturday and Sunday 2 p.m. - 5 p.m. It will be closed for the Thanksgiving recess Nov. 24 through 27, and will close for the Christmas vacation and Intersession from Dec. 18 through Jan. 23, 1978.

Your Birthday

By Stella Wilder

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 22 — Born today, you are a flexible individual for whom change holds no problems. You enjoy life as you find it but you are perfectly willing to adapt to new ways when necessary. You can be depended upon to behave with calm and intelligence in any crisis, particularly when it comes to managing children, for you know how to bring calm to them and how to enlist their support in an effort to make them help themselves.

Your level-headed approach to whatever difficulties arise should gain you the admiration and the support of those who live or work with you. Much is gained in the name of moderation and there is no one more moderate than you in dealing with the public. You can be counted on to persuade others in ways you wish them to go, and you would make an excellent salesman. Your honesty is the asset that marks your salesmanship as superior.

You have very strong beliefs and will fight to see them upheld. You do not insist that others have the same standards and ideals, but you do insist that you be allowed to follow your own inclinations in these matters. In return, you allow others the same privilege. In conflicts between justice and loyalty, you always allow justice to win.

To find what is in store for you tomorrow, select your birthday and read the corresponding paragraph. Let your birthday star be your daily guide.

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 23

SAGITTARIUS(Nov.22-Dec.21) – Your service to another may be criticized today. Don't be swayed by false logic.

CAPRICORN(Dec.22-Jan.19) – Contentment is the key to success today. Don't be impatient with the slow or handicapped. Count your blessings.

AQUARIUS(Jan.20-Feb.18) – Use your mental skills to develop new interests for leisure time. Don't expect direction to come unbidden.

PISCES(Feb.19-March 20) – An influential friend helps you to an important position. Don't refuse an opportunity for gain.

ARIES(March 21-April 19) – Consider the utility of an object you want to buy; you may buy something you can't use or appreciate.

TAURUS(April 20-May 20) – You should progress in the commercial world without further effort. Deliver another's promise tonight.

GEMINI(May 21-June 20) – The welfare of a loved one is essential to your own. Make sure all is well at home before you leave.

CANCER(June 21-July 22) – There are detrimental aspects to your plans for a journey. Be available to answer questions at evening.

LEO(July 23-Aug.22) – Strong will power and sense of direction are needed for success in improvung the home situation.

VIRGO(Aug.23-Sept.22) - - Imagination and energy, expended wisely, can make the difference between success and failure today.

LIBRA(Sept.23-Oct.22) – Your intuitive powers may be able to help you realize a goal of your future.

SCORPIO(Oct.23-Nov.21) – You must overcome a tendency to meddle, or you may be accused of promoting false rumors.

Courageous Arnold leads harriers

By MIKE BERGER
Collegian Staff

The scene: Van Cortland Park, New York City
The race: IC4A's
The action: UMass runner Stetson Arnold crossing the finish line in fifth place with his arms upraised, signifying a triumph.
The reaction: "I've never felt so strong in my life."

Stetson Arnold, a transfer from Providence College, has gone through more trials and tribulations, more peaks and valleys, more high and lows than the Perils of Pauline.

He has seen the 'gold' of All-American status, having been on full scholarship at Providence, which two years ago was the third-best cross country team in the nation, and the recognition by the Boston Globe two years ago predicting that he would be the "outstanding runner in New England."

But more recently Arnold has been hit by misery. One year ago he was plagued by a mild case of hepatitis, causing him to rest extensively. This season, in his first year in a UMass uniform, Arnold was felled by what doctors have termed hypoglycemia, a blood sugar disease.

Normally, a person with this ailment would undergo extensive medical tests to see what specifically the body would need in order to fully recuperate. It's a sickness that causes a person to feel very strong and full of energy one moment but then "weak and lifeless the next."

It's a disease which doctors think, but can't prove, is caused by a low blood sugar amount in the diet.

The question — why is Stetson Arnold still running?

"It means too much to me not to be able to run. When the season is over," said Arnold, "I will fully investigate what is wrong with me and what I can do to get rid of it.

"But right now, trying to help UMass do as well as it can do is my concern," said the 21-year-old business major.

The cross country season started on a promising note for Arnold as he placed in the top five positions in the first two UMass meets. He looked quite impressive in the second meet of the season against his old team — Providence College — as he ran fifth with a good time of 24 minutes flat on the five-mile Franklin Park course.

But then Arnold started feeling weak. He could practice some days but then had to rest on others. Finally coach Ken O'Brien had to rest him for three consecutive meets to give him time to find out what was medically wrong.

"We sought out a lot of medical advice," said O'Brien, "and decided to rest Stetson whenever he felt weak. We weren't going to push him and if it meant that we were going to 'red-shirt' him for another season, we would have done that.

"Even though Stet has done very well in the last three weeks, we still can't predict what he will do from week to week because of the unpredictable behavior of the disease," said O'Brien.

The road to recovery for Arnold started out dismally as he finished 14th in the Yankee Conference championships three weeks ago. A week later, Arnold came back to place sixth in the New Englands as he ran step for step with co-captain Mike Quinn. If Arnold hadn't fallen halfway through the race, he conceivably could have finished higher.

Arnold climaxed his road to recovery with a scintillating fifth place position in the IC4A's. He claimed he never felt so strong physically.

"Every week I feel better and better and my aim for the nationals is again to make All-American (one of the top 25 Americans to finish the race)," said Arnold.

Arnold chose to leave Providence because he felt like a "machine and not a human being" about his relationship with Providence coach Bob Amato.

Providence, which is ranked fourth in the country by Harrier magazine, has in the last two years recruited extensively from Ireland, spending huge sums of money to bring in world class runners.

Recent runners from Ireland who have been widely known for their abilities have been Mike O'Shea, John Treacy, Michael Byrne, and most recently record holder of the two miler in Ireland Gerry Deegan.

In an interview Arnold said the reason he left Providence for UMass was because of the active effort by Amato to recruit foreign runners and because of the "business-like" coaching style of Amato.

"I will predict," said Arnold, "that in the next two years Providence will not have one American on the team. I could see it coming and I wanted to get out of it."

According to Arnold, Amato would just put the workout up on the bulletin board and leave.

"He wasn't interested in anybody as a runner and certainly as a person. I just got fed up with him," said Arnold.

Except for the medical problems that have beset Arnold this year, he is most quite happy with UMass and its running program.

"I am quite relieved to get out of Providence and into a university where a coach cares about you as a person, other runners that you can get to know as good friends, and a general environment that's conducive to running," said Arnold.

"We are very lucky," said O'Brien, "to get a runner of the quality runner like Stetson. It will take some time for him to get back to the level he achieved his All-American year at Providence but again it's a matter of time. Arnold definitely has the talent and the discipline to do it."

Murray named top rookie; Bostock signs

Writers honor DH

NEW YORK [AP] — Eddie Murray, the Baltimore Orioles' slugging designated hitter, was named 1977 American League Rookie of the Year yesterday by the Baseball Writers Association of America.

The 21-year-old Murray, a switch-hitter who batted a solid .283 with 27 home runs and 88 runs batted in, got 12½ votes in the balloting by the 28-man BBWAA committee. He received 12 full votes and split one with Oakland A's outfielder Mitchell Page, the runner-up with 9½ votes.

Murray finished the season with a flourish, batting .364 with 26 RBI and nine homers in 31 games during September. His key hits kept the surprising Orioles in the hot East Division race with Boston and the New York Yankees until the final weekend.

Second baseman Bump Wills of the Texas Rangers received four votes and pitcher Dave Rozema of the Detroit Tigers received the other two in the balloting. Each committee member votes for only one player with each vote counting equally.

Murray, a Los Angeles native, was the Orioles' third choice in the June 1973 draft. He is Baltimore's fourth AL Rookie of the Year, following Ron Hansen, 1960; Curt Blefary, 1965, and Al Bumbry, 1973.

Murray, a natural right-hander, taught himself to switch-hit during the 1976 season with Charlotte of the Class AA Southern League where he hit .298 with 12 homers and 46 RBI in 88 games and Rochester of the Class AAA International League .274, 11 homers, 40 RBI in 54 games.

He is listed as a first baseman but Manager Earl Weaver used him predominantly as a DH because of the presence of slugger Lee May 27 homers, 99 RBI.

Page batted .307 with 21 homers, 75 RBI and 42 stolen bases for Oakland. Wills hit .287 and stole 28 bases for the Rangers.

Angels ink star

ANAHEIM [AP] — Outfielder Lyman Bostock became, in his own words, the highest paid baseball player in the history of the game yesterday when he signed a reputed five-year contract with the California Angels for $3 million.

"As far as I know, I'm the highest paid ballplayer," said Bostock, and his agent, Abdul Jalil, verified, "he is No. 1."

Bostock, who turns 27 today, played out his option with the Minnesota Twins this past season and hit .336, which was second in the American League only to his teammate, Rod Carew, the AL's Most Valuable Player.

Bostock said the New York Yankees and the San Diego Padres offered him more money than the Angels but "there were a lot of other things involved in addition to money."

Bostock said he had made up his mind last Friday to accept the Angels' offer even though Minnesota had made a last-minute bid on Sunday to regain his services.

The Twins already had lost center-fielder Larry Hisle to the Milwaukee Brewers in the free-agent draft.

Baltimore, L.A., widen division leads

[AP] — On a Sunday when a few teams could have clarified the National Football League's post-season prospects, they chose involuntarily, of course to cloud it up even more.

Only Baltimore and Los Angeles took steps to thin out the playoff field.

In the American Conference, Baltimore managed to widen its East Division lead to two games over Miami. While the Colts, 9-1, were routing the New York Jets 33-12, the Dolphins were losing 23-17 to Cincinnati.

Miami had the misfortune to get suckered by the Bengals' triple reverse pass play — Ken Anderson to Archie Griffin to John McDaniel back to Ken Anderson to Bob Trumpy for the 29-yard fourth-quarter touchdown pass.

New England remained on the fringes of the playoff picture, improving to 6-4 by beating Buffalo 20-7. But with Denver 9-1 and Oakland 8-2 in the AFC West and with the runner-up Raiders and the Patriots having equally easy or equally tough foes in the remaining four regular-season weeks, it appears unlikely that New England will secure a wild-card berth, which goes to each conference's best second-place team.

Oakland plays Buffalo, Los Angeles, Minnesota and Kansas City, two fairly tough, two moderately easy — and none really predictable considering the state of Ken Stabler's twisted knee while New England plays Philadelphia, Atlanta — the Pats will probably be favored each time — Miami and Baltimore; they figure to be underdogs for these two.

Ignored but important

Jimmy Brown, Jim Taylor, Paul Hornung, Gale Sayers, and O.J. Simpson are football names that nobody forgets because they're running backs who produced points, which is synonymous with glory.

But what about the thankless job that special teams, defensive teams, and offensive lines do that are just as important but neglected?

The Miami Dolphins built championship teams around a no-name defense that consisted of players like Jake Scott, Manny Fernandez, Bill Stanfill and Nick Buonoconti. We know their names because the media swallowed the Dolphins' front office bait. Otherwise, you'd think that Scott was a baker in Kennebunk, Maine.

In recent years George Allen has become famous for his emphasis of recruiting players for the sole purpose of playing on special teams. Everybody has nightmares when Bill Malinchak prepares to block another punt, or when Andre the Giant decides to come back to the 'Skins and bowl over 11 individuals.

Now for the offensive line.

Aaaahhhh, let' see. Perhaps the greatest injustice to the quarter-ton hulks that occupy the 'pit', both offensively and defensively, is to overlook them. The Fearsome Foursome of the Los Angeles Rams started a media trend to nickname the front four (i.e. Steel Curtain, Purple People-Eaters, Orange Crush, etc.). However, the men on the other side of the 'pit' still remain anonymous.

Except for the Electric Company that plowed open mack-truck holes for one-Orenthal James Simpson a couple of years ago that led to the Juice's record-shattering 2,000-yard plus season, the monsters up front have gone fameless.

Just before his injury, all of a sudden the Juice went sour and everybody asked, "What's wrong with the offensive line? Can't they block anymore? Do their mothers wear army boots? What's the story?"

The story is that Joe DeLamielleure (guard), Reggie MacKenzie (guard), Donnie Greene (tackle), Joe Devlin (who alternates with Greene), and Dave Foley (tackle) are alive and well in Buffalo. Just ask the Patriots, who dropped a 24-14 decision that was supposed to be a cakewalk.

DeLamielleure said after the Bill's 56-17 loss to the expansion Seattle Sea Hawks that he was going to play every game as if it were his last. And he did.

MacKenzie, who's a good friend of Simpson's, said that the Bill's pride had been hurt the week before against Seattle and that he wouldn't quit. ... and he didn't.

Greene, Foley, and Devlin are the lesser-known celebrities of the Electric Company, but they performed just as intensely as the others. Since they don't carry the football nor pull for the Juice, they just shower and go back to the hotel.

You're probably wondering who the hell the center is. The truth of the matter is I don't know since Mike Montler packed his bags.

So, I guess you can say that I'm just as guilty as the average football fan that watches the quarterback, halfbacks, and wide receivers. In my defense — the Boston Globe did not print anywhere in its sports section the name of the Buffalo Bills' starting center.

The Electric Company didn't go sour, the Juice might have, or defenses just pointed at number 32 in the blue and white and said "you're (OJ) not going anywhere."

Roland Hooks (hardly a household name) rambled for 155 yards on 27 carries behind the same offensive line that was in front of the Juice. Coincidence? I don't think so.

The next time you go to a football game, watch the offensive line: the way the guards pull, the way they stunt (criss-cross), and pass block. You might learn something.

The Patriots did.

Harriers finish 19th

SPOKANE, Wash. — The UMass cross country team, paced by Mike Quinn and Stetson Arnold, finished 19th in the national cross championships held here yesterday afternoon.

Quinn, who placed 16th, and Arnold, who came in 23th, earned All-America honors for the harriers.

The team title went to the University of Oregon, which compiled 97 points. The University of Texas — El Paso placed second with 129 points, while Wyoming came in third. UMass had 418 points.

Providence College was the highest New England finishers, as the Friars placed fourth in the 33 team field. John Tracy (second place), Gerry Deegan (third) and Dan Dillon (13th) were the PC high finishers and All-America harriers.

Northeastern's Jon Flora was another New Englander who fared well. He came in 17th, just back of Quinn.

Grapplers swept in quad-match

By STEVE BUCKLEY
Collegian Staff

The UMass wrestling team traveled to Kingston, Rhode Island this weekend, and depending on how you look at the situation, the trip was either a success or a dismal failure.

The team opened the 77-78 season with a quad-match against three top-rated schools and, as expected, failed to win a match; losing to Michigan 33-7, Rhode Island 37-6, and Syracuse 30-6.

Although the final scores did not indicate it, UMass displayed effective ability against the three colleges. The Michigan match was their best, as the UMass squad gave the Wolverines several good contests.

Freshman Tony Perry started the UMass scoring with a decisive 12-4 victory at 118 pounds to give the team a quick 4-0 lead.

"Perry was just fantastic," beamed coach Dave Amato. "He showed real good speed and he had some great moves, too."

At 126 pounds, Dave Krase lost a close 6-3 match to give Michigan three points, but veteran grappler Larry Otsuka gave UMass a 7-3 lead with his 11-5 triumph at 134 pounds.

The Minutemen scoring stopped here, however, as Michigan took the next seven matches for the victory. Charley Rigogliso (142 pounds) and co-captain Timmy Fallon (150 pounds) lost close matches.

Against Rhode Island, Amato shuffled his line-up considerably. Dana Rasmussen started things off at 118 pounds, and lost a 2-1 decision to Bob DeSteffanis.

"Raz' could have won that match," said Amato. "He had a few bad breaks, or else the score would have been different."

Otsuka started the UMass scoring, as he produced one of the best UMass efforts of the weekend with an 8-6 victory over old foe Scott Arnel.

This was a classic rematch between the two, as last spring Otsuka edged Arnel by an overtime decision in the New England championships.

Steve McLarney provided the only other UMass victory with a 4-2 win at 150 pounds.

In the Syracuse match, UMass bowed, 33-6.

"This was by far our worse match," said Amato. "The guys were tired. We had already had two tough matches, and Syracuse just overwhelmed us."

The only UMass scoring came from Fallon, who picked up two points with a tie at 150 pounds, and John Allen, who scored a big victory in the unlimited division.

UMass will have next week off, and travels to Coast Guard for a tournament December 2 and 3.

"It's too bad we have next week off," said Amato. "The team is real excited now. We played three great teams and came away with some good matches."

In other weekend matches, Syracuse battled URI to a 15-15 draw and lost to Michigan, 20-18. URI also beat Michigan to be the only undefeated team in the quad match.

WRESTLING NOTES — Freshman grappler Dave O'Brien summed up the weekend best as he spoke in personal terms: "Last year I was wrestling teams like Milford High, now here I am facing Michigan."

Another freshman, Mike Cunningham, must be wondering if he perhaps came around at the wrong time. In his very first college match, Cunningham was pitted against Michigan's Mark Churrela, who just happens to be national collegiate champion at 158 pounds.

Cunningham, who lost the match, looked upon the contest as an honor.

"I felt proud to face him," said Cunningham. "I didn't expect to win, but I was trying as hard as I could. I think, though, that I had a little bit too much respect for him. After I lost I realized that he has too arms and too legs just like me. But he really is good."

But not good enough. In what turned out to be the most exciting match of the entire quad match, Churrella lost a 7-2 match to John Janiak of the Syracuse Orangemen.

Janiak was ranked number two in the nation two years ago, but was forced to sit out last season because of shoulder surgery. Janiak will have little time to savor the victory, however, as he will meet Churrella next month in a tourney at Penn State.

UMass was without the services of co-captain and New England champion Kevin Griffin this weekend.

Griffin, a fixture at 158 pounds, has been busy with late labs and was not in top condition for the quad match.

Amato replaced Griffin with Dave O'Brien against Syracuse and URI, and Mike Cunningham against Michigan.

Before the quad match began, UMass and Michigan staged two exhibition matches. Dana Rasmussen pinned John Davids at 118 pounds, and Steve Joyce lost a 167 pound decision.

Icemen battle AIC in Springfield tonight

By GEORGE O'BRIEN
Collegian Staff

The UMass hockey team will try to get back on the winning track tonight as it travels to Smead Arena in Springfield to battle the Yellow Jackets of AIC in a 7:15 game.

The contest will be the first in a five-game road trip that will also feature UConn, Norwich, Middlebury and Army.

The Minutemen are coming off a frustrating 5-2 loss at the hands of a tough, scrappy Lowell six that was just too fast and too talented for the Minutemen. The loss dropped UMass' record to 1-1.

The game was a very physical contest, featuring 32 penalties, most of which were called in the final period. The contest was marred by fights and other incidents that occured in the stands behind the benches.

Coach Jack Canniff was less than pleased with his team's performance Saturday night, and is hoping his squad can put it together against a talented, experienced AIC squad.

This will be the season opener for the Yellow Jackets, who under fourth-year coach Paul Thornton posted an 18-6 record last season. The mark earned them a spot in the ECAC Division II playoffs, where they bowed out in the early rounds.

AIC is an xperienced team with a lot of depth. The Yellow Jackets are led on offense by senior forward Tom Mullen, a two-time All-American, who was second in ECAC Division II scoring last season with 31 goals and 41 assists. Other offensive threats for AIC are senior forward Tom Lloyd, who had 14 goals last year and junior forwards Ken Muse and Dan Aiello, who had 12 goals apiece.

On defense, the Yellow Jackets have plenty of talent and depth. The defensive corps is led by senior standout Mike Smith, who set an AIC assist record last year with 46. Smith is backed up by juniors Ron Nelson, Mike Dagenais and Mark Scheider.

The Yellow Jackets, who lost starting goaltenders Ray Belisle and Gary Newbert to graduation, will probably go with freshman Chris Snow, who impressed Thornton in pre-season, in the nets. Mark Hull is the backup goalie.

John Riley, who has played very well in goal for the first two games, will get the nod again tonight for the Minutemen. Riley turned aside 35 shots in the Lowell contest and kept UMass in the game.

For the Minutemen to stay in the game tonight, they will have to keep the puck away from the high-powered Yellow Jacket offense. The Minutemen, who don't have the scoring punch of AIC, will have to play solid defense and hope to get on top early.

A sports souffle

... Cup of hot chocolate and an english muffin with grape jelly, and out the door by 7:30 ...

Not to worry about UMass's loss over the weekend to Boston College. We'll get even when basketball season rolls around ...

While it's decent the Minutemen will be playing Lehigh in a post-season game this Saturday, but too bad it had to be this weekend when just about everyone will still be home for the holidays. Even students who follow the team each week may think twice since it would mean coming up to Amherst and returning home presumably, since the dorms will be closed. Which means most will learn the outcome via their local Sunday paper, instead of first hand.

Wondering, after reading the account of the hockey team's home debut at Orr Rink on Amherst College's campus, whether drunk fans are better than no fans or vice versa. Since it's a long bus ride from Lowell to Amherst you don't have to guess what U of L's fans did on the way up. Not that it (trouble) was completely their doings. Takes two to tango.

Are the diehard fans who clung onto the Red Sox and their slim playoff hopes the same ones who still believe the NE Patriots have a chance too?

While on the Sox, surely you all know that Mike Torrez has come to his senses, left the Yankees and is headed towards Beantown. No doubt this will enhance the chances of the Sox winning a few more games, but enough to take the league? And why Dick Drago?-Enough of baseball, it's wintertime.

Returning from Boston news to a more local scene: the field hockey team took off to compete in the national tournament in Colorado. The school has reportedly given them $6500 towards expenses. So how come the soccer team reportedly got nothing for its journey to New York except gas money?

UMass basketball season opens next week (Nov. 30) at Harvard. Two more away games (Dec. 3 at George Washington, Dec. 6 at B.U.) before the Minutemen's home opener on the 10th vs. Vermont. Big UConn-UMass clash on the 14th (at the Cage). Not to mention the rest of the schedule which features Rutgers, West Virginia, Bentley, and Providence.

Strange, on most Mondays, the NBA, NHL are off. But on a holiday like Thanksgiving, the NFL ignores the significance of it being a family day and schedules games anyway (couldn't they play on Friday just as easily?). Maybe that's the price you pay for being a pro.

Tampa Bay is getting closer to victory. They actually led the Detroit Lions 7-0 for a while. Eventually lost 16-7. Not bad.

SW dorms to open after game

By MARK HORAN
Collegian Staff

The usual locks will be put back on Southwest dormitory doors by 4 p.m. Saturday, thus making it possible for residents to enter the dorm and stay that night after the UMass-Lehigh Division 2 playoff football game.

Sally Freeman, director of the Community Development Center, yesterday said the decision was made at a morning meeting with all area directors.

Freeman said that Northeast-Sylvan area and Central Orchard Hill area will not replace the vacation locks until Sunday. She said students in those areas can negotiate with heads of residence and area administrators. Officially, students in those areas can only stay in their rooms if they have an academic, employment, or travel reason.

Southwest Master Director Jim Matlack said the decision to open the area was made because he feared a significant number of residents would want to stay and would find some way to get into the dorms.

"We would rather open the dorms with as much security as we can than have people in the dorms with no security," said Matlack.

Southwest is using mostly regular student security guards, although some other students will work. Matlack said all will be compensated, but no regular staff (heads of residences and resident assistants) will be required to work.

Coolidge tower has decided not to open officially, according to Matlack. He said students and staff in that dorm conferred and decided it was not necessary.

Freeman said dorms are closed and outside doors are recored on vacations for the students' protection. She said if dorms are opened with improper security, students' rooms and property are vulnerable to theft.

Central Area Associate Director William Taylor said Monday he was worried about security and he was not going to deprive an already "exhausted staff" of its vacation.

Undergraduate Student Senate co-president Jon Hite, when reached for comment yesterday, said students living in the two closed areas who wish to go to the football game "should tell their heads of residence that they are staying for academic reasons."

In a related football story, Hite said yesterday afternoon there was little chance of getting the student admission fee of $2 waived by Saturday.

The fee is being charged by the National Collegiate Athletic Association. On Monday, Athletic Director Frank McInerny said that NCAA runs all playoff events and in fact asks schools as its choice if they would like to host the games. McInerny said when a school agrees to host the event they agree to follow NCAA guidelines. "We have no control over the fee," said McInerny.

Hite said it appeared that the "lateness of the hour would prevail," although he thought "They were wrong in charging."

Hite claims the event is a University event and as such the students who pay for the stadium through the athletic fee should not have to pay for admittance to the game.

Faculty to ask 36% raise

By MEGAN O'REILLY
Collegian Staff

The proposed contract by the faculty union, which is currently being evaluated by the administration's bargaining committee, will ask for a 36 per cent faculty salary increase and a reduction in contact hours, it was learned last night.

The 80-page document concerning salary, wage and working conditions was submitted to the administration Nov. 17 as an "asking package" for the administration to consider and formulate its list of proposals.

Both groups will then bargain for their demands and eventually draw up a contract based on compromise.

The Massachusetts Society of Professors' proposal was leaked to the press by an unknown source yestereay, violating written ground rules which prohibit any release of information to the media without mutual consent of both the MSP and the administration.

Zina Tillona, the official spokesperson for the chancellor, termed the incident "terribly unfortunate" and said she learned of it from Russel Jones, chairperson of the administration's bargaining committee, yesterday morning.

Larry Roberts, chairperson of the MSP, said the document along with a memorandum from the administration's bargaining committee was given to local press to make the MSP look bad.

Jones attributed the leak to a wide distribution of the document to as many as 100 persons which considerably startled Roberts, who replied, "They certainly didn't waste any time, the union only has a few copies of the proposal itself."

The asking package is a complicated unit of concepts, according to Roberts, which is divided into five major segments: Salary, Working Conditions, Academic Personnel Policies, Grievance and Governance.

Roberts explained the contract as follows: The concept of equity is extremely important and should be remedied in all salaries, specifically in three areas, cost-of-living, merit, and professional advances.

UMass faculty have not received a salary increase in four years, and faculty is presently hired at a salary higher than that of their senior colleagues.

Provisions are made in the proposal for merit and professional advances neither of which is included in the present context. Professional advances would be automatic based on the faculty members satisfactory advancement. Salary increases would be awarded on the basis of merit for outstanding achievement by a faculty member.

The 36 per cent salary increase will incorporate all of these concepts.

The segment on Academic Personnel policies would standardize the criteria for promotion and tenure. Part-time faculty would be provided the opportunity to be considered for tenure. "Right now," said Roberts, "the administration can divide up the faculty, hire only part-timers, and get cheap labor."

This segment will also include access to long-range plans, a concept of academic freedom and a guiding principle to strengthen the department personnel committees.

Research funds, contact hours, filling vacancies and lab supplies will all be covered in the segment on working conditions.

"UMass considers itself a major research university," said Roberts, "however, little state support is provided." The union is asking for $300,000 to set up a research support fund for research grants.

The faculty presently spends six to nine hours per week lecturing in classrooms. A reduction in contact hours would be made to four and one half to six hours a week.

The faculty is greatly overtaxed, said Roberts, and filling all the vacanies would greatly decrease the faculty work load and increase the quality of education. Roberts said he had no idea as to the number of vacancies because the administration would not release that information. Funds for secretarial assistants, telephones and lab supplies are also being requested.

The primary concern in matters of governance was to strengthen the Faculty Senate. The union would like to see the senate retain its voice in academic matters and be restricted to faculty only.

The proposal calls for a resolution to streamline grievance and set an option for binding arbitration. Grievance procedures would be shortened to one or two months and if the resolution was not satisfactory to the grievant, the case would be submitted to an outside third party, probably the American Arbitration Association.

A Thanksgiving tale: The longest tunnel

By JOE MAGLITTA
Collegian Staff

For nearly 50 years it was the marvel of the great age of railroads: the longest train tunnel in America.

Painstakingly chiseled through the interior of Hoosac Mountain, it stretched nearly five miles from North Adams to Florida, Ma., a small wooded village tucked away in the Western Berkshire hills. It was the last great barrier separating the Berkshires from Boston to the east, and New York and the other boom towns to the west.

The steam engines are gone now, replaced by blue and white B&M diesels, and there are longer train tunnels in both the United States and Europe. Triple-decked transport cars stacked with new automobiles ride where carloads of grain and soot-covered travelers once rode. There is an asphalt road crossing the tracks.

But the tunnel itself hasn't changed much in the past century, and neither has the Thanksgiving day tale that took 24 years, $21 million, and 195 lives to finish telling.

STATE SENATOR Sylvander Johnson was thankful on Thanksgiving day 1873. As chairman of the Hoosac Tunnel Committee, he had fought long and hard in the Massachusetts state legislature.

Sylvander persisted, and on Nov. 27, he followed 600 voters into the gaping mouth of the tunnel. They waited silently in the dark, many of them held flickering lanterns. A few moments later the roar of 160 pounds of nitroglycerine rumbled through the tunnel. Johnson, at the head of the group became the first man to pass through the tunnel. Side-stepping puddles of icy water, he bowed his head momentarily, and gave thanks.

This was the end of a long and hard fought struggle to pierce the natural wall which had isolated the Berkshires since the days of the first settlers.

The idea was not a new one. As early as 1825 the state legislature had grappled with the idea of blasting a tunnel through Hoosac mountain. Because this was still the age of canal travel, many planners wanted to use the tunnel as part of a canal between Boston and the Erie Canal, which opened that same year. The idea was scrapped by a state commission in 1828. The railroad industry was leaving its infancy. The decision was made: trains.

But the tunnel was not well received by all. All over the nation, cynics scoffed at the idea, and accused Berkshire politicians of having "tunnel on the brain." Judge Oliver Wendell Holmes observed that theeend of the millenium and the completion of the tunnel would probably coincide.

Others, convinced the project would only bring prosperity to the region, staunchly voiced their approval. Said one writer in Scribners magazine "It is a clear announcement that New England does not intend to be left out in the cold." Amidst the verbal bantering, work began on the tunnel in 1848 — a 20-year delay. It was indicative of what was to follow.

Off the wall

By MICHAEL SIMONS
Collegian Staff

There's more to read at the library than just the books.

The ancient art of graffiti, defined by the dictionary as the writing or painting of words or pictures on rocks or walls is definitely not a lost art at UMass. A white wall is the graffitiist's dream and the UMass library is a dream made a reality, 26 floors, two separate staircases and a long winding white concrete wall.

Taking a walk down the 26 flights, a person can learn many different and informative things. For instance, not many students would want to live at the library, but according to the walls, Luke Skywalker, Darth Vader, Star Trek, Star Wars, Spike Jones, the Beatles, Space 1999 and the rock group Kiss live there.

The following was found on just one side of the staircase walls along with countless references of who does what to whom sexually and with what animate and inanimate object.

Philosophy: "The work will wait while you show the child the rainbow, but the rainbow won't wait while you do the work."

Opinionated: "Gays should be shot."

Thoughtful: "I think therefore I am, does that mean that trees aren't."

Variations on a theme: "To do is to be-Camus."

"To be is to do-Sartre."

"Do be do be do-Sinatra."

"Be a good dobie-Miss Jean."

"Yabba Dabba Do-Flintstone."

"What do you do-Frampton."

Political: "Fred Harris in '76."

Angry: "Education kills; go to UMass live forever."

Definitions: "Copulation-the number of police officers in any metropolitan statistical area."

Commentary: "Free Patty Hearst! No money down, innocence not required."

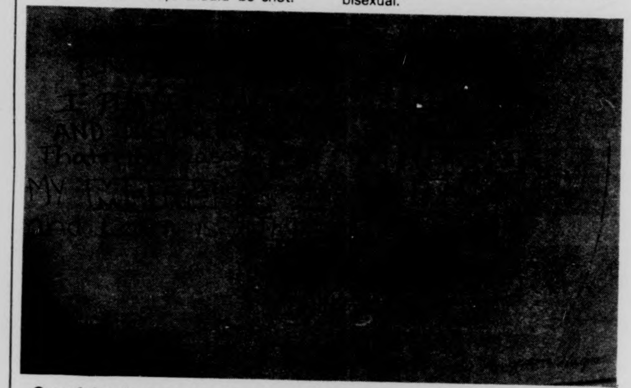
Star Trek Trivia: "Kirk: Liberty and freedom have to be more than just words. — 'The Omega Ring'." Underneath that was written, "Who writes this stuff?" Below that, "People who like Star Trek, I imagine. Does that sound reasonable to you — TWIT."

Anger: "I exist dammit."

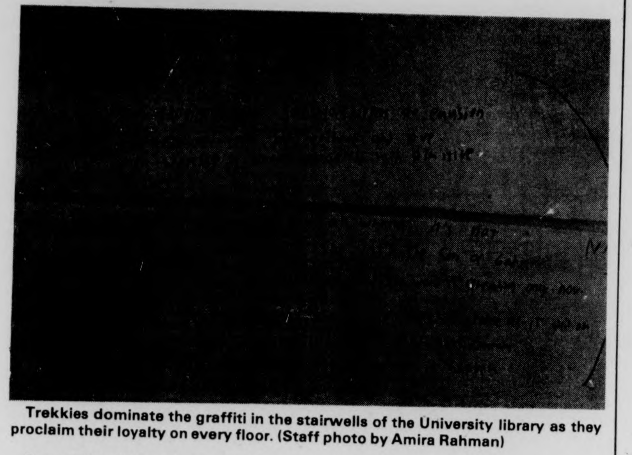
Local jokes: "I made it with Sylvia Gottlieb."

Politics: "Bugs Bunny is really Ted Kennedy in disguise."

Informitive: "Earthworms are bisexual."



One of the cleaner examples of graffiti is on the 12th floor of the library. (Staff photo by Amira Rahman)



Trekkies dominate the graffiti in the stairwells of the University library as they proclaim their loyalty on every floor. (Staff photo by Amira Rahman)

Puns: "What fish has two knees? Two knee fish."

Wisdom: "Death is nature's way of telling you to slow down."

Aristotolian logic: "A man is a king, a king is a ruler, a ruler is 12 inches. Do you still think you're a man?"

Religious commentary: Hare Krishna ain't you cute, with shaved off hair and orange suit. I beckon you with a silver coin and then I kick you in the groin."

Dynasty: "Jon was here 11-8-75; Jon was here again 3-6-76; Another Jon was here 6-10-76; Still another 5-1-77"

Informative: "Don't use elevator two, it sounds like it's about to go."

Regrets: "I loved Connie, why I don't know."

Reporting: "Sylvan is a gay hangout (Suite-ees)".

There's even advertising: "This parrot is dead. Watch Monty Python on Wednesday nights on channel 2 Boston at 9:30, Tuesday nights 10, channel 57."

One person to whom the graffiti is neither interesting or amusing is George Wright, deputy associate director of Public Service at the library. "We've asked the Physical Plant for a cleaning and painting, but they say there's no effective way of handling it."

Wright explained, "A great deal of graffiti started the first year the library was in operation when the elevators couldn't be called on every floor. That created great frustration levels.

"Graffiti breeds graffiti," Wright said. He told how he once caught a graffitist in the act and had a long argument because he couldn't convince the graffitist he was doing wrong, since there was so much there already.

To alleviate the problem, Wright said the Physical Plant is investigating the cost of getting relatively graffiti free surface such as tile. "My boss is also contemplating the idea of talking with the art department and having a competition to make decorative things to put on the walls."

Asked what irritated him most about the walls, Wright said, "One thing that irritates me are those who write messages to their friends in magic marker like 'Joe I'm on the 16th floor.' Magic marker is difficult to remove from the concrete walls."

One other thing that irks Wright! "If I catch that guy who does all the Star Trek stuff, I'll put him in orbit."

Women's Health Series

Sex-related diseases on the increase

By JULIE MELROSE
Collegian Staff

This is the ninth in a weekly series of articles on women's health care.

Sexually Transmitted Diseases, which include gonorrhea, syphilis, herpes genitalis and a variety of less common disorders, are occuring more and more frequently in this country as sexual morals change.

Many STD's present particular problems to women, in whom recognizible symptoms are less likely to appear than in men.

The two most common STD's are syphilis and gonorrhea (the nation's number one epidemic). These diseases are transmitted via mucous tissue. Infection is possibly orally, genitally and anally, and can therefore be contracted through homosexual as well as heterosexual contact.

Eighty per cent of women with gonorrhea show no symptoms, so it is important for a woman who believes she may have been exposed to the disease to inform her physician, and specify the regions she wishes to have tested.

When symptoms of gonorrhea do appear in women, they may include a thick, pus-like discharge which is yellowish-green in color and a low backache. In a rectal infection, there is sometimes an anal mucous discharge, blood or pus in the feces or a burning pain in the anus. Infection of the throat is sometimes characterized by a mild common sore throat.

The early stages of syphillis are usually characterized by the appearance of a red bump about the size of a pea which breaks open and becomes a rounded open sore with raised hardened edges. Such a sore (called a chancre) can appear anywhere on the body where contact is made. It will usually appear on the genitals, around the anus or mouth, or in the anus.

A chancre may be hidden deep within a woman's genitals. As it is usually painless, and it may go unnoticed. A woman may discover it if she examines herself with a mirror and speculum.

It is important that a woman who believes she may have been exposed to one of these diseases receive prompt medical attention. Untreated venereal disease can result in such complications as sterility, arthritis and heart disease. Syphilis in a pregnant woman can cause serious damage to the fetus. Advanced symphlis in a woman or man can cause death.

Judy Sharpe, a public health nurse who works at University Health Services on a part-time basis, describes her prime concerns to be the detection, prevention, and control of communicable disease. Her responsibilities on campus include case-finding, investigation, education, interviewing, counseling and testing.

Sharpe is a major resource for UMass students who have suspected or confirmed STD's, or wish to obtain information about them. This is her description of the routine procedure followed when a student is seen at UHS for venereal disease.

"A student will receive a test for a sexually transmitted disease if s-he requests it or if the medical practitioner examining the patient believes it to be in order. It is advisable for a student who has numerous sexual partners or has contact with someone with many sexual partners to request a check for STD's as part of the regular physical examination.

"An STD check involves simple swab or blood tests which are not painful. There is a 48-hour incubation period on the culture, so the student must call the health center for results in a couple of days. If the results are positive, the patient will be medically treated, and may wish to meet with me."

Sharpe's office, Room 151 of the UHS Outpatient Clinic, is near the pharmacy. The room is set apart from the other medical offices, so students have privacy when they speak with her.

"One of the most important parts of my job is urging students with diagnosed STD's to inform their sexual partners. I realize this may be difficult for them, so I always offer to contact the partners in strict confidentiality and simply inform them that they have been exposed to an STD and may want to seek medical attention," said Sharpe.

"If we receive word that a UMass student has been exposed to a diagnosed STD, or if they come to us with that information, we routinely begin medical treatment. This puts the patient at ease as well as assuring that any infection they may have contracted is cured," said Sharpe.

Sharpe urges students to feel free to call her, make an appointment or simply walk in during her office hours, which are Mondays 8:30 a.m. - 5 p.m., Tuesdays and Thursdays 1 to 5 p.m., and Fridays 8:30 a.m. - 12:30 p.m. She says she will also respond promptly to any notes or messages she receives. She stresses that a student need not be suffering from an STD to speak with her. All interviewing and counseling she does is strictly confidential.

Attitudes toward STD's are changing. Having more than one sexual partner is becoming morally acceptable. But consequences of that behavior must be dealt with realistically. Increased incidence of STD's is such a consequence.

STD's are easily transmittable, but they are also easily treatable. Gonorrhea and symphllis are dangerous only if left untreated. The current epidemic proportion of venereal disease is a perfect example of the way in which we short-circuit our own well-being by adopting attitudes that prevent us from using health resources even when they are easily available.

Put 'em up, turkey

By CINDY YOUNG
Collegian Staff

The UMass campus will become a virtual ghost town this weekend, as the majority of students are headed home for their annual holiday celebrations.

Thanksgiving falls upon the fourth Thursday in November, and it is an occasion on which we give thanks for our health and happiness. Students give special thanks for the holiday break given to them before the onslaught of finals.

The holiday brings together long lost friends and relatives in the traditional Thanksgiving feast. Tables are adorned with steaming vegetables and cranberry sauce, and the smell of homemade pies hang in the air. The most important and traditional dish is the turkey itself.

The turkey is the king of the domesticated fowls. It has a majestic appearance and its plumage is really quite beautiful, not to mention the savory character of its flesh. It is rather sad that the current denotation of the work "turkey" has become derogatory.

It is a common impression that the holiday fowl had originated in Turkey and that is how it received its name. It was also thought the name was derived from the call of the female, which by a stretch of the imagination sounds like, "Turk, Turk." In actuality, the turkey received its name at the time of its importation into England, when all merchants were known as turkey merchants.

Turkeys are a big business, and the wholesalers are really keeping busy this year. If you are staying in the Amherst area, and plan to adorn your table with your own "bird," perhaps you would like to check into area poultry farms. The Feathered Friends Farm is located on Loudville Rd. in Westhampton, and the Owen's Poultry Farm and Snow's Bobbin Hollow Poultry Farm are located in Amherst.

Eat hearty and enjoy your holiday! Only 33 more shopping days 'til Christmas!

Rhetoric classes to stay large

By MARCIA MURPHY
Collegian Staff

Although a student group plans to continue pressing for smaller classes, rhetoric will maintain an average of 22 students for the spring semester according to John Hunt, assistant to the provost for special programs.

Efforts have been made by 48 of the 80 rhetoric teaching assistants to limit class size to 20 so that "students have a better opportunity to practice speaking skills in class and weekly writing can be responded to by instructors who work a reasonable amount of hours," according to a petition to the administration.

The petition also proposes $3,600 as compensation for the teaching of two sections per academic year.

Hunt said "budget limitations" prohibit the hiring of more rhetoric instructors and the classes will continue to average 22 students for at least three years.

A meeting to discuss this issue was called last Friday but no students attended, probably because "of the inconvenient time and not enough awareness of it," according to Hoffman.

Another meeting is scheduled next week to discuss the overall quality and curriculum of rhetoric along with the current issue of class size.

This semester's rhetoric program consists of 40 sections with less than 20 students, 55 with 20-22, 82 with 23-25, and 27 with 25 or 26.

The rhetoric program, intended primarily for freshmen, gives preference to them and seniors and available vacancies are filled by sophomores and juniors.

Hunt said the exemption process will be available next semester for upperclassmen and he assures seniors that they will have "no trouble getting rhetoric" in order to meet graduation requirements.

A letter from the Student Organizing Project has been circulating around campus urging students to support efforts to limit rhetoric classes to 20 students.

Sue Hoffman, a SOP member, said, "because of the nature of the rhetoric program, more than 20 students in a class makes the quality of the instruction go down.

"It is a matter of establishing a maximum class size," Hoffman said.

Computer didn't delay phone book

By BRAD GOVERMAN
Collegian Staff

The associate director of management over computer systems in Whitmore yesterday said neither computer programming nor the running of the computer program was responsible for delaying the distribution of the student telephone directories.

The statement from Oldham H. Brooks came in response to a Collegian page one story yesterday that blamed the delay of the phonebooks on "computer malfunction."

The story stated that according to Jay Martus, who was in charge of publishing the directories, the telephone books were delayed because of the same computer malfunction which caused the housing crisis.

But Brooks said the computer programming did not precipitate the housing crisis either.

Yesterday's report stated that according to Martus the computer program responsible for room assignments lost 500 students when the computer tape stopped running and belched the overflow onto another tape.

The overflow tape was then misplaced and not located until after room assignments had been completed.

In an internal letter to Brooks, Martus called the reporting "erroneous," and retracted by saying, "The computer goof-up did not precipitate the crisis." Martus also added that the 500 names lost was one of many reasons the housing error occurred.

A very unique English teacher

By PATTI ROSENBERG
Collegian Staff

Jules Chametsky is as far from a stereotypical old fashioned English teacher as a Yugoslav university (at which he has taught) is from an ivy-covered U.S. college.

One is first struck by Chametsky's wooly voice and hair but his insights and observations are anything but that. As a founder and former editor of the Massachusetts Review as well as a professor here and in Europe for more than 20 years, Chametsky might be expected to be mourning, like many of his contemporaries, "the lost art of effective communication."

He is down-to-earth in response to questions about the much publicized decline of academic standards in the 1970's, reminiscing about a course he taught at a university in Minnesota (it had open admissions) twenty-five years ago and was sarcastically called "Bonehead English." He also mentioned that City College in New York, which he attended, had once required Latin. And if that had still been the case when he applied, "I wouldn't have gotten in. I'm grateful that they lowered standards."

He points out that there were "very good" students at UMass when he came here two decades ago and there are very good students here now. He offers an estimate that "out of 20,000 students here, there are probably 2,000 who are as good as any students anywhere in the country. It's only 10 per cent but it's a lot of people," he continues. "Most first class colleges don't have that many in the whole college."

He concludes, "Ever since I entered school, people have said standards have declined. From the minute I got into college. Then I went to graduate school, then I came here. They're always telling me the standards have gone down. Maybe they have." The half-laugh, half-snicker that follows demonstrates how seriously he takes that possibility.

Although, of course, he considers the state of university education important, he notes that "the questions are much broader than that finally.... we get hung up on these things as though they are the fundamental real issues." He speaks of a "crisis in capitalism of tremendous dimension all over the world" and points to significant factors like severe under- and unemployment, rising aspirations (particularly in the third world), and shrinking resources (which he says he always been felt in most of the world but hasn't shaken the United States as much until recently.)

In this context, administrative strategies that pad math and science programs and cut back liberal arts departments become "holding actions and window-dressing. It's a way of keeping the status quo, finally, in the name of populism." At the same time, because "we're all hemmed in by the economic realities," even resistance to beauracratic policies like that and demands for continued quality liberal arts programs "takes off in the clouds somewhere and doesn't face what's going on."

Chametsky says he's "for liberal arts because it's a way of giving you the equipment to see through the mystification of experience. You train people to add up columns of figures and they think they're in touch with reality."

But he also very much emphasizes that he doesn't "disdain" someone wanting to acquire practical expertise. "People have a right to expect some kind of a job, decent and commensurate with their training," Chametsky says.

The opportunities are not there for artists or classical scholars. "Ultimately, what's being encouraged in the job market is a war of each against each. There's always a job for the best. So you knock yourself out but by definition that means the majority of people are not going to have jobs.... So should we teach freshman English?

"Of course," he immediately answers himself, "But that alone is not the answer. We're in a tough spot." Over and over again one hears him allude to the impossibility and elusiveness of solutions, the craziness and desperation of the situation.

"Things that are really worthwhile are not honored. People are miserable. Things are wasted beyond belief. Whether it's natural resources or human resources. If there's one characteristic of our culture it's waste," he says.

Sooner than eventually, he suggests, we will be forced to acknowledge what our priorities have been. And then we will have to re-order them.

Changes in school lunches don't satisfy parents

By LOUISE BRAUFMAN
Collegian Staff

Changes being made in Amherst Public School lunches are not enough to satisfy some parents.

Beginning Dec. 1, chef's salad will be served as an alternative entree to the traditional lunch at Mark's Meadow School. Also, more fresh fruits, vegetables and nuts will be served.

Parents, Yellow Sun Natural Food Co-op managers and the head dietitian of Amherst Public Schools met Friday at Mark's Meadow to discuss some alternatives to the kinds of lunches the school now serves to its pupils.

Nancy Kerr, manager of Amherst's Yellow Sun Food Co-op, suggested that Rita Burnett, the head dietitian for Amherst Public Schools consider buying sugarless granola from Yellow Sun. Burnett said she was open to the idea.

Parents who are not satisfied with present school lunches should let the school administration know.

Another meeting will take place to discuss progress. The date will be announced by Pat Mandle-Wynn, Mark's Meadow parent coordinator, in the memo, the school newsletter.

Some parents said they believe the present luncheon menu is too high in white sugar, chemical additives and white flour. A few parents said they have read studies that link behavior problems, poor health and tooth decay in children to diets similar to public school lunches.

"I think sweets are being used as a bribe," said Margaret Reeve, a parent at the meeting.

These are samples from the school menu of Wednesday, Nov. 9, 1977: "fruit cocktail, pepperoni pizza, lettuce w-dressing, choc. cake w-white icing".

Representing the Yellow Sun, Kerr said, "We're not here to argue, we're here to work together". She explained ways to get alternative, efficient protein from careful combinations of fresh fruits, vegetables dairy products and nuts.

Burnett said: "I'm open to learning." She then described many obstacles that make changes difficult.

Two hundred eleven children eat school lunches at Mark's Meadow. Only three persons, paid minimum wages serve the children. For insurance reasons, parents are not allowed to assist in any preparation or serving of food. Burnett said she believes it would take a gradual education and retraining of her staff to change recipes.

Money is a major obstacle preventing change. "We get government commodity food — I cannot do without it," said Burnett. She said the cafeteria receives $7,617 worth of food for $700.

The crux of the matter, as UMass nutrition professor, Virginia Beal explained, is the government attempts to meet three needs through the school lunch program. Among the things she said are "agricultural surplus needs, all diner's needs and welfare program standards." Beal said she thinks it will be hard to change much until Congress decides.

The meeting ended with refreshments, containing all natural ingredients, provided by the Yellow Sun.

Mandle-Wynn said, "The general feeling of the meeting was positive because a first big step had been taken — a discussion, trying to keep the main goal in mind — meeting the needs of the children's health".

★ Tunnel

thankful on Thanksgiving day 1873. Hardened by years of death after death, accident after accident, they gathered in small huts and cabins, which sprung up around the work sites. A blend of Italians, French-Canadians, English and Irish, they had long since accepted the deaths of their husbands and fathers.

After a time they became so used to reports of disaster there was no frenzy, no wild displays of emotion. Along with the other ragged immigrants, they would silently watch the men take the battered body from the excavation, and pray it was not a loved one.

In 1867 fire broke out in the powderhouse of the central shaft, and word quickly raced back to the shanty town that 13 miners were trapped underground. Rescuers boarded an elevator to make the descent into the shaft, but to no avail. A few moments later an underground explosion blew the elevator into pieces, along with the insides of the shaft. These were a handful of the 195 deaths.

Their effort was enormous. They took 1.9 million tons of rock from the tunnel. They put in 20 million bricks. They carved a tunnel 20 feet high, 425 feet wide, and 25,031 long.

HELTON SWAZEY was thankful on Thanksgiving day 1873. He was alive. Swazey, a not-too-responsible assistant to one of the many scientists working on the project, very nearly became a victim of technology.

"Hell," by most contemporary accounts, was a mild-mannered young man most of the time. Except when he drank. One December night Hell received a desperate call for more nitroglycerin at the Florida mouth of the tunnel. He consented to wrap the "soup" in blankets and flannel (to prevent it from freezing), load the bundle into the back of his buggy, and deliver it on the way to a dance he planned to attend with his girl friend.

Chilled by the bitter cold, Hell's girlfriend insisted upon using the protective blankets for warming herself. Off came the blankets, exposing the explosive to the freezing air. Hell warmed himself with pulls from his jug.

By the time the couple reached the dance hall, Hell was drunk. So drunk, he became so boisterous that he was heaved from the dance hall into a snowbank. It was then, the tale goes, that Hell remembered the nitroglycerin.

Enraged, Hell returned to the inside of the hall laden with the frozen jugs of nitro and began heaving them at his tormentors, intent on having his revenge. Amazingly, the jugs did not explode, and Hell fell sleeping into a nearby doorway.

The next morning Hell's boss discovered him lying in the snow. He quickly realized the importance of the mishap: unstable nitroglycerin was harmless when frozen. Nitroglycerin is still shipped frozen today.

There were other technological problems. Huge imported boring machines were used — with no success. Under favorable conditions,workers could chip away 60 feet per month with hammer and chisel. Black powder was ineffectual and dangerous. Foreign-made pneumatic air drills were used with no success. Yet the digging went on for the next 24 years.

Finally, on Feb. 9, 1875, at four o'clock in the afternoon, a smoke-belching steam engine carrying 125 revelers roared through the tunnel into North Adams. The two gangs of workmen, working towards each other from opposite ends of the tunnel had done their work well. The error between the two paths was five-sixteenths of an inch.

Florida became a boom town itself, and trading prospered in the valley. North Adams experienced a similar boom. Five different railroad companies set up terminals.

THE OLD MEN, the couples, and the young boys are thankful on Thanksgiving 1977, though they will probably not say so. Each day the old men, the trainwatchers, wait for the morning and afternoon runs. The young boys still place pennies on the tracks, then stand back and watch as the passing trains flatten them wafer-thin. And the couples still walk hand in hand into the damp, dark tunnel, listening for the low rumble of the trains in the distance. The trains have not stopped running.

Washington and Saudi Arabia key to salvaging hopes for Mideast peace

BEIRUT, Lebanon (UPI) — Washington and oil-rich Saudi Arabia emerged yesterday as the key to stemming fierce Syrian attacks on Egyptian President Anwar Sadat and salvaging hopes for Middle East peace talks, diplomats said.

Jordan's information minister, Adnan Abu Odeh, praised Sadat's trip in what he said were unoffical remarks. But that apparently placed two of the three main Arab "confrontation" states bordering Israel on a conciliatory course with the Jewish state.

Syria found itself the odd man out.

The superpower influence of Washington and the clout of Riyadh's oil riches represented the sole hope of keeping Damascus from coming out swinging, diplomats in Beirut believed.

Arab radicals pressured Syria to join in a "rejection front" that would set tough conditions for any Middle East settlement and would almost surely torpedo moves to reconvene the Geneva conference and bring on a fifth Arab-Israeli war, the diplomats said.

Success for U.S. or Saudi moves to mollify Syria were seen as dependent on convincing Damascus and the Arab world that Sadat had won concessions in his still-secret weekend talks with Israeli Prime Minister Menahem Begin.

That, diplomats said, would allow the Syrians to regain a moderate course without losing credibility.

Reports from Washington said President Carter sent a message to Syrian President Hafez Assad. U.S. embassy officials and sources in the presidential palace both declined comment on the reports. But an embassy spokesman confirmed "high-level contacts" between Washington and Damascus.

The diplomats believed these contacts could contain an assurance that some Israeli concessions were made or a plea to Syria to soften its attacks on Sadat while Washington pressed for concessions after the fact.

However, late last night Syria joined with the Palestine Liberation Organization in condemning Sadat, calling his peace mission to Israel "treason."

The official Damascas radio urged the Egyptian army and people to overturn Sadat's virtual non-aggression pact with Israel that resulted from his weekend talks with Begin.

Jordan's Premier Mudar Badran, in Damascus for talks with Assad, was thought to be pressing for a more moderate Syrian stand. But diplomats believed Washington's superpower status and sway with the Israelis, and Riyadh's oil money made U.S. and Saudi moves crucial.

The Saudis have been bankrolling both Egypt and Syria — wracked by economic troubles following the costly 1973 Middle East war and, in Syria's case, last year's Lebanese civil war.

Saudi Arabia, Beirut diplomats said, wants to preserve a semblance of Arab unity and head off moves toward a radical — probably pro-Soviet — alliance grouping Syria, states like Libya and Iraq, and Palestinian guerrilla groups and setting down strict, non-negotiable guidelines for any Middle East settlement.

Normal life resumes in Israel with an afterglow of hope

JERUSALEM (AP) — Egyptian flags began to come down over Jerusalem yesterday. Israel dismantled the largest security apparatus it ever constructed to protect a visiting dignitary. And life was returning to normal, leaving an afterglow of hope for the future.

"The whole thing was like a dream," said one housewife. "I can hardly believe he was ever here."

As the signs of Israel's welcome for Egyptian President Anwar Sadat disappeared, the country's leaders were doing some hard thinking. Prime Minister Menahem Begin planned to convene his cabinet Thursday to report on his talks with Sadat and perhaps to consider his call on Israel to take "hard and drastic decisions."

Israelis were left breathless by the 44-hour visit which Sadat said he "can never forget," the incredible sight of an Egyptian president heartily shaking hands with Begin and calling him "my friend," Sadat joking and trading tributes with "that old lady," former Prime Minister Golda Meir, and taking bows before a wildly applauding Israeli parliament.

"I never thought I'd live to see the day," said one young Israeli. "I certainly never thought Golda would."

Shops took the "Welcome President Sadat" signs from their windows and Israelis put away their small flagstaffs with Egyptian and Israeli flags.

The King David Hotel, where Sadat spent two nights, lowered its Egyptian flag as did the president's house. But many others still fluttered over the streets.

"We're in no hurry to take them down," a city spokesman said.

The visit opened a national debate over whether Israel was obliged to respond to Sadat's peace gesture, and how.

"The psychological climate between Israel and Egypt has changed from the roots," said an editorial in Haaretz, a leading independent Hebrew newspaper.

But Haaretz disagreed with Sadat's statement that he had already done "my share in my decision to come here," and that it was now up to Israel. "This places too heavy a burden on us," it said.

"Anyone who belives Israel should show more flexibility should demand the same from the Egyptian president," the newspaper said in reference to Sadat's refusal to budge on the hard issues of Israeli withdrawal from occupied lands and a state for the Palestinians.

Polaroid leaves S.Africa

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (UPI) — Polaroid Corp. has halted shipment of its products to South Africa and ended its relationship with a distributor in Johannesburg, apparently becoming the first American firm to pull out of the country, it was confirmed yesterday.

Polaroid had agreed in 1971 to terminate sales to the government because of company objections to the use of Polaroid films in identity passbooks carried by South African blacks.

The action comes after Polaroid confirmed a report its distributor, Frank & Hirch, had secretly sold its products to the South African government in violation of the 1971 agreement.

Polaroid had discontinued all sales to the government to protest South African apartheid, but continued to offer its cameras and film on the general market in that country.

"In 1971 when the question arose as to whether it was appropriate for Polaroid to continue to sell to a distributor in South Africa, we examined the issue carefully. We abhor the policy of apartheid and seriously considered breaking off all business with South Africa," the company said in a statement released yesterday.

Polaroid sent Hans Jensen, company export sales manager, and an accountant to Johannesburg to investigate allegations of secret sales last week.

"We were presented on Wednesday Nov. 16, with information which suggested that Frank & Hirsch, Ltd., the independent distributor of Polaroid products in South Africa, has been selling film to the government of South Africa in violation of a 1971 understanding," the statement said. "That understanding stipulated that the distibutor refrain from selling any Polaroid products to the South African government.

"As a consequence of this new information, we initiated that same day an investigation from which we have now learned that Frank & Hirsch has not fully conformed to the understanding with regard to sales to the government," the statement said.

"With termination of this distributorship in South Africa, we do not plan to establish another."

Polaroid said Jensen said he found evidence of secret transactions involving Polaroid products between the distributorship and the government. Polaroid sales to Frank & Hirsch were estimated his year at between $3 and $4 million.

Two oil companies plead guilty to illegal activities

By United Press International

Tax tangles and illegal campaign contributions brought in heavy fines yesterday for two major oil companies, both of which eased the potential blow through plea bargaining.

Gulf Oil Corp. was fined $36,000 after pleading guilty in Pittsburgh to four felony counts of illegally paying the vacation expenses of an Internal Revenue Service supervisor investigating the firm's tax returns and campaign contributions.

In Tulsa, Okla., Phillips Petroleum Co. drew a $30,000 fine for conspiring to make illegal political campaign contributions and for filing fraudulent income tax returns over a four-year period.

"We want to stand up as good corporate citizens and get this behind us," Gulf attorney Sherwin Markman told U.S. District Judge William Knox in entering the "unconditional" guilty plea.

Knox, noting Gulf had saved the government much money by agreeing to the plea bargaining arrangement, reduced the maximum $10,000 fine on each count by $1,000 and fined the firm a total of $36,000, plus court expenses.

"There has got to be a message given not only to Gulf but to other corporations that might be doing the same thing," he said. "We just can't approve of conduct of this type."

Chief U.S. District Judge Allen E. Barrow fined Phillips a maximum $10,000 for raising funds in overseas accounts and using the money for illegal campaign contributions in state and federal elections.

He also fined Phillips the maximum $5,000 each on the four tax counts.

The sentencing followed a plea bargaining agreement involving attorneys for Phillips and the Justice Department. Phillips pleaded guilty to the conspiracy charge and no contest to the tax charges.

Gulf and two of its officials were indicted June 15 on charges of paying for four vacations of Cyril J. Neiderberger, former IRS supervisor in Pittsburgh.

Fred Standefer, vice president for tax administration, and Joseph Fitzgerald, manager for federal tax compliance, face trial Nov. 28.

Niederberger, chief of a team of IRS agents who audited Gulf's income tax returns for 1959 through 1970, was convicted in U.S. District Court in February of illegally accepting gratuities from Gulf. He received five years' probation and a $5,000 fine.

Statehouse dome damaged by anti-abortionist

BOSTON (UPI) - Criminal charges were filed in Boston Municipal Court Monday against a Lynn, Mass. man accused of gluing an anti-abortion banner to the golden dome of the Massachusetts Statehouse in August Abortion advocate William Baird was among those who filed charges against anti-abortion activist Charles Swain.

The professional billboard glue Swain used to gum the banner to the dome has caused "permanent damage" to the structure, which still bears a tarnished spot where the banner had been, Baird.

Swain was charged with malicious destruction of public property and criminal.

Baird said it was "outrageous" for the anti-abortion forces to use the capitol dome as a vehicle to promote their cause. He called on the sponsors of the anti-abortion bill, which Swain used the banner to promote, to speak out publicly against the action

Women's benefits studied

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Secretary Joseph Califano has appointed a government study team to determine how well women fare in Social Security benefits and to suggest necessary adjustments, the Department of Health, Education and Welfare said Tuesday.

"I want to be sure women are treated fairly under the Social Security program," Califano said in a memorandum released in response to an announcement by a caucus of 16 women House members.

The caucus said last week that Califano would appoint a task force to study problems of discrimination in Social Security benefits.

Califano's Nov. 17 memorandum directed Social Security Commissioner James B. Cardwell to "gather facts, views and ideas on the treatment of women under Social Security."

Califano in his memo spelled out five areas he wanted studied:

—Treatment of married women who do not work in paid employment.

—Treatment of single workers.

—Protection for divorced women.

—Effect of remarriage on widows' benefits.

—Equity for individual workers versus protection for families.

The task force report should be finished by next Feb. 1, Califano said.

Working with Cardwell on the task force will be five women and three men.

Social Security retirement benefits last March, the latest date for which such information is available, were going to 17.3 million retired workers, including 9.5 million men and 7.8 million women.

The average benefits, rounded off to the nearest dollar, were $249 for a man and $197 for a woman. A Social Security spokesperson said the figures reflect earnings patterns while those men and women were working.

In 1975, for example, the median earning for a male worker was $8,250 and for a woman $3,755, the spokesperson said.

Nurse fired for report

HER SAY NEWS SERVICE — A nurse in Los Angeles County was fired after she refused to change her story about an incident of negligence at the hospital where she worked.

Nurse Cheryl Nichols entered Baldwin Park Hospital one day in early October and found a baby, apparently left for dead, on a counter in the nursery. Nichols said she discovered the baby was alive, though premature, and rounded up nurses and a doctor to care for it. The baby died anyway.

Nichols said after the incident she was approached by a hospital specialist, who asked her to change her account of the baby's death, leaving out details of where the baby was found.

Nichols refused, gave her story to a local television station, and was promptly fired by the hospital for "unauthorized disclosure of patient or hospital information," and "improper conduct."

A coroner's hearing on the infant's death has been set for November 29th. Nichols, in the meantime, said she will file suit against the hospital in connection with her firing.

O.S.U. students stage demonstration

HER SAY NEWS SERVICE — Ohio State University (OSW) students have staged a "demonstration of outrage" on the university campus to protest the recent rape and beating of a student by three men who believed the woman to be a lesbian.

The woman, who had been previously harassed and threatened by three male students, was attacked as she walked across campus by the same men.

The men allegedly took turns raping and beating her, and told her, "This is the way it should be, and you better watch yourself."

Over 400 demonstrators have demanded the Ohio School's administration provide financial support for rape prevention programs and begin freshperson education programs to demystify homosexuality.

Suit against CIA to be continued

HER SAY NEWS SERVICE — Women's Strike for Peace said the Justice Department has backed down on a move to throw out the group's suit against the C.I.A.

The pacifist group claims in the suit the agency had monitored its cables and opened its mail during the Vietnam War.

The Justice Department, in a surprise move this month, informed the group that the suit would be dismissed, allegedly because Women's Strike for Peace didn't meet the department's criteria for an "organization."

Lawyers for the pacifists, however, submitted documents obtained from the C.I.A.'s own files in which the agency described Women's Strike for Peace as a "bellweather organization".

The Justice Department's move to throw the case out of court was then, in the group's words, "terminated."

Dow rejects debate with Fonda

HER SAY NEWS SERVICE — The Dow Chemical Company said it has no plans — either nor or in the future — to debate with actor Jane Fonda.

The debate invitation was issued to Dow and Fonda by the Students' Association at Central Michigan University. The invitation came in the wake of Dow Chemical's announcement this month that all grants to the university will be suspended because of anti-big-business statements made in a speech given by Fonda at the university.

In the speech, Fonda accused a number of major U.S. corporations, including Dow chemical, of being greedy and corrupt. Shortly after the lecture, Dow sent a terse letter to the university informing it that all grants and aid would be suspended because Dow didn't want to support speeches given by "an avowed Communist sympathizer."

The university reportedly receives over $75,000 in aid from Dow annually.

Fonda, in the meantime, has accepted the debate invitation. Since the announced fund cutoff, she has also received invitations to speak from several other groups on the C.M.U. campus, including requests from both the sociology and anthropology departments.

Meany endorses J.P. Stevens suit

HER SAY NEWS SERVICE — A.F.L.-C.I.O President George Meany endorsed an anti-trust suit filed against the J.P. Stevens Company which accuses the textile firm of engaging in a conspiracy against union organizing at its southern plant.

The suit was filed last week in New York by the Amalgamated Clothing and Textile Workers, a 500,000-member union which has been trying to organize the Stevens plants for over 15 years.

The suit claims public officials and business leaders have conspired to restrain commerce and to support anti-union activities by Stevens in the southern towns where its 85 plants are located.

Nearly 90 per cent of the employees of the Stevens Company are women.

Committed woman ruled competent

HER SAY NEWS SERVICE — A North Carolina woman who was placed in a mental hospital involuntarily has been ruled mentally competent to decide whether or not she should have surgery for breast cancer.

Mary Jordan, committed to the hospital against her will by her husband, was notified six months ago that she had cancer in one of her breasts. Doctors in Dorothea Dix Hospital in Raleigh recommended surgery, and Jordan's husband, as her legal guardian, authorized the operation.

Jordan, however, did not take kindly to the idea, and refused to undergo the surgery. A lawyer acting on her behalf blocked the operation with a court order. Subsequently a jury of seven women and five men ruled Jordan was mentally competent to make decisions about her own medical treatment.

Conservatives condemn I.W.Y.'s use of federal funds to support ERA

WASHINGTON (UPI) — In a postscript to the National Women's Conference in Houston, the State Department said yesterday it is looking into charges the organizers of the gathering used the department's letterhead and franking privileges to attack conservative opponents, including the Mormon church.

Sen. Frank Church, D-Idaho, and Rep. Gunn McKay, D-Utah, himself a Mormon, said the department owed an apology as well as an explanation to the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

State Department spokesman Tom Reston said "the whole relationship" between the department and the National Commission on the Observance of International Women's Year "is now under review because of the questions raised. We are trying to ascertain the facts as to this franking privilege. We are having our lawyers look at it."

At issue is a six-page mailing from the IWY commission which organized the Houston conference with $5 million in federal funds. The "Summary Sheet of Press Reports on the Tactics of Radical Right Wing Groups," says:

"Press reports have identified the following groups engaged in attacks to subvert the purposes of Public Law 94- 167 (the Equal Rights Amendment) and the goals of the National Commission on the Observance of International Women's Year to carry out that law: Stop-ERA, Eagle Forum, The Ku Klux Klan, John Birch Society, the Mormon church, Citizen's Forum, Conservative Caucus, Coalition of Fundamentalist Chuches, and Right to Life."

The summary includes a statement on the Mormon Church attributed to former Rep. Bella Abzug, D-N.Y., and carries the inscription "Office of Public Affairs, Department of State", and the State Department's postage-free frank.

McKay said the commission has "abused its authority and turned the IWY movement into a federally funded lobbying effort in support of the Equal Rights Amendment."

Church told the department, "I find this type of mailing not only appalling, but inexcusable. I believe it is incumbent upon the Department of State to explain why its frank was allowed to be used for such a mailing, and why the department permitted government funds to be used for its production."

A statement read by Reston said the International Women's Year Commission, under the law by which Congress established it, "is entitled to such information, advice and services as may be useful to the fulfillment of the commission's functions" from any executive agency of the government.

ERA foe speaks in Illinois, as supporters continue vigil

SPRINGFIELD, Ill. (UPI) — Equal Rights Amendment foe Phyllis Schlafly, alarmed by indications ERA might pass the Illinois legislature because of reports that Illinois opposition has cost Chicago convention dollars, said yesterday the tactic is "outrageous."

"If there really has been a $15 million loss to hotels, which I don't believe," Mrs. Schlafly said, "those innocent people can surely sue. To deliberately cause economic harm is outrageous."

She spoke in the Capitol rotunda just yards from four women who continued a daily silent pro-ERA vigil.

ERA boosters said they were confident ERA can now pass because of the boycott. Rep. Alan Greiman, chief House ERA sponsor, was gauging preholiday absenteeism before deciding if he should force a showdown.

Greiman said there is no longer any doubt he has enough votes to push ERA through the House. The only problem is getting all supporters together at once. If ERA does clear the House, it must still win Senate approval to make Illinois the 36th of 38 states required for ratification. There was little chance, however, the Senate would take any action before next year.

Greiman called ERA for a test vote in June but it fell six votes shy of the extraordinary three-fifths, 107-vote margin Illinois legislative leaders have decreed it needs. The same three-fifths tally is required in the Senate.

Greiman had not planned to broach ERA again in the abbreviated fall veto session but changed his mind when he suddenly picked up "six or seven more votes" — enough, he said, for House passage. He planned to call for a vote "if I look around and see all the troops."

Most late converts, ERA boosters said, are Chicago Democrats. More than a dozen voted "no" or not at all in June but were reported to have been persuaded to switch to prevent more convention and tourist dollars from being diverted elsewhere.

Allen Goldhamer of the Chicago Conventions and Tourism Bureau says Chicago suffered a $1 million loss via canceled conventions during the past year and lost another $14 million in dropped future bookings.

Goldhamer said that amounts to 20 percent of annual business. He said most cancellations are by educational groups. He said they sent letters saying, "We love you dearly but our organization passed a resolution saying we cannot meet in a state that has not passed the Equal Rights Amendment."

Diane Greenholdt of the Illinois Women's Political Caucus said Chicago Democrats are being pressured by Chicago Mayor Michael Bilandic and Cook County Democratic Chairman George Dunne because the economic boycott is beginning to hurt.

FDA concludes that drinking during pregnancy might cause birth defects

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Food and Drug Administration has asked the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms to require labels on alcoholic beverages warning women that heavy drinking during pregnancy may cause birth defects in their babies.

In a letter dated Nov. 15 and released yesterday, Commissioner Donald Kennedy told bureau director Rex D. Davis, "Quite frankly, if the FDA retained jurisdiction over the labeling of alcoholic beverages, it would waste no time in commencing proceedings to require labeling warnings" for pregnant women.

"This is a problem not only for women who habitually abuse alcohol but also for those who consume alcohol in moderation but might occasionally imbibe more than two drinks a day," Kennedy said.

A spokesman for the Distilled Spirits Council said the scientific evidence is inconclusive regarding moderate drinkers. And he said the people whose babies would be harmed by socalled fetal alcohol syndrome are alcoholics for whom warning labels would be ineffective.

A spokesman for Davis, who was out of town yesterday, said the letter had been received and turned over to the general counsel's office for study.

An FDA spokesman said the agency agreed nearly 40 years ago to let the Treasury Department's alcohol bureau regulate alcoholic beverages to avoid the problems of two agencies overseeing the same product. The FDA since has tried to abrogate that agreement and require ingredient labeling on alcohol beverage containers. But it has been rebuffed by the courts.

Kennedy told the National Academy of Sciences last month he would like to require the pregnancy warnings on alcoholic beverages but conceded he lacked jurisdiction. The alcohol bureau spokesman said it is not clear whether the bureau would have legal authority to require such warnings.

The National Institute on Alcohol Abuse and Alcoholism warned the public last June that women who take more than two drinks a day during pregnancy risk giving birth to mentally retarded and physically deformed babies.

Dr. Ernest P. Noble, director of the institute, cited recent scientific evidence that both regular heavy drinking and occasional "binge drinking" are responsible for a variety of birth defects.

The most serious symptom associated with fetal alcohol syndrome is severe mental retardation. One study found that "the IQs of affected individuals average 35 to 40 points below normal," according to information circulated in the medical community by FDA and the Center for Disease Control.

Well, let's face it. Nobody goes to Grandmother's house anymore, and if they did, they would go in an orange Datsun B-210 with a rear window defroster.

Thanksgiving is worse than dull (and it is dull, just sitting around looking at your dull relatives while eating some helpless fowl that has had water pumped into it to increase the profit margin of some equally fattened meat packing plant owner), it is thoroughly depressing.

Think of how many turkey feathers (that will be keeping no turkey warm) have been spilled in the name of being "thankful." Well no thanks. I'd go for a vegetarian Thanksgiving if I had any interest whatsoever in putting down a turkey molded from soy meal and stuffed with ground lentils, but I don't.

And how appropriate that the dry stuff you hang up on your door is called "Indian corn," considering that ever since the first Thanksgiving many Americans have been most thankful for their great success at wiping the Native Americans off the map.

Once you get fully bummed out trying to carry on some semblence of a conversation with your drunk relatives, you can switch on the Thanksgiving Day parades and treat yourself to the collective inanities of Betty White, Bess Meyerson, Jack Lord, Jack Cassidy (he's dead, but his spirit returns once a yer to co-host with Arlene Francis) and Ed McMahon.

But don't change channels yet. Pro football is next, for which we can all be thankful. While you are finishing your cranberry sauce, these poor fools are beating themselves silly for more money than most of us will see in a decade of hard labor. When the game is over they remove their tape and throw up for several hours from the battering.

Thanksgiving is so boring that no one has thus far been able to commercialize it with any success. Just try setting up a booth where little kids can have their photo taken in the lap of a big turkey instead of Santa Claus. In addition, few people give gifts at Thanksgiving (which leads me to wonder what they could possibly be thankful for), making it extremely difficult to sell plastic battery-operated robots and similar items.

Round about Sunday evening you'll discover your pre-registration form in one of your notebooks, instead of at Whitmore where it was supposed to be today, and you'll recall that Monday's Collegian includes the final exam schedule. And then you'll remember that you're an English major planning to graduate in May with absolutely no job prospects.

And I can offer no ready cure for your despair. As for mine, well, last night was "Two Wild Turkey Drinks for the Price of One" night at the Blue Wall. Thank you.

Criticism, criticism, and nothing done

By PETER COX

Jimmy Carter has been criticized in recent months from nearly all quarters of the political spectrum for the job he is doing as president. Robert Vernon is disenchanted with the way Carter is dealing with the high unemployment rate among Blacks. Conservatives scorned the decision by the President to relinquish control of the Panama Canal to the Panamanians. And the Veterans are still smarting over the amnesty issue.

The press, reporting on these attacks, has been only too ready to formulate its own particular criticisms. The consensus of many political observers is that Carter bit off more than he could chew. He came into Washington as an outsider and tried to accomplish many difficult and cumbersome problems without first working through the political maze of special interests and power bases that are an unspoken rule of thumb for any new administration. Carter failed to stroke and thereby ruffled many an important feather; the back-lash of disgruntled congressmen, senators, and business leaders forced the President on the defensive and in some cases to shelve or delay executive programs (gov. reorganization, tax reform). The bottom line of the Carter Administration, many observers conclude, is that the President lacks organization and direction. His inexperience in working with Congress, at a time when Congress (recuperating from the imperial presidency of the Nixon Administration) is attempting to regain more power in domestic and foreign matters, is proving to be Jimmy Carter's downfall.

Is this an accurate or even a fair assessment? No, not entirely. Jimmy Carter's presidency up till now has had as many faults and difficulties as there are problems he is attempting to surmount. His extreme self-confidence has slowly been eroding as the new difficulties of Washington politics cannot be answered with the high pressure politics that Carter so effectively used in the Georgia legislature. He often fails to take deep enough consideration of a problem, for, once a decision of his has been made, he retreats when his position becomes precarious — his rash reasoning is insufficient to counter-attack his critics.

We could go on about the faults of this administration as the press has so exceptionally done, the Bert Lance affair, the ill-conceived human rights campaign; but consider for a moment the problems this man has inherited and the efforts he has made. If trying to achieve an arms treaty with the Soviet Union, establish a national energy program, readjust our foreign policy in Southern Africa after years of neglect and find permanent peace in the Mid-East, is trying to accomplish too much, to do the impossible, I can only say that impossible or not these problems must be faced.

Foreign policy is a field of opportunity where the participant who fails to act in response to a given situation makes a fatal mistake. This in part might explain, though not excuse, Carter's rashness. The events in Southern Africa and the Mid-East are irretrievable. Any responsible statesman must seize the opportunities that situations occasionally present to make a settlement or secure a treaty. Hesitation and miscalculation in foreign policy can have a devastating impact on a nation. I doubt the S.A.L.T. conferences can ever be on the back burner of any president's agenda.

Yet for many people our national interests and priorities are assumed to be identical with partisan politics and special interest. Nowhere is this so blatantly present than with Carter's relationship with Congress over the energy bill. Admittedly Carter's bill has weaknesses. For instance: what do we do about the inflation caused by deregulating natural gas, the damage to the environment if we switch to coal, or the potential unemployment increase in the auto industry if we tax gas guzzling cars? But Carter's plan was not so much as to present Congress with a finished package as it was to work out a package (a joint package with Congress perhaps) that would: 1. make this country relatively energy self-sufficient before the end of the century, 2. conserve as much fuel and reduce as much waste as possible, and 3. make whatever economic adjustments there are, fair and equitable.

> The bottom line of the Carter Administration, many observers conclude, is that the President lacks organization and direction. His inexperience in working with Congress, at a time when Congress (recouperating from the imperial presidency of the Nixon administration) is attempting to regain more power in domestic and foreign matters, is proving to be Jimmy Carter's down fall.

It seems Congress does not share the president's sense of urgency on these matters. Republicans have fought for full deregulation of natural gas so that oil companies may have added incentive to explore for new sources of oil. They seem to believe we can produce our way out of this energy crisis with little regard for conservation and the intolerable level of inflation deregulation would cause. Many Democrats on the other hand have killed Carter's gas tax and are fighting against the proposed tax on gas guzzling autos.

Granted, a Congressman's job is to represent and protect his constituency concerns. But the issues we are facing transcend lesser and in many cases selfish concerns (the oil lobby) toward a more immediate and awesome problem. One does not have to be an astute political analyst to see that if we continue importing oil in such tremendous quantities our whole economy will be entirely foreign oil-dependent by the late 1980's. I can thing of nothing closer to military and political subjugation short of totally occupying a foreign land, than controlling a modern industrial nation's source of energy. Yet this is an increasingly real possibility (U.S. imports 50 per cent of its oil needs, mostly from the Mid-East, up from 35 per cent in '73). Allowing partisan interests in Congress to prevent viable legislation from being passed is certainly a far greater offense on Congress' behalf than the disorganization and lack of direction that Carter has been criticized for.

President Carter does not have all the answers. He knows that and we know that. But he is one of the few people in Washington that is addressing very important issues and proposing intelligent and responsible programs (energy programs, S.A.L.T. proposals) for these issues. I see neither a Congressional energy program in the offering, nor anything in the business world of similar context. Whether the package the President offers is overwhelmingly accepted or not, we must act now with the interest of the country and the world in general, and with a sense of vision such that even though we may not predict future events, we can perhaps foresee the consequences of our actions as we undertake or do not undertake them now.

The booming economic era of the 50's and the 60's is over. I am neither an apologist for Carter or capitalism, but the simple fact is we can't afford the luxury of gross abuse of our resources. Federal programs that cannot justify their expenditures and a government in its benevolent attempts to create the "Great Society" have become so omnipotent and burdensome on their citizens that we are becoming helpless appendages of government bureaucracy. The give-me relationship people have with their government is slowly ending. Carter recognizes the limits of government and at the same time the necessity to face and solve problems within these narrow limits. We might do ourselves a favor by supporting the man (writing your congressman in support of the energy bill) rather than criticizing him and offering no alternatives of our own.

Sheep shifters should be ashamed

To the Editor:

Fun is fun but when it comes to the point where people have to destroy property and disrupt the order of things, I think it has gone a little bit too far. The specific incident that I'm referring to took place this past weekend. Someone felt that they had the right to go into the youngstock barn on campus and "rearrange" a few pens of sheep. This not only resulted in a few hours of unnecessary resorting of the sheep by the employees in the barn, but at this time of year we have newborn lambs and this "rearrangement" resulted in a separation of a few lambs from their mothers. These lambs could starve or get beat upon by strange sheep.

This is not the first case of people tampering with the animals kept here on campus. Animals have been lost because they have been let loose from the barn to roam all over campus and be attacked by dogs. There have also been incidents of people doing the same in the horse barn.

I thought that by the time people reached college, they were mature enough to know better than to pull pranks like these.

How to face an attacker

By JOAN LESTER

On Thursday, November 10, I was walking by the subway station at Grand Army Plaza in Brooklyn at 10 p.m. I saw a man and a woman coming out of the subway; the woman looked as if she was struggling against the man, who had his arm around her. I asked, Is everything all right?" He answered, "This is my woman." I was uneasy. They were going in the direction opposite from me, so I reversed direction and began to follow them. The man kept looking back at me.

After a third of a block, I said to the woman, "Are you OK?" She grimaced and shook her head no. The man was holding her tightly. He looked at me and said, "If you say anything, I'll kill you." I saw three men approaching about half a block away or a little closer. I yelled, quite loudly, "This woman needs help. Help this woman." They began to run toward us, the attacker released the woman who ran over in my direction, and suddenly one of the running men pulled out a gun, aimed it at the attacker and said, "I'm a policeman." A second man pulled out a walkie-talkie, they had the attacker against a wall, and in a minute or two one or more police cars were on the scene, and the attacker was hustled into the police car.

Meanwhile the woman had run to me, shaking and sobbing, saying, "thank you, thank you." I held her and I said (which I find one of the most amazing parts of the whole drama, in retrospect), "You are my sister."

In a few minutes the plainclothesmen came over and took her name, of which I have no memory, her age (27) and her address (somewhere in the Village). Before they took her with them I asked them to show us their ID to prove they were cops, and asked for a woman counselor for the woman who had just been attacked. She said that she had come off the subway and the man had grabbed her from behind. He had a knife and had cut her ear and was forcing her to go with him. (Where? We were one block from Prospect Park, so perhaps that was where he was going.) The first thing the police said when they came over to us was, "We are pretty sure this is the guy who did one hundred rapes in Brooklyn."

Among the many amazing things that occurred during that 20 or 25 minute episode was the fact that the cops spoke not one word directly to me. They didn't thank me for intervening, they didn't take my name as a witness, they did not acknowledge me, although I had my arms around the woman as they were asking her to tell them what had happened, and they did respond by showing their police badges when I asked them to. The whole thing was suddenly over when they took her away to their car, and I was left alone on the street, my heart pounding violently.

I want to make this event public for several reasons: first, people should know about a case where intervention DID WORK. The woman was probably saved from rape, other physical injury or murder. I was not hurt, and the attacker was captured. Although it was pure luck that two plainclothesmen were walking by at the exact instant I yelled, I think the attacker was preparing to run anyway, as soon as I yelled. I am pretty sure he released the woman as soon as I yelled, and he did not move toward me. Also, the third man who was approaching told me that as soon as he heard me yelling he had pointed his umbrella so the metal tip was directly out, indicating he was preparing to act.

Perhaps the attacker would not have been caught if the plainclothesmen weren't there, but probably the woman would have been released, and I would not have been hurt. I would definitely act the same way again in a similar situation, although I have had moments of terror simply thinking about the experience in the two days since it has happened.

Second, the woman involved played a great part in saving herself by struggling continuously against her attacker. If she had not been struggling so evidently, I would not have had the clue as to what was going on. Resistance was effective.

Third, women should know this happened since it occurred at a place and a time that most of us would have considered relatively 'safe': a busy, well-lit subway station and intersection at 10 p.m.

Fourth, it should be publicly stated that although the police were technically efficient, i.e., they accomplished their task of responding quickly and well and capturing someone who was in the midst of a violent crime, they were completely unsympathetic and unresponsive to the emotion of the woman involved. She was crying and shaking as they asked her to relate the events which had just taken place, and to give her personal data. They did not utter one 'personal' word to her, such as "I know you must be feeling...." They were completely impersonal. And they did not acknowledge the fact that a citizen had jeopardized herself to intervene in the crime, nor did they know that a crime had been committed against me (a direct threat on my life), since they didn't ask me anything.

I hope that I can trace the woman. We shared a profound moment. Her face, with her mouth stretched wide, exposing her teeth, her eyes enormous with fright, and her courage in continuing to struggle and to act on her own behalf by shaking her head when I asked her if she was all right, although he must've had the knife against her — all these images of her keep going through my mind, and it would be good if we could connect again, and perhaps put closure on the event.

There are other reasons too for wishing to reconnect. Perhaps she needs emotional or legal support to prosecute, and together we could search out women's groups which could give that support. Perhaps we could share our experience with other women and give them a feeling of strength, for after all, we, two women, did act in concert in a violent confrontation with a street attacker, both of us struggling (she physically and me verbally), and we were victorious. Acting together again, we might be able to turn that terribly frightening experience into a source of strength for ourselves and for other women.

Reforms in Syria

By WENDY STEARNS

Existing today in Syria are a minority of 4500 oppressed Jews. These people have constantly been harassed and denied their basic freedoms because of their Jewish identity. They live in secluded ghettos and must always remain within a four mile radius of their homes. They have to carry ID cards which mark their religious affiliation in bold red lettering. They are not allowed to emigrate, hold any government related jobs, or even attend public schools. When a Jew dies in Syria his property is turned over to the state.

In February 1977, Syrian President Assad issued a statement to the Syrian Army to lift some of these restrictions on the Jews. He said all Jews should be protected by the government. In an attempt to follow this through he wanted to bar discrimination, allow Jewish children to attend "separate but equal" parochial schools, ban Jewish curfews, and have the Jewish ID cards marked in black ink instead of red.

You might ask how well these reforms have been carried out. Although some conditions seem to have improved, the situation is still very bad. Jews are still barred from government related jobs, restricting from all traveling without special permission from the state, and denied emigration rights. Do you know that Syria is the only Arab country to deny Jews these rights today? Although Jewish parochial schools are allowed, their faculties' wages have been frozen, forcing many to resign. This limits any Jewish education.

Now you must be wondering why Assad even attempted to institute any changes. I spoke to Bruce Youdowitz, the Director of Jewish Community Relations in Springfield last week on the topic. Bruce theorizes that perhaps Assad is attempting to conform to Western pressures concerning the human rights crusade, or else perhaps he is using the Jews as puppets for future political negotiations. It seems to me that Assad is becoming overly concerned with public opinion. Whenever the issue of Syrian Jewry is brought out in the open, we see only the few "show" Jews, who are well off and enjoy equal rights. Syrian propaganda shows us how well Syria treats her people. Meanwhile two-thirds of the Jewish population live below the poverty line.

I'm not really sure what Assad's ulterior motives are. Maybe he is protecting the Jews to maintain a merchant class structure or for some form of political bargaining.

Unfortunately there is nothing we can really do to help our brethren in Syria. Bruce suggested that any strong outside pressures could actually be detrimental to the cause. I think Assad may be afraid of pressures from the U.S.S.R. and other Arab countries. Bruce pointed out that if Assad is removed from office the situation could regress to be even worse than before 1977.

All we can do is remember these oppressed Victims and be ready to support them when they need us most.

"Thank you for the highest profits in Corporate history, a record Military budget, another President we can lead by the nose, and last but not least..... the land we stole from the Indians"

First Thanksgiving celebrated bloody massacre of Indians

INDIAN ISLAND, Maine (UPI) — The first official Thanksgiving wasn't a festive gathering of Indians and Pilgrims but rather a celebration of the massacre of 700 Indian men, women and children, an anthropologist says.

Due to age and illness, his voice cracks as he talks about the holiday, but William B. Newell, 84, talks with force as he discusses Thanksgiving.

"Thanksgiving Day was first officially proclaimed by the governor of the Massachusetts Bay Colony in 1637 to commemorate the massacre of 700 men, women and children who were celebrating their annual green corn dance — Thanksgiving Day to them — in their own house," Newell said in a recent interview.

"Gathered in this place of meeting they were attacked by mercenaries and English and Dutch. The Indians were ordered from the building and as they came forth they were shot down. The rest were burned alive in the building," he said.

Newell, a Penobscot Indian, lives on a reservation near Old Town. He has degrees from Syracuse and the University of Pennsylvania and is listed in two regional editions of Who's Who. He's a former chairman of the University of Connecticut anthropology department and has advised museums on primitive art.

Newell said the next 100 Thanksgivings commemorated the killing of the Indians at what is now Groton, Conn., rather than a celebration with them.

"The very next day the governor declared a Thanksgiving Day, thanking God that they had eliminated those 700 men, women and children, that they had wiped out the Pequots.

"For the next 100 years every Thanksgiving Day ordained by a governor or president was to honor a bloody victory, thanking God that the battle had been won," he said.

"So when you ask about the first official Thanksgiving Day, it was the time they thanked God 700 men, women and children were burned alive," Newell said.

He said the image of Indians and Pilgrims sitting around a large table to celebrate Thanksgiving Day was "fictitious," although Indians did share food with the first settlers.

"The Indians held Thanksgiving Day every day, every time they sat down to eat. And the Pilgrims probably observed the same rule at their meetings.

"But I still find no reference to any Thanksgiving Day proclamation for that kind of meeting. The only proclamation mentioned was in honor of some bloody victory," Newell said.

KKK claims FBI infiltrated

WASHINGTON (UPI) - Ku Klux Klan leaders were afraid to do anything illegal in the late 1960's and early 1970's because they believed FBI informants had heavily infiltrated the organization, according to files released by the bureau.

In memos to Director J. Edgar Hoover, the FBI's Birmingham, Ala., office repeatedly claimed credit for keeping the Klan peaceful during this period, the files showed.

Efforts to disrupt the United Klans of America Inc. were part of Hoover's "Cointelpro" project - aimed at groups he considered subversive or violent - which he halted without explanation in 1971, a year before his death.

Its hand forced under the Freedom of Information Act, the FBI Monday released 52,648 pages of records on the counter-intelligence operation, some heavily censored but giving an inside look at some of the "dirty tricks" employed. For example, according to the files:

-The FBI spent 11 years in New York City and San Juan trying to disrupt the Puerto Rican independence movement although its own leaders already were fighting among themselves constantly.

-Phony letters and documents were used in an effort to stir up trouble between the U.S. Communist party and the organized crime syndicate Cosa Nostra.

Similar tactics were used against "new left" groups, the Socialist Workers Party and other groups Hoover considered a threat to the nation's internal security.

-Surveillance was maintained on persons from Mexico, Cuba, Puerto Rico and Yugoslavia who were involved with extremist organizations in the United States.

The 5,372 file sheets on the Klan showed that, as in other operations, efforts at disruption consisted largely of sending phony hate letters to create dissension among its leaders and members."

But the Birminghan office noted on March 6, 1970, that United Klans leaders were "concerned that the FBI has well-placed informants" in their ranks and implied this was a prime reason for an almost total lack of violence.

In a 1971 memo, the Birminghan office reported that Imperial Wizard Robert Shelton planned to give lie detector tests "to an exceedingly large number of UKA officials and members."

Study destroys the "sketchy and simplistic view" of men

NEW YORK (UPI) — A new, nationwide study indicates that most American men, far from being "male chauvinist pigs," prefer marriage to playing around, and are not particularly turned on by female nudity.

These findings appear to be in sharp contrast to the portrait of men as depicted by some women's lib groups but it is the one that emerges in the most detailed sexuality survey since the Kinsey Report of 1948.

The new survey, compiled in a nationwide study of 4,066 men, is contained in "Beyond the Male Myth," to be published Dec. 3, and in it, authors Anthony Pietropinto and Jacqueline Simenauer destroy what they call a "sketchy and simplistic" view of modern man.

"The TV situation comedies portray him as an emasculated, uninspired bungler," they write, "while the adventure shows cast him as a coldblooded, violent hunter of men and cynical predator of women.

"The feminists accuse him of being exploitative, egotistical and obsessed with indiscriminate sexual gratification. Writers of popular psychology books describe him as uncommunicative, insensitive and driven by machismo."

In the survey, the man emerges as nothing of the sort, turning out to be at least as sympathetic and sensitive a human being as his female counterpart.

Pietropinto, a psychiatrist, and Simenauer, a science writer, learned that contrary to the prevailing myth, the sexually aggressive woman holds no fear for the average man. On the contrary, they say, "The sexually passive woman may be a major cause of impotency for almost half the nation's men."

Men, they say, are more interested in sex than ever before — most would like it on an average of four times a week — and kissing and caressing was cited in the survey as the most enjoyable foreplay.

Yet for all the increased interest, only one man in five considers sex the most important pleasure in life and — in a blow to publishers of the girly magazine centerfolds — nudity got few votes as a turn-on. Oral sex emerged as the most favored new intimacy.

Three-fourths of the men surveyed cited marriage as the "ideal sex life" — only one in 10 preferred the arrangement of simply living together.

Your Birthday

By Stella Wilder

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 23 — Born today, you are reserved, sometimes really shy, especially in the presence of those consider superior to you. Sincere and generally open in your conversation, you nevertheless strike others at times as holding something back. Ultimately, you should develop enough self-confidence to face anyone in a straightforward, deliberate, and determined manner.

A wanderer by nature, you will never enjoy staying for a long time in one place. You will spend a number of your early adult years getting your wanderlust out of your system. Should you settle down too soon, you may well doom yourself to an unhappy marriage. In any case, choose for a mate one who is as fond of travel as you are. In spending family vacations visiting new places, you can rid yourself periodically of that restlessness which could otherwise spoil your career progress.

You are not one to be upset by disappointment. You take setbacks calmly, growing only more determined to succeed the next time. You are loyal to your friends, a formidable foe to those who have earned your dislike, and you never confuse the two. You know precisely who your friends are, whom you can count on, whom you must guard against.

To find what is in store for you tomorrow, select your birthday and read the corresponding paragraph. Let your birthday star be your daily guide.

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 24

SAGITTARIUS(Nov.22-Dec.21) — You can expect just rewards for your effort. Friends make it easy to discover new lines of endeavor.

CAPRICORN(Dec.22-Jan.19) — Honesty in your dealings with others should impress them enough to grant the favor you seek.

AQUARIUS(Jan.20-Feb.18) — Quickness of mind enables you to catch the joke before it can bear upon your present concerns.

PISCES(Feb.19-March 20) — Make sure your labors are unimpeded today. You need tremendous freedom to work to capacity.

ARIES(March 21-April 19) — Frank opinions may not be entirely welcome. You may have to handle the truth very tactfully.

TAURUS(April 20-May 20) — Shirking responsibility may leave you wondering what to do next. Check your progress with another's.

GEMINI(May 21-June 20) — You should overcome a number of difficulties today if you do not resist events.

CANCER(June 21-July 22) — Recognition of another's value to you serves as self-discovery. Realize a small dream this morning.

LEO(July 23-Aug.22) — Charitable deeds gain you the reputation you need. Don't expect to be rewarded for deeds not your own.

VIRGO(Aug.23-Sept.22) — Moderation must be practiced all day, or you may fail to move ahead of the opposition.

LIBRA(Sept.23-Oct.22) — Your inherent nature makes this day almost perfect. Question your view of another as an authority.

SCORPIO(Oct.23-Nov.21) — Susceptibility to flattery is more dangerous than you admit. Don't fall into a trap you set yourself.

Mullen paces AIC win over UM

By GEORGE O'BRIEN
and MARK MARCHAND
Collegian Staff

SPRINGFIELD — Kenny Muse knocked in a rebound off the stick of Tom Mullen with only 45 seconds left to clinch a 10-8 victory for the Yellow Jackets of American International in a wide open hockey game before 350 boisterous fans here at Smead Arena.

Mullen was a one man wrecking crew for the Yellow Jackets, scoring five goals and four assists, setting a new A.I.C. career scoring mark with 202 points.

The loss was a frustrating one for the Minutemen, as they scored five goals in the opening period and appeared headed for an upset. The loss dropped UMass' record to 1-2. A.I.C. is now 1-0.

The Minutemen opened the scoring early when Bill Estes took a pass from Lincoln Flagg and slid it under AIC's freshman goaltender Chris Snow's pad at 6:48.

Joe Milan made it 2-0 less than 2 minutes later when he lifted a backhander over Snow's left shoulder from 10 feet out. Don Murphy gave UMass a 3-goal lead one minute later when he broke out from his blue line and streaked down ice untouched and beat Snow on the low right side.

Conrad Marcotte got one back for the Yellow Jackets at 12:50 on a shorthanded goal, with Estes in the penalty box for hooking.

The Minutemen streaked to a 5-1 lead late in the opening period, as freshman Mark Ferragamo beat Snow on a breakaway at 18:00. Murphy scored his second goal at 18:49, beating Snow low to the right side.

The first period belonged to the Minutemen, but the second period was owned by the Yellow Jackets. A.I.C. pumped 21 shots on goalie John Riley and scored four times.

Standout defenseman Mike Smith from A.I.C. made it 5-2 at 1:12, as he took a pass from Tom Lloyd and beat Riley on the low stick side.

Bill White got that one back at 7:20 when he took a pass from Murphy and beat the new Yellow Jackets goaltender Mark Hull.

John Arnold made it 6-3 at 12:42, as he poked over Riley's left shoulder.

Ken Muse drew the Yellow Jackets within two at 16:08 as he skated around the net and stuffed it in the left side. Mullen made it 6-5 at 16:41 when he slid one under Riley's left pad.

Riley made a magnificent save on a shot by Mike Dagenais at 17:55 that protected a slim one goal lead. Riley was sprawled out on the ice and somehow managed to put his glove in the air and snare the puck with a brilliant glove save.

In the third period, UMass' Brian Kittredge gave the Minutemen a two goal lead at 3:39, as he knocked in a slap shot from the blue line. Lloyd was in the "sin bin" at the time of the goal.

The teams then traded goals making the score 8-6, before A.I.C. reeled off 4 unanswered goals for the win.

Mullen again made it 8-7 at 8:04 as he knocked in a 40-foot slap shot just inside the right pipe. Mullen tied the score at 9:27 as he went around the net and stuffed it in the right side. He added his fifth goal, an empty-net job with only 31 seconds left in the game.

UMass hockey coach Jack Canniff was disappointed with the loss, but thought that his team played well.

'Mac' named NE Coach of the Year

Dick MacPherson, head coach of the University of Massachusetts football team, has been named the New England Football Writer's Association 25th Annual Coach of the year. MacPherson led a team that had only nine returning starters to its second post-season appearance in five years. The team compiled an overall 8-2 mark.

The biggest win of the year was a 19-6 triumph over the University of New Hampshire in Durham on November 12. The victory gave MacPherson his fourth Yankee Conference crown in seven years at UMass. Thanks to the victory, the Minutemen finished fourth in the national Division II poll.

Field hockey offered at UMass for men

By LISA CAPONE
Collegian Staff

Field hockey is not for women only.

The University of Massachusetts is the home of a newly-formed co-recreational field hockey team. Not only does the team consist mostly of men (only two female members), but it is also unique in that it is an international team. The team is comprised of students from six foreign countries: Pakistan, India, United Kingdom, Nigeria, Venezuela, and Holland.

"And we even have Americans on the team!" club president Jan Stapel of Holland says.

Stapel and Sohail Kiani (of Pakistan) are responsible for organizing the club. They placed a notice in the Collegian several weeks ago, which was answered by several students. No special ability was required for making the team. Anyone responding to the notice could become a team member. Some had never played field hockey before in their lives.

Stapel says that he and Kiani decided to initiate a co-rec team because field hockey "... is not just a sport for girls." In fact, only men's field hockey teams competed in the 1976 Olympics. The first time women's field hockey will be represented in the Olympics will be in Moscow in 1980.

Men's field hockey is currently the number one sport in Pakistan, India, Western Germany, Holland, New Zealand, and Australia.

The new team encountered many problems in its formation. "This University is an accumulation of red tape," says Stapel.

The team members greatly appreciate the help of women's field hockey coach Judith Davidson. Without her help, Stapel says, the team would have had considerably more trouble getting off the ground.

The UMass co-rec field hockey team has played three games. The first was a 2-2 tie with Westfield State, and the second a 2-0 victory over the UMass women's team last Friday. Their last game, which they lost 3-0, was played last Sunday against Harvard University. The Harvard team is also international, and has been playing together much longer than the UMass team. In spite of the defeat, Stapel feels the game was a good experience for the club.

Once the snow flies, the field hockey team will probably begin indoor training to keep in practice for the spring when they hope to become a sports club in the Department of Athletics-Intramurals.

The club members have high hopes, and if their present enthusiasm has any bearing on their future success, co-rec field hockey will become a permanent fixture at UMass.

races in the New England's and IC4A's," according to Matt Mangan of the cross country team.

Lou Panaccione, who "probably ran the two best races of his life" in the NE's and IC's," finished 170th. Co-captain Frank Carroll was 175th, Tom Wolff was 188th, Michael Morris was 198th and Bob Neil was 205th.

UMass' assistant coach Arnie Morse was pleased with the results of the meet.

"I firmly believe Quinnie, if he gets the background in, has world class ability — at any level," said Morse. "He's just had an incredible inconsistency of training, with his injuries (sprained ankle in 1975, and knee ligaments in 1976)."

Morse was drooling over the prospect of having the two All-Americans team with Joe Martens in the distance medley relay for track season, when "we could run Ken and I and still come-in seventh in the nation."

Senior sticker Cheryl Meliones "took charge" of the Minutewomen field hockey team this season, as she was leading scorer and sparkplug. (Staff photo by Pat Dobbs.)

Meliones leaves mark on UM athletic program

By MISSY GALLAGHER
Collegian Staff

Cheryl Meliones will graduate this spring, but not without making her mark at UMass.

Co-captain Meliones led the field hockey team in the regular season scoring department with eight goals.

"I wanna score," she said, and she does it well, utilizing a deadly flick shot. Meliones credits her fellow co-captain, Lynsie Wickman, in aiding her scoring statistics with her well-placed hand stops.

UMass field hockey's sparkplug is on two varsity sports, including softball, where she is the starting catcher. In her spare time she enjoys intramural football, soccer and volleyball. Previously she was on the UMass basketball team, first as a JV, and then as a varsity member in her sophomore year.

Although she no longer plays for the hoop team, considers her participation as a learning experience which will benefit her in future years.

The Minutewomen's right center is pursuing her bachelor's degree in Physical Education. Four years ago, Meliones chose UMass because of its proximity and also for its new coaches.

One new mentor was Carol Albert, her "first real coach," who headed UMass field hockey and basketball. She commended current field hockey coach Judith Davidson for blending the personalities on this year's squad, which is headed for the Nationals.

Beside the natural reasons for wanting to go to the Nationals, Meliones hopes there the Minutewomen will dispel UMass' reputation for being a zoo. The UMass stickers, as well as other athletes, are devoted. "I'm proud to be out there representing UMass," she said.

Meliones has put her experience in performing drills for all three varsity sports to good use. She is currently student teaching gym in the Frontier Regional School District.

While student teaching, "Miss M." as the Frontier students fondly address her, had a humorous first taste of teaching. One pupil joked with her new instructor, saying, "I didn't know they made elevator sneakers." This comment refers to Meliones' 5-1 sturdy frame.

Frontier High School has excellent basketball and field hockey teams that have dominated Franklin county play in recent years.

"Soon we're (UMass) going to have a dynasty, too," she feels. The UMass field hockey team may be starting on that rough and rocky road.

Springfield has dominated field hockey in past years, but this season the Minutewomen defeated the Chiefs in two out of three clashes. The last victory in the New England Regionals launched the stickers to the coveted Nationals.

One ever-present field hockey fan is Cheryl's mother. Mrs. Meliones is a Physical Education teacher in their hometown of Waltham. Mrs. Meliones was a main force in her daughter's athletics. Cheryl's mother organized a softball league, which gave Cheryl a head start on her softball endeavors at the age of seven.

Meliones gave her number one fan, her mother, the second varsity jacket she earned.

Her competitiveness derived from participating in sports with her older brother in a predominately male neighborhood. This same competitiveness is evident in her aggressive and determined style of play, which can bee seen in her intense, gleaming eyes.

Meliones' future goal is to coach at the college level and to continue her education. But reviewing her collegiate career, she said, "I'm gonna miss it."

themselves with the problem last week. Davidson had the team running through the more conditioning aspects of the game.

The expectations and attitudes towards the tournament vary from player to player. Some players such as Kathy Gipps, Sue Kreider, and Sue Kibling want especially to win their first games. If they lose, they admitted that they would be "very disappointed." They want to show that UMass has a right to be considered one of the best teams in the country.

Other players such as Gayle Hutchinson and Kelly Salls are looking mainly for good play and hoping that it will be good enough to win.

When asked if there would be a letdown from the Northeast tournament, the team said no. Julie McHugh put it best: "The glamor of going to Colorado is over. Now we have to play."

Davidson says she has caught herself dreaming that her team could win the championship, but she doesn't want to dwell on it because she could be let down.

"No matter what happens, win or lose, I think this is an excellent group of athletes to represent UMass," she said.

For seniors Judy Kennedy, Kibling, Salls, Ginger Bulman, and Gipps it will be their last collegiate competition.

Two UM harriers earn All-America

By DAVE RODMAN
Collegian Staff

Juniors Mike Quinn and Stetson Arnold both ran their way to All-American honors in Monday's NCAA cross country meet held in Spokane, Washington.

Co-captain Quinn, who finished 16th, and Arnold, who placed 23rd led the UMass team to 19th place in the team standings, with 418 points.

The University of Oregon was the team champion with 97 points. Henry Rono of Washington State University, by way of Kenya, repeated as individual champion in 28:33 for the six mile race.

Quinn became the first UMass harrier to repat as an All-American, having first achieved the title in last year's meet by finishing 48th.

Arnold was also winning his second All-American recognition. He first achieved the honor by finishing 27th in the 1975 race while running for Providence College. Arnold sat out last year after transferring to UMass.

Arnold became the fifth UMass runner to attain All-American status in cross country. Along with Quinn in 1976 and this year, John McGrail was All American in 1975 and Randy Thomas and Bill Gillen made the cutoff in 1974.

Quinn had the cold weather (15 degrees) and a glaring lack of background training confronting him, but handled the three mile loop (run twice) in good form.

"It was really cold," said Quinn, "but the course was good — it wasn't that tough — maybe comparable to Franklin Park, with no really tough hills.

"I never really got in shape this season, and I knew I would get outkicked in this race. I started slow, then picked up until I was 12th with a half mile to go, then I was dead. I couldn't move, and about four guys passed me."

Quinn said Arnold got out to a better start, but he (Quinn) caught him with 3½ miles to go in the race.

~~Quinn said~~ Arnold got ou~~DELETE~~

"We ran together for a while," said Quinn, "But then I just pulled away from him. He (Arnold) ran well, though."

Quinn's time was 29:36, while Arnold's was "about 29:47."

The rest of the team finished in the middle third of the some 300 runner race, after they were "probably too tired from running great

Minutemen aim for national title

Lehigh in town for NCAA playoff

By RICH ECKEL
Collegian Staff

Members of the UMass football team won't be spending Thanksgiving at home this year, but somehow you get the feeling they don't really mind.

Instead of sitting around watching football games on television Thursday, the Minutemen will be practicing for Saturday's first round playoff game against Lehigh University. This is the first UMass team to miss a home-cooked Thanksgiving turkey since the 1972 Boardwalk Bowl squad.

"We'll be practicing Thanksgiving day," said UMass football coach Dick MacPherson, who yesterday was named New England 'Coach of the Year' by the New England Football Writer's Association. "It'll probably be an early practice so anyone from around the area can still go home if they want. The rest of us will enjoy our Thanksgiving dinner at the dining commons."

But the matter of Thanksgiving dinner is not nearly as high a priority for MacPherson as Lehigh. The Engineers (9-2) will travel to Alumni Stadium Saturday (12:45 kickoff) for their third attempt in five years at the National Division II crown. Lehigh has experience in post season play, but it hasn't enjoyed much success. In 1973, the Engineers lost to Western Kentucky 25-16 and in its other appearance in 1975, the Engineers were defeated by New Hampshire, 35-21.

Lehigh coach John Whitehead will bring his team, which ranks fifth in overall offense in the country, into Amherst on Friday for a late afternoon workout. Whitehead, in his second year as head coach, after spending nine years as an assistant, says that although this is the Engineer's third year in the post season playoffs, there are just a couple of players used to the playoff pressure.

"This is an altogether different team than the one from '75," said Whitehead, whose team has no members on athletic scholarship. "This is a one shot deal and we'll be up for it. We're just going to do the best we can."

The Engineers, who yesterday learned they had been voted the Lambert Cup, as the East's number one Division II team (UMass ranked fourth), gained that recognition mainly with a high powered offense.

Senior quarterback Mike Rieker completed 60 per cent of his passes and threw for 2431 yards this season. Operating out of a Wing T offense, Lehigh outscored its opponents 364 to 138. The leading scorer, split end Steve Kreider, caught 12 touchdown passes and returned a punt for another. Kreider caught 53 passes as a receiver and averaged 20 yards a return on punts.

"They run the Wing T well and they'll use a lot of play action out of it," said MacPherson, who gained his knowledge by viewing game films. He was especially impressed with Kreider. "He catches them short, deep and inside — there's no doubt he's a great receiver," added MacPherson.

While MacPherson is praising Lehigh's offense, Whitehead is handing out accolades to UMass's defensive unit.

"They look real tough defensively, we're going to have to find some place to attack them," said Whitehead. "They use a lot of stunts and they're big. If we can give Mike some time, then we should do all right. The big thing might be how well Mike reads and reacts to their defensive movement."

Meanwhile, the Minutemen are working on the basics which got them to the playoffs — defense and a grinding, ground control offense that produced 251 points this season.

"We're not going to do anything differently," said MacPherson. "We're working on trying to cut out their reverse game and on offense we're looking to move outside more effectively."

UMass has been practicing this week without four regular players who incurred injuries during last week's 34-17 defeat at Boston College. Billy Coleman, John Willis, Joe Harrington and Joe McLaughlin have been watching from the sidelines during practice.

"I'll have a better idea about their status tonight," said MacPherson. "But it's encouraging, if we had to say one way or the other, then we'd say they'll all be back."

Stickers meet Delaware in first round at Denver

By JIM GLEASON
Collegian Staff

DENVER, Colo. — The UMass field hockey team travelled to the University of Denver on Monday to participate in the National Playoffs here today.

Sixteen of the best teams, selected from all over the nation, will be playing in a single elimination tournament for the title of National Champion.

In the past two years, West Chester State (Pa.) has won the honor with Ursinus placing second both years.

This year, UMass, newcomers to these playoffs, will be playing by virtue of its second place seeding in the Northeast. The Minutewomen attained that seeding by beating Springfield, 2-1, in the semi-finals of the recent EAIAW playoffs at Harvard.

Today, the Minutewomen will face the University of Delaware, a team which is seeded fourth in the country. Nevertheless, UMass coach Judith Davidson is confident her team should do well.

"We played our best hockey of the season in the tournament and we've had some good practices since then," she said. "We should play well."

Davidson went on to say that she is mostly concerned with the first game with Delaware. She said that if UMass should win, it stands a good chance to go far because second round competition shouldn't be as talented.

The Nationals are set up in a similar fashion to the Northeasterns — 16 teams in a single elimination format. But there is a slight difference. A team losing in the opening round can continue in the losers bracket and capture fifth place position.

One of the main factors concerning UMass's chances deals with its emotional status. Because UMass is a newcomer to the National Playoff scene, relatively little is known about the opposing schedule and the teams. This could cause a problem as Cheryl Meliones points out.

It's hard to get up for a team when you have no idea how good they are or how they play," she said. "The whole playoff is an unknown picture."

But as she went on to say, UMass this season has beaten So. Connecticut and Springfield, the sixth and seventh ranked teams nationally. She said UMass has the quality to play with the best as long as they're mentally ready.

Concerning the current situation of the team's health, it is reported that all the players are in good health although a few were tired by late practices and crowded exam schedules before Thanksgiving.

Most of the team members admitted they were nervous for the opening but doubted if it would affect their play. In fact, many said they relied on the pregame jitters to make them play better.

The fact that the team is nervous is one of the two reasons why the team flew out two days early. Davidson feels that the extra day should help the team relax.

The other reason for UMass's early arrival is to familiarize the team with the higher altitude. Though on Monday the team just settled in the hotel and toured the city, Tuesday was spent at practice in the thinner air. It shouldn't become an important factor in the game, however, because other teams face the same problem.

Though practices can do little now to improve skills, they did serve and address

Faculty criticize Puryear's plan to abolish Graduate Dean title

By LAURA KENNEY
Collegian Staff

A plan proposed by UMass Provost Paul L. Puryear to abolish the title of Graduate Dean and create a new position under the title of Associate Provost for Research Affairs and Graduate Studies has met criticism from faculty on campus.

The Faculty Senate will discuss the proposal Thursday afternoon at 3:30 in School of Business Administration 120.

According to Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery, the same administrative move was proposed four years ago, and was accepted by the faculty at that time. Yet the proposal was not carried out because of former Graduate Dean Mortimer Appley's resignation in 1973, which caused confusion as to the future of graduate studies and research. There have been several interim graduate deans since, the present being Eugene Piedmont.

Bromery said the basic reason for the change is to centralize decision-making. "I was surprised at the people (faculty members) who acted as though they'd never heard of the plan before." Bromery said last night, "There must be some misunderstanding or misinterpretation of the plan."

Puryear came to the campus as provost in October 1976 and created controversy last spring by proposing a five-year long range plan which would involve cutbacks in liberal arts and faculty increases in the applied arts.

The faculty last spring voted "no-confidence" in Puryear and University President Robert C. Wood. Bromery said the faculty's feelings toward Puryear could be influencing their opinions of his plan to change the graduate deanship.

When contacted last night, Puryear declined to comment on the situation, saying he would have a prepared statement today.

Bromery said the main objection to the provost's proposal is the addition of the plan to place the supervision of research under the jurisdiction of the new associate provost.

According to a statement issued by Puryear to the Graduate Council and the Research Council of the Faculty Senate on Nov. 2, "it appears that greater administrative support for scholarly research will require more direct involvement by the Provost himself."

Graduate Council Chairman Harlan G. Sturm in a memorandum to the provost said, "The Graduate Council is convinced that the Provost's proposed reorganization of graduate administration and research would prove to be destructive of a quality graduate school.

"The control of research by the central administration on any grounds represents a serious misunderstanding of the role of academic priorities in the research effort and constitutes a threat to scholarly integrity," the memo read.

Faculty Senate Secretary Terence Burke yesterday said, "This is an important proposal, I'm not convinced it's an ideal situation. The motion (to delay implementation of the plan in order to discuss it fully) will basically indicate the need for more discussion between the provost's office and the Graduate Council ... time is wanted to try and formulate some alternatives."

Bromery said, "I think it'll all be talked out at the Faculty Senate Meeting Thursday, and they (the faculty) will remember their acceptance four years ago."

Nuke-supporting governor will visit UMass and area

By JOE QUINLAN
Collegian Staff

New Hampshire Gov. Meldrim Thompson

New Hampshire Gov. Meldrim Thomson, a staunch supporter of nuclear power in the current battle over construction of a nuclear power plant in Seabrook, N.H., this Friday will visit Northampton and UMass.

Members of the Alternative Energy Coalition, an active anti-nuclear power group in the area, last night said the group has not yet decided whether it plans to picket Thomson's visit.

Thomson, a Republican, Friday evening at six will address the Hampshire County Republican Club at a $6.50 a ticket dinner in the Hotel Northampton, according to club spokesperson Greg Webb. Webb also said Thomson will be at the UMass Campus Center at 8:30 Friday night. Webb said he is not sure what conference Thomson will be attending.

Thomson's press aide, Buddy Jenkins, last night said due to the Thanksgiving holiday he has not seen the governor's schedule for Friday night and would have to wait until this morning when he returns to the state house to see the schedule.

The only conference presently scheduled for the Campus Center Friday night is sponsored by the Northeast Council for Economic Action, but no one from the council could be reached last night to see if Thomson would be attending the conference.

Webb said Friday's dinner is part of the club's annual meeting in which officers are elected. He said State Rep. Frank Hatch, R-Beverly, the House minority leader and a possible candidate for governor in next year's election, is expected to attend.

Webb said a possible candidate for Lieutenant governor, Chandler Atkins, may also attend. Atkins, Webb said, is an Amherst native now living in Boston.

Webb said he expects Thomson will speak on politics and the economy during the dinner. He added he is not sure whether Thomson might discuss nuclear power or last week's media fight among newspapers in New Hampshire and Massachusetts.

Lehigh goes to semi finals

By RICH ECKEL
Collegian Staff

The UMass football team's dream of a national Division II championship literally passed them by Saturday afternoon at Alumni Stadium.

"We saw the film of the BC game and we felt that if we were going to win we had to throw the football," said Lehigh coach John Whitehead, after his team's 30-23 victory over UMass in the first round of the NCAA Division II playoffs.

And pass they did. Quarterback Mike Rieker, who said he was surprised he could throw the ball so well considering the muddy, cold weather conditions, tossed the football 40 times, completing 25. Four of those completions went for touchdowns to Rieker's favorite receiver, split end Steve Kreider, and provided the Engineers the opportunity to advance into next Saturday's semi-final round.

Rieker hit Kreider for scoring strikes of 71, 35, seven and eight yards as the duo took advantage of the familiarity with each other that had worked for 53 completions and 12 TD's this season.

"He made the big play when he had to," said UMass coach Dick MacPherson, referring to Rieker. "He has the finest touch of anyone we faced."

The combination of Rieker to Kreider didn't waste any time warming up as they connected for a 71-yard touchdown on the Engineers first play from scrimmage, shocking the 5700 fans in attendance.

★ UMass football team's dream ends

"I called the first play," said the senior quarterback who has pro ambitions. "That was our game plan, to throw on first down and do some things we wouldn't normally do to keep their defense off balance.

I wasn't looking for Steve, but I saw the safety go with the flow so I knew he'd be open. We did the same thing against Rhode Island and Connecticut this year. I don't know what it is about the Yankee Conference schools but it worked," he added.

Ten minutes later, Ken Wood redeemed himself for missing a 36-yard field goal earlier, by hitting a 38 yarder and boosting Lehigh's lead to 10-0.

The situation didn't get any brighter for the Minutemen when on the Engineers next possession they moved the ball 65 yards in six plays for another score. The TD came on a 35-yard pass from Rieker to Kreider. This time Kreider found himself lined up on the right side against Kevin Sullivan in a man-to-man situation.

"We have some signals that we use and Mike audibled at the line when he saw them line up that way," said Kreider, who grabbed nine passes for 171 yards.

While the Engineer offense was in high gear, UMass's offense seemed stalled and handed the ball back to Lehigh after a short series. And again, the Engineers moved for a score.

Lehigh drove 89 yards in 15 plays with Kreider's seven-yard grab climaxing the march. Wood converted the extra point and the barrage had moved the Engineers into a seemingly safe 23-0 lead.

But UMass began to assert itself late in the half forcing Lehigh to punt for the first time in the game. The Minutemen gained possession at Lehigh's 37-yard line and two plays later Mike Fallon hit Dennis Dent with a screen pass which he took for a TD after receiving an open field block from Ross Schubarth to spring him.

That score seemed to give the Minutemen the inspiration they needed heading into the second half. UMass came out of the locker room and moved 74 yards for a score. Bill Coleman carted the ball over from the one and Fallon found tight end Kevin Cummings all alone in the end zone for their second two point conversion of the game narrowing the margin to 23-16.

The Minutemen, who had been badly outplayed in the first half, suddenly found themselves right back in the game. The next time UMass got possession it marched up the field for another score.

Fallon, who finished the game completing 13 of 25 passes, tossed a seven-yard strike to John Gladchuk who made a sensational diving grab. Dave Croasdale converted the extra point and the game which earlier looked to be a runaway was now knotted at 23-all.

UMass seemed to be in control of the situation when its defense, which had surrendered 333 total yards in the first half, stopped Lehigh for the third consecutive time in the second half.

But Dave Croasdale, who had signalled for a fair catch, on the ensuing punt, dropped the ball and Tom Stine recovered it for Lehigh at UMass's 16 yard line.

A personal foul placed the ball on UMass's eight yard line and on the next play Kreider beat Croasdale to the corner of the end zone for his fourth TD of the day.

"Mike told me to go to the corner and he threw a perfect pass," said Kreider.

"Usually after we beat them man-to-man-once, they'll stop," said Rieker. He (Croasdale, who had the unenviable task of covering Kreider for much of the game) knocked one down, but covering Steve is a big burden for one defensive back. "I was surprised they didn't use more zone."

"We didn't intend to use that much man coverage," said MacPherson. We were in a zone on the first score, but the others we were in man because of the field position. You can't play a zone that deep in your own end."

The "if only's" can be discussed forever, but MacPherson offered no excuses for the loss. "All you know is that you had an opportunity and you didn't follow through on it," he said.

You might say the opportunity just passed them by.

Invitations to Egyptian peace conference delivered

CAIRO, Egypt [AP] — Egypt delivered formal invitations last night to a preparatory peace conference in Cairo next week while Syria sought to undermine President Anwar Sadat's initiative.

Sadat said in a television interview that representatives at the Cairo summit would sit around a table and work without a mediator. He said he was forging ahead toward a comprehensive Mideast settlement at Geneva even if the Arab world disagreed.

The Egyptian president said he had informed neither the United States nor his Arab allies in advance about the Cairo meeting. He said he intended to call an Arab summit conference after reaching a settlement at Geneva.

Sadat said the Cairo meeting could start as early as next Saturday, but official sources said it might be delayed for a week beyond that.

Sadat's acting foreign minister, Butros B. Ghali, delivered the formal invitations to the ambassadors of the United States and the Soviet Union, co-chairmen of the Geneva peace conference, and those of Jordan, Syria and Lebanon.

Syria rejected Sadat's invitation in advance, but Syrian Ambassador Ahmed al Assaad said he would forward it to his government. He was asked if there was a chance Syria might attend and replied, "Until now, no."

It was not immediately known if the United States was given an invitation to deliver to Israel or if one had been extended to the Palestine Liberation Organization, which has said it would not attend anyway.

An Egyptian Foreign Ministry official told reporters that Palestinians had been invited and added, "Everyone will interpret who the Palestinians are according to their own position. Egypt's position is clear."

A spokesman for Israeli Prime Minister Menahem Begin said in Jerusalem that Israel would not go to Cairo if the PLO sent a representative.

"No Israeli delegation will negotiate in any way and any place with the so-called PLO, whether it is in Geneva or Cairo or the moon," Begin said after a cabinet meeting.

Begin also said Israel would attend the Cairo meeting even if it meant negotiating only with Egyptians. Sadat said Saturday that if no Arabs came he would talk with the Israelis.

The Israeli leader said his cabinet would choose its negotiator after the formal invitation has been received. Foreign Minister Moshe Dayan was considered a likely choice.

In ruling out a trip to Cairo, Syria and the PLO announced they would attend the Arab "refusal summit" scheduled Thursday in Tripoli, Libya, to form a unified opposition to Sadat's initiative. Also expected to attend that meeting are representatives from Algeria, Iraq and South Yemen that are opposed to any deals with Israel.

★ Thompson visits

Thomson has been an active supporter of the nuclear power plant now being constructed in Seabrook, N.H. during the various protests held at the construction site. He visited the site three times during last May's Clamshell Alliance occupation where 1,414 over night occupiers protesting the plant were arrested.

Many of those occupiers convicted of criminal trespassing are now appealing the findings in New Hampshire Superior Court. So far some of the convictions have been upheld, and some of the occupiers have received sentences of six months.

About 400 people from Western Massachusetts occupied the site, but appeals for those convicted from the area have not yet been heard, according to Frances Crowe of the Alternative Energy Coalition.

Thomson recently called for the firing of a Boston Globe columnist from the faculty of the University of New Hampshire after the columnist criticized New Hampshire in a Globe article. The columnist was not fired but some newspapers in each state last week exchanged critical editorials of each other's opinion in the case.

Hampshire halts classes for racism activities

By CHRISTOPHER H. SCHMITT
Collegian Staff

Hampshire College will virtually shut down Thursday.

Classes will be cancelled and offices will be closed so students and faculty may participate in a day-long series of activities focusing on racism.

The activities will include films, speakers, small group discussions and presentation of the report from the Committee on Racism, formed after the Sept. 24 cross burning incident at Hampshire.

The day-long program is being coordinated by the Hampshire College Moratorium Committee.

"We will be focusing on existing racial attitudes towards the black community," the Moratorium Committee said in an article published in the Nov. 17 edition of Climax, the Hampshire College newspaper. "This seems to be the most overt form of racial discrimination on the Hampshire campus."

The moratorium is designed to "educate ourselves and each other" on racism and human rights, according to the committee.

"Our goal is to find out how we relate to racial tension and discuss how we can work towards eradicating it."

Jack Kuszaj, one of the three committee chairpersons said he doesn't know how many people will participate, but said the number is not important.

"I'm sure there will be a lot of people talking about racism," he said. "We'll just work with the people who get there."

The Moratorium Committee is not connected with the Hampshire Committee on Racism. It was formed to coordinate and plan Thursday's activities, while the Committee on Racism was formed to catalog a list of grievances of the Third World community.

Its findings and recommendations will be presented Thursday beginning at 4:30 p.m. at an all-college meeting at Crown Center, Hampshire.

Study recommended for ending GRC noise

By CHRISTOPHER H. SCHMITT
Collegian Staff

The UMass Department of Planning has suggested to state officials that an acoustical engineering firm be retained to study and recommend solutions for the noise pollution problems at the Graduate Research Center.

The research tower was cited to be in violation of noise pollution standards last August by the state Lower Pioneer Valley Air Pollution Control Center in Springfield, after neighbors complained about excessive noise.

UMass Director of Planning Jack Littlefield last week said a letter was sent from his department to the state Bureau of Building Construction suggesting an acoustical engineering firm "such as Bolt, Beranek, & Newman" of Cambridge be retained concerning the noise problem at the research tower.

Littlefield said the letter to state building bureau officials contained a list of problems at the research tower. Among the problems, he said, is excessive noise inside and outside the building caused by air moving and mechanical equipment.

Pollution center officials last August said the research tower has a "total noise problem" covering a broad band of the noise spectrum.

However, the tower's project engineer from a mechanical firm that helped construct the building said last September his firm, Francis Associates of Cambridge, is not "convinced" a noise problem exists at the building.

Outing club celebrates its 50th anniversary

By DARRELL GIBBS
Collegian Staff

Fifty years ago some insightful soul came to the conclusion that it was very necessary for college students to get back to nature.

This inspiration was manifested in the UMass Outing Club, and this week has been set aside to celebrate the 50th anniversary of the club's inception, and to publicize the varied inexpensive trips and activities offered throughout the year.

If you have any notion to go canoeing, rock climbing, caving, hiking or cross-country skiing, this week offers a few informal activites where you can get together with club members and chat about coming events.

The highlight of the week is the bluegrass boogie, a free concert tonight at eight featuring Raintree, on the 10th floor of the Campus Center. Many past and present members of the club will be there, including the president of the club from 1930.

If anyone is interested in dropping by the club's office in the Student Union today there will be free cake from a giant "birthday" cake. Also as the week progresses they may be sponsoring a hay ride.

Up until 1970 the Outing Club had suffered from obscurity. Only a handful of students were aware of its activities and services, but according to club President Andy Bonacker as the sixties slowly ceased to be, "every Tom, Dick and Harry decided to get a backpack and head for the hills." It was a time to get back to nature and as a result the club's membership exploded, he said. Now there are over 500 members and hundreds of other students who take advantage of the every weekend events.

Membership in the club costs $3 for the entire year, from September to September. It entitles you to free use of any equipment necessary for one of the club trips. Your only expense is a percentage share of the gas used and your own food.

Ten day camping trips to the backwoods of New Hampshire with canoeing, hiking and the rest can be enjoyed for as little as $35-40. The relatively limited expenses makes one of their trips a viable post-final, inter-session relaxation alternative.

The variety of trips extends from day-long journeys to New England caves to perilous ascents of virgin peaks in Alaska's mountain belt. Members of the club have enjoyed such trips as volcano hopping in South America, investigating national parks in Utah and Colorado to the Grand Canyon and Mount Ranier in Washington.

One of the present projects of the club is the construction of its own cabin in the White Mts. area. $10,000 was raised by selling beer at the spring concert and through alumni pledges. At this time the land is being purchased and when the ground thaws in the spring the structure will go up. Hopefully it will be completed by September.

Wonders never cease...

Stevie may show this spring for concert

By ROBERT CAPOZZI
Collegian Staff

The possibility of Stevie Wonder performing in concert at UMass this spring is "very good," according to Office of Third World Affairs member Kwaku Saunders.

In October, the Undergraduate Student Senate allocated $450 to send Saunders to Los Angeles to make an agreement with Wonder regarding the concert. Saunders was flown to Los Angeles where he stayed for eight days, during which time he met on several occasions with Wonder and the managers of Black Bull Inc., (Wonder's record company).

In his Nov. 16 report to the Student Senate, Saunders described his trip as "successful."

The concert, which would be held May 6, would aid in forming The Duke Ellington Foundation Black American Museum.

"It is the idea that the concert would benefit the Duke Ellington foundation that attracted Stevie," Saunders said last Wednesday in a telephone interview. "Stevie has not appeared in concert for some time, but would be willing to perform with the stipulation that the concert profits go to the foundation," Saunders added.

According to Saunders, Wonder told him "he wanted to do it" (perform at UMass). Saunders said he and Wonder had what he called a "verbal agreement," but added that "Wonder and his managers were awaiting positive proof that the concert would aid the formation of the Duke Ellington foundation."

Saunders said several letters documenting the formation of the foundation and the intent for concert proceeds had been sent to Wonder, but he and his managers are expecting a letter from Ellington's widow. In a telephone conversation Wednesday, Ruth Ellington assured Saunders that the necessary correspondence was being sent. Saunders added he would meet with her today.

"I expect it to happen," said Saunders regarding the concert. "I told Stevie that a definite commitment had to be made by mid-December and the student body should know within two weeks whether or not the concert is going to happen."

Middle East epic adds new chapters

Egypt pressed forward yesterday with President Anwar Sadat's latest peace proposal despite Syrian and Palestinian opposition, inviting all nations of the Middle East, the United States and the Soviet Union to Cairo to prepare for talks in Geneva.

In Jerusalem, Israeli Prime Minister Menahem Begin said Israel would join the Cairo talks but never deal directly with the Palestine Liberation Organization, "even on the moon."

Officials in Syria said President Hafez Assad would shun the Cairo meeting next weekend in favor of a trip to Libya for "a crucially important summit" of hard-line Arabs. PLO leaders also scorned Sadat's invitation.

Assad and other hard-line Arabs, who may convene in Tripoli at the same time Sadat's group meets in Cairo, are anxious to block what they see as Egypt's attempt to reach a separate peace with Israel.

Sadat said he would go ahead with his Cairo meeting "in order to finish what we started" in Jerusalem, even if no one other than Israel attends.

Moderate Kuwait said the possibility of simultaneous summits in Egypt and Libya dramatized a "far-reaching deterioration" in Arab relations.

Jordan, which has taken a moderate position during recent Middle East developments, indicated it would reject Sadat's invitation. Amman's semi-official press predicted the proposed parley will be a repeat of last weekend's face-to-face talks between Sadat and Israeli leaders.

Libya, Algeria, South Yemen and radical Palestinian groups have endorsed the Tripoli meeting, which could begin as early as Thursday. But it was not yet clear whether Iraq, a key to any wide anti-Sadat alliance, would be ready to bury its bitter rivalry with neighboring Syria and attend.

The Egyptian president told American television interviewers Sunday he would continue his go-it-alone policy despite Arab opposition, and was willing to proceed to a Geneva conference with Israel alone. He offered to submit any peace agreement he could arrange to other Arab leaders.

Sadat, who appeared on both NBC and CBS in an extension of the "media diplomacy" that has characterized Middle East developments this month, said he would resign before the Egyptian parliament if his people's verdict was against his efforts.

In Washington, President Carter's press secretary Jody Powell said Sunday the United States was "still consulting" with the Soviet Union and other nations invited to the Cairo session.

"We've said such a meeting could be constructive," Powell said. "Obviously we're trying to be in the position of being supportive — to be helpful."

There was no word from the Kremlin. The Soviet Union was expected to ignore Sadat's conference although the Egyptian president said Saturday, "If it tries to create obstacles, it will be making the biggest mistake of its life."

Sadat's acting foreign minister, Butros Ghali, was busy Sunday evening relaying the round of invitations for the Cairo meeting, which Sadat said could begin next Saturday.

One of Ghali's first visits was with U.S. Ambassador Hermann F. Eilts. The American diplomat would not discuss the arrangements, but it was expected he received the Israelis' invitation as well.

Ghali also met with Gen. Ensio Siilasvuo of Finland, general coordinator of U.N. peacekeeping forces in the Middle East. Egypt's ambassador to the United States delivered an invitation to U.N. Secretary General Kurt Waldheim in New York.

Room choosing procedure

Students living on campus will be able this week to sign up for rooms for next semester. The process is:

TODAY — Students planning to remain in their present rooms sign up with their heads of residence.

TOMORROW — Students who would like to stay in their present dorm but in a different room sign up with the head of residence.

WEDNESDAY — Students who would like to live in a dormitory elsewhere on campus sign up with the head of residence of that dorm.

THURSDAY — All others, including students who have missed the previous dates and those students moving back on campus.

Students should sign up for only one campus dormitory room.

Those who do not sign up during this time, will be deleted from the dorm housing list and receive no room assignment in their registration packets. On-campus housing is still mandatory for freshmen, sophomores, and juniors unless otherwise exempt.

For information on the various dormitories, see your head of residence or stop by the Housing Office, 235 Whitmore.

Congress resumes to salvage achievements

WASHINGTON [AP] — A Congress frustrated by deep-seated disagreements on energy, abortion and other issues goes back to work Tuesday in an effort to salvage a record of achievement in 1977.

While the lawmakers have enacted substantial legislation, they have not attained President Carter's number one goal for the year — writing a comprehensive energy policy.

House and Senate conferees, who have been working off and on for more than a month to reconcile widely different versions, take up the task again today amid predictions they will not finish the job before mid-December at the earliest.

The two chambers themselves reconvene Tuesday. They had hoped to adjourn early in October, but instead have taken an informal recess since Oct. 20 while their spokesmen deliberated.

The House has scheduled an ambitious legislative program designed to clear the decks of legislation already essentially agreed upon or likely to be.

But in addition to the energy conference, progressing at an inch-by-inch pace, the Senate and House also face a virtual deadlock that has held up passage of a $60.2 billion appropriation for the wide-ranging programs of the Health, Education and Welfare Department.

The issue is whether government health programs should pay for abortions only in cases where the mother's life is endangered, as the House has insisted, or under less restrictive guidelines adopted by the Senate.

The gatekeeper at the Graceland estate of Elvis Presley unlocks the gate to let the first of several thousand people onto the mansion grounds to view the gravesites of the late singer and his mother, Gladys Love Presley, Saturday. Some fans braved freezing temperatures and rain overnight to see the burial site.(UPI)

Elvis fans view grave

MEMPHIS, Tenn. [AP] — More than 1,000 Elvis Presley fans, many of whom had stood in line for hours, ignored a cold, drizzling rain yesterday to walk up the quarter-mile drive of his Graceland Mansion for a glimpse of the late rock star's grave.

Some of those in line had waited since Saturday afternoon standing near the gate, then trading off with a friend to spend an hour or two in a warm car nearby. Temperatures fell into the 30s Saturday night.

A nearby all-night convenience store did a thriving business in green, plastic garbage bags which were modified to serve as emergency ponchos for those who were ill-prepared for the wet weather.

Tears rolled down the face of Willie Turner of Tuscola, Ill. as she walked away from Presley's gravesite just south of the big mansion.

"We lost a great man. We lost so very, very much," she said.

She was in one of the first groups of Presley fans admitted to the mansion grounds 15 minutes before the scheduled time.

"We just couldn't keep the people back," said security chief Dick Grob.

Grob estimated that the crowd had grown from about 50 people at midnight Saturday to more than 1,000 by 7 a.m. yesterday.

Presley's body and that of his mother, Gladys Love Presley, were moved to the mansion grounds Oct. 2 after police said they had foiled a plot to steal his body from the Forest Hills cemetery mausoleum.

The line of people outside the gate quickly grew shorter as groups of 25 to 30 and later as many as 60 were escorbed by parka-clad security guards up the winding driveway to the Meditation Garden. Many carried flowers — mostly roses — or cameras as they made the trek.

In the garden, the fans stood silently and with heads bowed before the twin graves.

Some were weeping as they left the garden.

Presley, who dies of a heart attack Aug. 16, lies beneath a bronze tablet bearing an epitaph — written by his father, Vernon Presley — praising him as a "legend in his own time."

At the bottom of the tablet, is Presley's personal insignia, a lightning bolt and the initials "TCB," which stands for "taking care of business."

While his body was in the mausoleum, thousands of Presley fans flocked to the cemetery, but often seemed bent on leaving with souvenirs, such as tufts of grass and tree limbs.

Deer season is big bucks

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — The horde of more than one million hunters that takes to Pennsylvania's woods when deer season opens at the crack of dawn today will end up spending big bucks.

"It really is a multi-million dollar industry," said Stanley Forbes, chief information officer for the Pennsylvania Game Commission.

"It's really hard to measure all the economical benefits from deer hunting, but our conservative slimate is that hunters will spend $100 million on deer seaso al n," he added.

But the hunters who have shelled out money for rifles, ammunition, thick coats and warm underwear don't seem to mind the expense. For some, deer season is bigger than Super Bowl Sunday and New Year's Eve combined.

"For those of us in the rural areas, deer season is part of our culture. It's a ritual, a ceremonial thing," said Mike Ondik, deer researcher at Pennsylvania State University.

Pennsylvania has 1.25 million hunters, the largest force in the country. The state also ranks second only to Texas in number of deer killed.

In some regions, the opening day of deer season is negotiable in labor contracts. For example, none of the 499 employees at the Fruehauf Corp. in Fayette County will be working because United Steel Workers Local 15101 has buck season written into the contract as a holiday.

Other non-union shops close up because absenteeism has historically been more than 50 percent on opening day. And most rural school districts give their students the day off too.

The influx of hunters creates radical changes sometimes. Potter County, the top deer county in the state, has a population of 16,500 residents and at least double that amount of deer.

According to local officials, at least 30,000 hunters will flock to the north central county during deer season, bringing bumper-to-bumper traffic to winding rural roads.

"You could play jacks on those roads in summer. But during buck season, there are bigger traffic jams than on the Philadelphia Expressway," said Ted Godshall of the Game Commission.

Wildlife managers estimate the state's deer herd numbers at least 650,000. Other game officials say there may be as many as 900,000.

Maine's hunting season ends

AUGUSTA, Maine [UPI] — Although hunters probably bagged about 31,000 deer in the month-long season which ended Saturday, state game wardens say there were surprisingly few fatalities and accidents this year.

Final hunting statistics aren't expected for several weeks. But Warden Supervisor Charles Tobie of the Inland Fisheries and Wildlife department says workers recognize a safe year when they've had one.

"It's been an amazing year as far as hunting accidents are concerned," he said this weekend.

Tobie, whose territory includes the Augusta, Waterville and Bangor areas, said usually there are several accidents and fatalities, but this year only a minor, self-inflicted gunshot wound was reported.

Only two fatalities were recorded, the first near Topsham when Richard J. Moran, of Ashland, Mass., apparently was shot by Gene Graffam Jr., 39, of Topsham while both men were hunting. Graffam was charged with manslaughter.

The second happened in Ornesville when 15-year-old Lance McIntosh was killed by a discharge from the gun of a young companion.

Despite the comparatively low level of accidents, wardens said arrests on charges of illegal night hunting were up.

Tobie said the season was "one of the busiest years that I've seen for quite a long time." There have been 45 prosecutions for night hunting in his division this fall, he said.

Hunters must quit at sunset, although at one time they could continue for a half-hour further. Night hunters can receive $500 fines, three days in jail, loss of licenses and confiscation of guns.

Aircraft negotiations met at last minute

HARTFORD, Conn. [UPI] — Pratt & Whitney Aircraft management and union leaders yesterday worked against a midnight contract deadline to avoid a strike by 15,000 employees at the firm's three Connecticut plants.

Union leaders called a meeting yesterday to vote on the company offer and decide whether to authorize a strike.

Spokesmen for both sides had expressed optimism earlier in the weekend an agreement would be reached, but as the deadline neared optimism was fading.

Pratt & Whitney yesterday charged negotiators for the International Association of Machinists, District 91 with "stalling."

The company claimed the union's tactics made "it increasingly unlikely that agreement can be reached on a new contract in the few hours remaining."

A major issue in dispute was job security. The union sought a company guarantee it will not move from Connecticut.

In the last decade the work force at the three plants in East Hartford, Middletown and Southington has been cut by 10,000 through attrition.

"We're saying we want a simple statement of policy that United Technologies intends to work from this base. We are saying we want the work to stay in Connecticut," union spokesman Lou Kiefer said.

Pratt & Whitney is owned by United Technologies and produces aircraft and marine engines under commercial and government contracts. It is one of the state's largest employers.

Spray on ceilings may cause cancer

BOSTON (UPI) — Massachusetts inspectors have beoun testing fireproof "spray'on" ceilings in 92 public schools to see if they contain too much asbestos — a fibrous substance which can cause cancer.

The inspectors will eventually check more than 900 schools built between 1946 and 1973. That's the period when sprayon asbestos was commonly used for fireproofin and insulation.

The U.S. Environmental Protection Agency banned the spray-on meth d in 1973. A legislative panel conhaired by state Sen. Robert McCarthy, DEast Bridgewater, and Rep. Lois Pines, D-Newton, has ordered the investigation.

"I think there is a very substantial hazard," said Pines. "If we know that something is dangerous we shouldn't expose our children to it."

Only 92 of 900 schools sampled have answered written questionnaires sent by the legislative panel. The questionnaire asks whether the spray-on coatings may be oocated within the schools, and many officials have answered yes.

Scientists have documented that asbestos causes cancer among factory workers who breathe in high concentrations of fibers.

The inspectors wll look for dilapidated ceilings that might release the fine particles.

Citizens convention for criminal justice

AUGUSTA, Maine [UPI] Blair G. Ewing, director of the National Institute for Law Enforcement and Criminal Justice, will be featured speaker at the Dec. 9 convention of the Maine Citizens Criminal Justice-Community Standards and Goals Committee in Augusta.

Ewing, deputy director of the federal Law Engorcement Assistance Administration, is the author of several publications dealing with social and criminal justice.

He has been active in federal planning programs and governmental activities dealing with his fields of specialty since 1969.

The three-day convention at the Augusta Civic Center culminates two years of study and evaluation of the state's criminal justice system by more than 1,000 Maine residents and professionals.

Participants will vote on more than 260 recommendations stemming from work by various committees and a statewide series of public hearings.

Foam regulating for home insulation use

HARTFORD, Conn. (UPI) — Officials in two state departments are talking about regulating the use of foam to insulate homes.

A Public Works Department spokesman says the agencys Building Code Standards Committee plans to study use of urea formaldehyde-based foams in home insulation.

Consumer Protection Commissioner Mary Heslin says her department will work closely with the cod committee on its study of possible foam regulations.

There have been ctmplaints about urea formaldehyde-based foams.

On the administration payroll

By MICHAEL PILL

I am writing to express support for Lisa Melilli's column in the Collegian of Wednesday, November 2, 1977, in which she detailed some of SGA Co-President Jon Hite's behind-the-scenes efforts to manipulate the Collegian's news coverage.

But we should not stop with a mere exposure of one individual. It is important to look deeper and ask if Mr. Hite is the only one involved or if his current activities are only one aspect of a long-standing problem.

This problem is that for several years now the Student Government Association (SGA) politicians who have fought most strongly against student unionization and other student services have been (or still are) on the payroll of the campus administration.

Let's be specific. Since the fall of 1975 the correlation has been 100 per cent — SGA top officials have been either strong unionization advocates or on the administration payroll:

1975-76:

Co-presidents: Henry Ragin and Ellen Gavin

Speaker of the Student Senate: Ken Somers — administration payroll: 6-01-76 to 8-27-77 Budgeting and Institutional Studies; 5-27-77 to 9-03-77 Student Services

1976-77:

Co-presidents: Jay Martus and Paul Cronin — administration payroll: Cronin: 6-13-77 to 11-5-77 Budgeting and Institutional Studies; 10-03-77 to 11-05-77 Provost's Office; Martus: 5-21-77 to 6-25-77 and 7-01-77 to 11-05-77 Residential Resource Management

Speaker of the Student Senate: Annette Guttenberg

1977-78:

Co-presidents: Jon Hite and Marion Batiste — administration payrolls: Hite: 9-18-76 to 6-25-77 Residential Resource Management; Batiste: 5-21-76 to 5-21-77 Orchard Hill-Central

Speaker of the Student Senate: Brian DeLima

In addition there was another long-time unionization opponent in the Student Senate — Brian Harvey — who has been on the payroll of the Student Affairs division in the Whitmore Administration Building.

Similar problems have arisen during the past hundred years in the American labor movement. Employers have tried to buy off a few workers in order to obstruct union organizing. Such workers have come to be called "stool pidgeons" or "Scabs" by union workers.

The Collegian staff, the people working for student unionization, and the Student Senate should all come to grips with the underlying problem of stopping any administration manipulation effort, now or in the future.

Mr. Hite's activities need to be dealt with, but let's not forget the rest of the problem.

The student union — it's already here

By SUSAN BIRMINGHAM

To unionize or not to unionize; this is not the question. It is not only not the question, but it is missing the point entirely. The secret, and I am assuming it is a secret because no one is telling anyone, is that we are already unionized. It is done; fait accompli. I know that this may come as a surprise, but we the students at the University of Massachusetts already have an organization which (tries to) protect and advance the rights of its members, which in actuality is all a union is.

This organization, for those of you who don't already know (one of the basic problems), is the Student Senate. Yes, this body, so easily ignored by the administration and faculty, and rather irrelevant to the majority of students, is the most powerful voice of the student body.

The point is, the administration can ignore the voice of the students. Who will protest? Certainly not the students — chances are most don't even know what their own voice is saying. The only way the students' voice can be heard is if they are talking, so to speak. The problem is that students have organized themselves such that only a minority speak (the Senate) and half the time it is not worth hearing anyway. The Senate, for example, spent half its valuable time at a meeting two weeks ago trying to decide whether, in your interest of course, anything which was talked about had to be talked about for at least ten minutes. Or was it at most ten minutes?

But back to the point. The question is — what encourages people to talk, participate, and consequently to be heard? Is this best accomplished by electing representatives to talk for you, or by having a forum in which every student not only has the right but it encouraged to speak and be heard?

As far as I can see we have no "options" regarding the protection of our interests. The point is relativity. Either we protect our interests the most effective way or the least effective way.

The problem is that the Senate can't decide whether it can decide whether each student has the right to decide on what the organization should be saying, or whether students themselves should decide on whether they have the right to decide on what the organization is doing. Hmm ... I'm convinced that if it weren't so simple, it would be much simpler. But it's the sheer simplicity of it that throws people off.

Even the concept of collective bargaining has been mystified to the point of absurdity. Collective bargaining is not the goal of a union. The goal of a union is to make the university accountable to students. Collective bargaining is only one method. Demonstrations, drawing public attention through the media, boycotts, or simply being organized are other methods. It just so happens that formal (as opposed to informal) negotiations is the method the faculty have chosen to deal with issues of concern to them. It is not the students' only option. There are many, many tactics to choose from — it takes getting together and deciding on what seems best.

- A footnote. The faculty and administration have agreed that students may sit and watch while they bargain away our right to evaluate professors, the right to quality advising, etc., and further, that we may only speak when spoken to. This seems to be a true characterization of the influence students have over our education.

The tramps of Paris

our man in paris

By MARK WILDING

They are a breed apart, these tramps of Paris. These are not the slumped hollow-eyed ghosts who shuffle the back bay streets of Boston and New York. Their manner is as defiant as Napoleons, their walk as imperious as De Gaulles. The most stately of this autocratic lot is named Henri — huge with a pearl white beard, he makes Orson Welles look a weedy comparison. Every day at 4:00 o'clock he marches into the Cafe Saint-Michel, surveys his dominion, chooses his seat, sits and orders his daily glass of water. Soon he strikes up a conversation with imaginary friends, who have evidently joined him at the table. He laughs, cajoles, sympathizes, teases, and finally bids them adieu. One is never sure what he (or rather they) talk about, then again that's not one's business.

Michel Druot is a french journalist who lived among the tramps of Paris for four years, after which he wrote a book about them. The book is some ten years old now but has little need to be revised because most of them are still around. According to Druot, their ranks include, among others, a former admiral of the navy, the owner of three apartment houses, and a professor at the Sorbonne. Of course, not all of them have money. Rather than beg, the Paris tramp might hawk knick-knacks or, on occasion, gauge a franc out of a gullible foreigner. Begging proper is considered distasteful.

They prefer the street life to any other and somehow manage to secure the food and shelter necessary for them to continue their spare and curious existence. At 1:00 o'clock in the morning, most of the subway stationmasters kick them out into the streets. Still there's a sympathetic stationmaster on the subway stop Chatelet who often lets them sleep the night on the benches generously provided for them by the city of Paris. Mind you, there are fanatics among the fanatics, who insist upon staying out of doors all the time. During the winter months this group often huddles together over a grill of the Subway Madeleine, not fifty yards from the Morgue de Madeleine. This way, they point out, they won't have as far to go when their time comes.

Their dress is a mix of tatters and tweed. The burlap trousers are held together by safety pins and splinters of rope. The Paris tramp's pride in his overcoat, invariably a heavy London fog keeping warm his ample belly. For the Paris tramps don't starve. The authorities provide a daily soup and there are always students willing to give them a meal ticket. Otherwise they live on bread, cheese, and that item which is always by their side, much as a gunslinger's six-shooter, confidante yet eventual foe, the inevitable bottle of red table wine. They are seldom without it. After all, it's the best buy in town. What else could they get for seventy-five cents that could come close to providing them with such a comfortable shield against a world of which they want no part?

The unknown ideal

By DREW CRANE

In the continuing debate on these pages and in the classroom on the merits of various socio-economic systems it is a sad fact that often the most vociferous defenders of capitalism are its worst enemies. Their defense of today's mixed economy — of government intervention — is grounded in such philosophic contradictions as to welcome the equally fallacious arguments of opponents. What has been conspicuously absent in most cases is a rational examination of the fundamental moral issues of any social system.

Historically, capitalism established the first and only moral politico-economic system and the only one geared to the life of a rational being. It was the first system to recognize and protect individual rights and to subordinate society to moral law. Man was no longer an expendable element for achieving "the greater social good". His life was no longer a pawn in the power games of the majority, and for the first time the altruist-collectivist morality was challenged.

This country recognized man's fundamental right to life as the highest standard of value and as such sought to promote the peaceful, orderly, voluntary coexistence of human beings. All force was banned from social interaction, and the government was delegated as the retaliatory defender of those whose rights were violated by force.

The life of each individual was an end in itself — not the means to the ends of others.

And since life is a process of self-sustaining and self-generated action, man was free for the first time to pursue his rational self interest through productive endeavors in voluntary cooperation with others. He was free to support his own life by his own work as high as his ability would carry him on any particular economic level. He was free to trade his product (property) with others so that both parties gained and neither lost in the transaction.

The extent to which capitalism was instituted, here and elsewhere, determined the proportional advancement in technology, standard of living and the general well being of all mankind. But the principles of capitalism were only implicitly defined and its failure was due to a lack of explicit implementation.

From the beginning, the government used its monopoly on force to promote the economic welfare of special interests and violate the rights of individuals. Every quota, tariff, wage and price control, special tax, subsidy, etc ... favored one individual or group at the expense of another. With every bureaucratic intervention and its resultant failure, more government power was demanded by those few politicians, businessmen and others who sought the unearned by using force to violate the rights of others. With every alleged failure of "capitalism" and the "free market," more political and economic power was exercised by government.

The result was a power struggle creating the monopoly capitalistic structure so maligned by the anti-capitalists today. Every coercive monopoly was created only by the aid of government intervention in the economy and can only be eliminated by a free market economy.

Ideology at its worst

lisa melilli

This is a difficult column for me to write right now, after visiting all the nuns at my alma mater, Notre Dame Catholic Girl's High School over this past weekend. I feel a bit guilty, but then again the process certainly was continued there and they were part of its cause.

The process I'm talking about is the "irreligiouso of the soul", better known, as first, the disbelief of religion and then, disbelief of God.

For me, disbelief of religion began in sixth grade at Saint Teresa's Grammar School after hearing our pastor talk about how much money the parish needed during gospel time, watching my neighbors who were men and rotten during the week get dressed in their best on Sundays, and finding all the studying I did for my confirmation really didn't teach me anything except memorization — I began to wonder if that really proved anything. Also, now aren't priests supposed to be the figure-heads of poverty and humility? Well, the figure-head of poverty and humility is not supposed to leave 30 grand to his sister in his will. That's what happened when our pastor died. First of all, shouldn't he give the money to the poor? And second, what's he doing with all that money in the first place?

And nuns are a terror, if you haven't heard. It began in first grade when my first grade nun, Sister Carolina, spanked my best friend in front of class because she peaked under the toilet booth to see what color tile was on the wall of the next stall.

Other major sins were talking in potty line, recess line, water line, going to the bathroom in the middle of class, not learning your lessons, and sucking your thumb. We were always tied to ask God's repentence and, of course, we were always to rely on our guardian angel.

And the process, although the "sins" changed as we matured, continued and we found ourselves restricted, restricted. Our world picture was formed: we were Catholics and only Catholics would be saved and so only Catholics were worthwhile people. I suppose that's good for your own self-confidence, but what about for all your friends who were Jewish or even Protestant?

Well, like I said, by sixth grade I figured out the whole thing was a crock. It seemed obvious to me that religion was a front to hide your own insecurities. And moreover, it was a fraud.

Now, the disbelief of God began about the same time, didn't materialize into any sworn statements until my later high school years. It stemmed particularly from Father Dora, Sister Theresa Agnas and Sister Marion Reilly.

Father Dora's problem was that he was a phony. Everytime you talked to him, you felt like you were getting sticky with honey. It seemed that Father Dora didn't look at the world straight away and seemed to be hiding not only from the cruel realities of life, but from the cruel realities of himself. Was a belief in God to be playing games with yourself and the world just as belief in religion was?

Now Sister Theresa Agnas and Sister Marion Reilly were a different sort altogether. They used God basically to keep all us girls in line, like by telling us we'd be damned in heaven by God if he saw us smoking in the lav or talking in the library or throwing toilet tissue out the bathroom window or hanging around after school hours outside in front with all the boys who came over from Notre Dame Boys Catholic High School. Basically, God was seen as someway to control us, to imprison us. God didn't seem to say anything else.

Karl Marx writes in Contribution to the Critique of Hegel's Philosophy of Right that religion is an illusory sun for people to revolve around when they don't want to revolve around themselves. It is the "sigh of the oppressed creature, the sentiment of a heartless world and the soul of soul-less condition. It is the opium of the people." And I suppose in this statement Marx captures all the reasons for my "irreligiouso of the soul." Neither religion nor God provided me with a real picture of the world, but a false one which stopped me from looking realistically at the world or from believing that I actually had control over my own livelihood, welfare, "fate". Religion is an ideology — the worst sort — because it continues after death.

Also, religion stops one from looking for change. It makes us stagnant because it makes us believe in fate and not in action.

Religion also separates us further, classifies us, and we are taught that the other religion is an enemy.

And whenever I think of religion, I think of my grammar school principal, Sister Ruth, who used to tell us to say the rosary on the bus so the busdriver wouldn't get in an accident — actually so we wouldn't talk. This is an example of the worst aspect of religion and a belief in God — that it is controlled by fear and guilt.

The psychologist who cried wolf

To the Editor:

An Open Letter To The Psychology Department:

People who someday may require the assistance of a stranger during an emergency, medical or otherwise, were dealt a severe blow Tuesday night in the Campus Center Coffee Shop.

A male student fell to the floor at 7:45 p.m. in the throes of an apparent epileptic seizure. A woman responded to his plight and called out for someone to call a doctor. Two people ran for the pay phones, so I, being familiar with epilepsy, went to the victim to apply appropriate first-aid. A second woman arrived at the same time as I and immediately, and correctly, opened his mouth to hold his tongue to avoid his choking. He then grabbed her hand, sat up, muttered "Psych experiment," and walked to a table where his partner was recording either the levels of timing of our response to the emergency.

My anger was so intense that I did not feel as though I could guarantee a non-violent confrontation. I avoided the possibility of a physical response by returning to my table at the other side of the room.

I take issue with the employment of tactics such as these used under the auspices of a 'psychology experiment' for the following reasons:

1. The undue emotional and physical stress that people in the Coffee Shop were subjected to.

2. The intense feeling of being exploited that I, and surely the two responding women, felt.

3. The inconvenience and danger police officers experienced in their aborted attempt to respond as quickly as possible.

4. Most importantly, the negative effect that this charade may have in the future when people who witnessed this inexcusable play-acting encounter a genuine emergency requiring their help. Even seconds wasted in indecision could drastically reduce the benefit of their assistance to the emergency. victim.

I call on any and all of the administration and academic officials that will receive this letter to express their concern and dismay to the Psychology Department regarding the incident described herein and call for an immediate and comprehensive review of any policies regarding public 'psychology experiments' that currently exist, establish one if none do in fact exist, and demand adequate enforcement of such a policy.

I strongly believe that the community deserves a public reply and apology from the Psychology Department.

My most fervent hope is that no one will ever hesitate or fail to respond to another human being's need in an emergency because of the insensitivity and total lack of forethought displayed Tuesday night.

Evaluation corrected

To the Editor:

After being granted access to Professor Fresia Bradford's teacher evaluations, we have seen that the negative tenor of the Collegian poll evaluation for her course is at variance with the excellent evaluations filled out by students taking Spanish 126 last semester. As was the policy for the last evaluation guide and the upcoming guide, those evaluations completed by students in a classroom take precedence over the Collegian data. The former have validity, the latter certainly do not. We have been informed by Mrs. Bradford that those who wish to view her evaluations are so welcomed, though at her discretion. We applaud Mrs. Bradford's action, and urge other faculty who may or may not be in a similar situation to follow this precedent.

Those wishing a break-down [direct and indirect costs, salary ... ] of the total amounts awarded for grants and contracts may contact Dianne Willett, Office of Grant and Contract Administration.

The figures we quoted in the appendix were derived from the 1976 OGCA Fiscal Report.

Letters Policy

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian welcomes all letters to the editor. They must be signed and include the author's address and phone number. Organizations may submit letters, but they must include a name and phone number for reference purposes.

Letters must be typed, double-spaced, at sixty spaces per line, and no more than two pages. They should be sent to the Excutive Editor, c-o the Collegian, or dropped off at the Collegian office.

All letters are subject to editing for either content or space according to the judgement of the editors. Due to space limitations, there is no guarantee that all letters received will be printed. Letters for a specific publication date must be submitted by 4:00 p.m. the day preceding that date.

News in Brief

Hearings to approve new contraceptive

HER SAY NEWS SERVICE — The Institute for the Study of Medical Ethics in Los Angeles has called on Congress to open hearings into efforts by the Food and Drug Administration to approve the controversial drug, Depo Provera, as a contraceptive.

The institute's request comes in the wake of an investigation by the California State Department of Health into charges that physicians in California are prescribing the cancer-causing drug mainly to black and poor women in the state.

Depo Provera is a synthetic hormone manufactured by the Upjohn Company. The chemical is approved by the FDA only for the treatment of uterine cancer. The drug, however, reportedly is routinely prescribed by physicians as a contraceptive for women, despite extensive tests which have shown it can cause dangerous side effects. Some of these side effects include indefinite sterility, an increased risk of cervical cancer, and irregular and severe bleeding.

The Institute said it recently conducted a study of over 150 women in Los Angeles who had been given Depo Provera without their knowledge or consent. More than 75 per cent of those women, the research group said were black and poor.

The institute said despite probable risks of cancer and other diseases, the FDA is still considering approving the controversial drug for mass use by women as a contraceptive.

The research group has charged that use of the experimental drug on black and poor women — when its harmful effects are well-known — smacks of a Nazi-type program.

The group has asked Congressperson Henry Waxman's office to open congressional hearings into the Depo Provera controversy.

Saccharin labeled now for danger

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Packages of saccharin and all foods containing the artificial sweetener will begin carrying labels next Feb. 23 warning the product could cause cancer, the Food and Drug Administration said yesterday.

The warning will state: "Use of this product may be hazardous to your health. This product contains saccharin which has been determined to cause cancer in laboratory animals."

The labeling is required 90 days from the date President Carter signed the Saccharin Study and Labeling Act. He did so on Nov. 23.

In addition to the labeling regulation, the act forbids the FDA from removing saccharin from the market for 18 months.

Delegation talks for proposed treaty

NEW YORK [UPI] — The National Committee on American Foreign Policy will send a delegation to Panama for talks with Panamanian and American officials concerning the new proposed canal treaty, the organization announced yesterday.

The 22-member delegation is scheduled to be given briefings in Washington today by the National Security Council and the Joint Chiefs of Staff prior to its Tuesday departure from New York to Panama, the announcement said.

The delegation will be headed by former U.S. Senate minority leader Hugh Scott from Pennsylvania, and Angier Biddle Duke.

ABOUT PEOPLE — Senate Majority Leader Robert C. Byrd's hometown of Sophia Vermont burned down so often that the city council finally passed an ordinance saying no frame buildings could be constructed in the Raleigh County town.
Actor Lee Strasberg was honored when his star was implanted in the Hollywood Walk of Fame on Hollywood Boulevard, yesterday. His star was the 1,691st to be placed in concrete.

Undertakers learn techniques to meet needs of the bereaved

BOSTON [UPI] — A course called "grief" is not taken lightly at a New England school which turns out most of the area's undertakers.

According to the school's president, the need for a soothing shoulder is no longer just for the bereaved, but for the undertaker as well.

"The real issue is this," said Dr. Victor Scalisi, who began this term as president of the New England Institute of Embalming and Anatomy. "We have got to meet the needs for the bereaved which are created by the changing roles within the society of doctors and clergymen."

That job, Scalisi maintained, has fallen on the undertakers. "There are no family doctors," he said, "and the attendant physician comes out of a room where a person has just died, quickly tells someone, and then immediately goes down the hall to take care of someone else."

Scalisi, a minister for 17 years, said "very few clergymen, unfortunately, find time in their church and social schedules to be counselors."

Scalisi introduced the course on grief to the largely science and business curriculum three years ago. Closed circuit television and tape devises were added this year to enable students to observe mannerisms as they counsel other students who in turn act the role of a griefstricken person.

The focus of the course remains the morticians ability to cope with his own awareness of death.

"I might walk into the classroom on the first day and say to the students, 'You have just died. Write your own obituary," he said. "You would be surprised how much resistance and concealed hostility may surface in these exercises. The students discuss their feelings, talk about their hurt, and open up themselves. They learn that way that they can bring healing to one another."

Within two years, Scalisi said he hopes to offer the unusual course to practicing morticians, applying "more sophisticated counseling and guidance skills."

"The need is privately there," he said, "but I'm afraid that there is a large segment which would outwardly laugh at the idea, like it was some new way of shoeing horses."

Few professional undertakers quit the profession because of strain, the interviewed experts agreed. Business reasons and very long hours are more frequent reasons given for leaving the business, they said.

'The Wizard of Oz' hits Moscow

MOSCOW [UPI] — Her name is Elli and she comes from a place called Khan-sas. She calls her fully little dog "totoshka."

It's in Russian, of course, but it's unmistakably that American delight "The Wizard of Oz" — Moscow style.

Russian audiences are notoriously reserved, keeping their emotions safety tucked away. But the hundreds of children packing Malaya Bronaya theater for a Sunday matinee squeal and cheer unabashedly when the Moscow brand of Cowardly Lion struts on the stage with his wild orange mane and floppy yellow tail.

The play — known as "The Wizard of Emerald City" — is pitched right at the wide-eyed kids.

A toothy tiger stalking Elli, the Tinman, Scarecrow and Cowardly Lion pops up to try to get the youngsters to help him track them down.

"Tu-da? that way?" he asks, pointing to the wings.

The kids giggle and point in the other direction. Frustrated, he scurries off.

The plot sticks close to the American version, except that good ol' Auntie Em is just plain Mom.

The costume designer has a curious view of the Plains garb, outfitting the cast in a cross between West Texas and Dodge City.

Mom wears a crocheted brown shawl and granny bonnet and farmhands sport cowboy hats and blue vests.

The biggest hit of all is the Wicked Witch of the West. But in the Russian version she's more likely a crotchety old ragpicker than a doer of evil deeds.

She creaks around, gamely telling the audience of knock off the laughing, that she's as pretty as she ever was. Otherwise, she fumes and fusses in a baggy brown dress tied with a rope, cooking up schemes with her flying monkeys to launch against Elli.

The Wizard, in an apparent bid to tidy up the violence, isn't even asking for her demise — just her gold hat.

Your Birthday

By Stella Wilder

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 28 — Born today, you are practical even in considering the ideal. You know the difference between probable and possible and you are not inclined to spend much time trying to transform the latter into the former. You have a basically artistic temperament and may be difficult to get along with, but you are honest and straightforward and will not deceive another person for any reason. No one should feel at a loss to know what his relationship with you is; you tell him.

You are sympathetic toward any with difficult problems, but you insist that he at least make the effort to solve them on his own. You have little patience with the lazy or the ignorant, but infinite patience with those who try to understand, but fail. You put a great deal of effort into teaching, whether professionally or simply to help others help themselves.

There are times when you are extravagant, self-indulgent, and even spoiled. There are also times when you will sacrifice whatever you can for another's well-being. Loved ones and close friends know that you will remain true to those of whom you are fond, regardless of the obstacles to loyalty.

To find what is in store for you tomorrow, select your birthday and read the corresponding paragraph. Let your birthday star be your daily guide.

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 29

SAGITTARIUS(Nov.22-Dec.21) — Lasting results of a generous move begin to show. Welcome a change for the better.

CAPRICORN(Dec.22-Jan.19) — Stick to humanitarian principles as you criticize others. You can be honest and kind.

AQUARIUS(Jan.20-Feb.18) — A tendency toward conceit makes another's presence difficult. Hide feelings of distaste.

PISCES(Feb.19-March 20) — A benevolent move by an old and good friend makes this a special day for you and yours.

ARIES(March 21-April 19) — Beware that procrastination is not misterpreted as shirking new responsibilities.

TAURUS(April 20-May 20) — A lasting influence on another can be established if you catch the attention of one in distress.

GEMINI(May 21-June 20) — A generous move will be appreciated by all who benefit from it, now and in the future.

CANCER(June 21-July 22) — You can demonstrate astuteness without being thought a "show-off." Direct questions to higher-ups.

LEO(July 23-Aug.22) — Conceit marks all activities accomplished without help. Become involved with other people.

VIRGO(Aug.23-Sept.22) — Material success is guaranteed by hard work. Don't develop habits you will only have to break later.

LIBRA(Sept.23-Oct.22) — Beware another's radical disposition doesn't rub off on you. Make others aware of and happy with you.

SCORPIO(Oct.23-Nov.21) — You may not like the height of fashion but new purchases bring you into that limelight anyway.

Pats pluck Eagles, 14-6

FOXBORO, Mass. [AP] – Steve Grogan passed for two touchdowns in the first half, and the New England defense sacked Philadelphia quarterback Ron Jaworski eight times Sunday as the Patriots kept alive faint playoff hopes with a 14-6 National Football League victory over the Eagles.

Grogan hit Stanley Morgan on a scoring shot covering 64 yards in the first period, and then drilled a 16-yard pass to Darryl Stingley for another touchdown in the second period. The New England defense did the rest as the Patriots boosted their record to 7-4, while handing the Eagles their eighth loss in 11 games.

The Eagles averted a shutout as Jaworski broke out of trouble and passed 12 yards to Charles Smith for a touchdown with just 52 seconds remaining.

The Patriots, often playing a stunting defense, harassed Jaworski the entire game. In addition to dropping the Philadelphia quarterback eight times, the Patriots intercepted two passes and forced one fumble.

New England stopped three Philadelphia scoring threats in the first half, with Ove Johansson having one 19-yard field goal attempt blocked by Sam Hunt, and another 33-yard boot going wide.

In the second half, Philadelphia had a couple more chances ruined on New England sacks and interceptions by Tim Fox and Bob Howard. Grogan's touchdown tosses were his 14th and 15th of the season.

However, it was the defense that provided the Patriots the victory.

It was at its best when the Eagles were given a first down one yard from the goal on a pass interference call, with New England in front 7-0 in the first quarter. Two running plays failed to gain, and Jaworski's pass into the end zone was broken up before Hunt blocked Johansson's first field goal attempt.

The Patriots and the Eagles exchanged fumbles in New England territory at the outset of the game. However, Grogan wasted little time in putting the Patriots on the scoreboard on their third series of downs.

This scene was typical of yesterday's New England-Philadelphia game – the Eagles being stopped cold. In this instance, Patriot linebacker Steve Zabel pulls Eagle running back Mike Hogan down after Hogan took a pass from quarterback Ron Jaworski. Philly's signal-caller was sacked eight times himself, as New England stifled the Eagles en route to a 14-6 which kept the Patriots' playoff hopes alive. (UPI)

Icemen get no respect

I feel like Rodney Dangerfield – "I don't get no respect."

Apparently, some individuals in the athletic department seem to think that the hockey program doesn't exist at UMass Amherst.

Upon my arrival at Orr rink Saturday, November 19, I found to my chagrin that there weren't any hockey programs to be found.

WHY?

Sports Information Director Dick Page was ill and unable to answer, but his secretary said the person that was supposed to bring the programs never showed up. GREAT!

How was I supposed to know the Lowell players?

"I don't get no respect."

Orr rink, like Dangerfield's clubs, "are so far in the wood that they get reviewed in Field and Stream." At least that seems to be the attitude of the athletic department here at Amherst.

Yet, all the blame can't be placed on the shoulders of the athletic department. After-all, it is working within a very, very limited budget and thanks to certain legislators, the hockey program can't offer scholarships.

... Oh yes! and it's basketball season.

No slap intended to the basketball team, but a gripe that it's treated as the only winter sport in a state that produces far more hockey players than basketball players.

"I don't get no respect," becomes the hockey team's impassioned plea.

... and getting back to the scholarship-less hockey program at UMass-Amherst, Mr. Dangerfield has some interesting analogies.

I called him in New York and asked him what his wife does to him when he doesn't bring in any money.

"Well Mike, she doesn't do anything, but I notice that my dog has a tendency to bark at me more often."

There is no dog at UMass.

Maybe a passive mongrel, but certainly not a snarling German shepherd.

Otherwise, Columbia Point would have never materialized. Columbia Point, for those of you who don't know, is the basketball-hockey complex that will be built on the UMass-Boston campus. "Rip-off," you say. "How dare they build a sports-complex on a commuter school campus with only one-quarter the student population of UMass-Amherst?"

"Ridiculous, twisted logic," you say. Ah, but it's true (that they are building a sports complex at Columbia Point and what you say).

You ask, "Why don't these certain legislators just hire a construction company, complete with bulldozers, wreckers, bull-dozers, cranes and flatbed trucks, to uplift all the buildings off their foundations at UMass-Amherst and transport them down the Mass Pike to Boston?"

They might. At least that way we'll get our basketball-hockey complex.

The hockey team cries out in unison, "We don't get no respect."

"How are they going to assemble a team there (Columbia Point)?" asks co-captain Bob White.

"The good hockey players in Boston are going to go to Boston University, Northeastern or Harvard anyway."

True, But Mr. White, you're being logical and legislators aren't elected unless they're illogical.

Currently, UMass is one of the largest, if not the largest team in ECAC Division II. The way the hockey program is floating down the stream, the Minutemen will be the largest team in Division III before you know it. Imagine a University with 20,000 students playing Westfield, Framingham and Worcester States in hockey.

If state schools like North Adams, Salem and Boston can build and promote successful programs, why can't UMass?

When Rodney Dangerfield quit show business at age 28, he said, "to give you an idea how well I was doing at the time, I was the only one who knew I quit."

I'm afraid that certain administrators think they can drop hockey as silently as Dangerfield dropped out of show-business.

"Nobody will know it existed."

The hockey team cries out one more time in unison:

"WE DON'T GET NO RESPECT."

Holy Cross plays Rocky and grounds BC Eagles

BOSTON [UPI] – One game does not a season make. But one win has pumped Geritol into an aged and deteriorating football rivalry.

With its stunning 35-20 win Saturday over Boston College, the Holy Cross football team proved emotion speaks louder than won-loss records.

Holy Cross had dropped nine straight games before edging a weak Connecticut team seven days prior to the 73rd meeting with Boston College.

Boston College had won five of its last six games and had dominated the Holy Cross series with 10 straight victories, to gain a 40-29-3 edge in the cross-state, Jesuit rivalry.

"I heard that we didn't have a chance; I heard the grumblings too, that I was too small to play quarterback in college," said Peter Colombo, who scored on a 14-yard keeper and directed the other four Holy Cross touchdowns.

"But I had an uncle who was pretty small, too, a man who was a big factor in my mind while we were getting all that criticism. That man was Rocky Marciano."

The Holy Cross team entered the game looking like another Rocky, the underdog nobody who landed unexpected blows on the champ's face in the recent Academy Award winning movie. Only the Crusaders did better than the film's Rocky. They won with a pair of fourth quarter scoring punches after the Eagles had let down their guard.

A pass interception by linebacker Mike Jank and return to the Boston College 20 yard line set up one score. Bob Ireland's recovery of the ensuing kickoff led to the Crusaders' insurance touchdown.

Boston College acted like Apollo Creed, the champion in "Rocky" who didn't know what hit him.

"They reacted like they heard us in the huddle on every play," said Boston College receiver Paul McCarty, who was held without a catch. "Every time we called a play, their defense was right in the spot I was supposed to go. "I don't think we were ready to play this game. We just weren't up for it." The Crusaders obviously were ready as they gained 296 yards on the ground against the Boston College team that had given less rushing yardage to eighth ranked Pittsburgh and top-ranked Texas.

Holy Cross coach Neil Wheelwright, citing the game as the biggest win of his career, said the return to the wishbone offense seemed to confuse the Boston College defense.

"We hadn't used our broken wishbone since the Dartmouth game a last minute 17-14 loss, but we thought it might work against Boston College because it spreads them out a little."

Stickers take 7th spot

By JIM GLEASON
Collegian Staff

DENVER, Col. — The UMass field hockey team, eliminated in the first round of competition, came back to capture seventh place in the nation here this past week. After an opening loss to Delaware, the Minutemen won two straight before again losing to UConn in the consolation round.

West Chester State won the title with a 1-0 win over Ursinus for the third time in three years. Ursinus finished second also for the third time in as many years.

UMass finished the tournament with two wins and two losses, scoring eight goals and therefore unofficially came in seventh in the 16 team field. UConn, the other team from the Northeast, placed sixth.

Despite poor field conditions of ice and snow, the games started on Wednesday. UMass took the field against Delaware, the fourth ranked team. Delaware started quickly and had offensive pressure most of the first half. The UMass defense held out until the midway mark when Molaison scored for Delaware.

Offsetting this pressure, UMass managed some good scoring chances but couldn't follow through. At one point, Laura O'Neil directed a shot past Delaware goalie Buzz Harrington but had to watch it go just wide of the goal.

Coach Judith Davidson felt that these early missed opportunities were the key to the game.

"If we had been able to score, the game would have been completely different," she said. "It would have made them (Delaware) play more defensively."

The second half was more of the same story. Delaware, with its fast forward line and good stickwork, kept the pressure on. Newby scored at 5:10 into the period.

No more goals were scored and the score ended 2-0.

Reviewing the game, it was evident that Delaware was the best team UMass has faced all year, although the statistics don't show it. UMass had 11 shots on goal, only two less than Delaware. Its quality stickhandling and passing disturbed UMass and made the Minutewomen work individually and not as a team. The stickers were hustling and resting at different times and therefore couldn't put it together.

In the consolation bracket, UMass was scheduled to play Arizona, losers to Central Michigan. The only motivation for these teams was to play for fifth place, which is the highest a first round loser could finish.

UMass took out its frustrations on the western team and won, 4-1. The Minutewomen completely turned things around and controlled play. Cheryl Meliones scored the team's first goal of the tournament — and only goal of the half — from Sue Kreider at 9:00.

Judy Kennedy scored her first goal of the season early in the second period on a hard shot from the top of the circle.

After Arizona's Hendrickson cut the lead to 2-1, O'Neil raced in on a partial breakaway and drove in a shot with 12 minutes remaining. Kelly Salls iced the game four minutes later with the first goal of her career.

The score ended at 4-1 which was the second highest total of goals scored this year. More importantly, it gave the team confidence that it could score.

On Thursday, UMass faced Bemidji State, a team with impressive credentials. Bemidji had an offensive player with over 100 goals scored this year over a 46 game schedule.

UMass was aware of Bemidji's talent and knew they would have to play its best to win. And the stickers did, 4-1, in a game which Davidson said "was the best field hockey played by any team in the U.S."

UMass scored first on a play which has been successful for the team all year. On a penalty corner, Jody Wickman hit the ball out front to Meliones who caught it and left it for Lynsie Wickman, who drove it behind the goalie.

In the second half, Bemidji tied the score on a penalty corner.

But UMass continued its fine passing and kept the pressure on the defense. At the 15 minute mark, UMass forced the defense to make a mistake. The Bemidji goalie was forced to cover up on the ball which resulted in a penalty shot for Sue Kibling. She wasted little time before she pushed a low shot in the right side of the goal.

Meliones and O'Neil also scored later for their second goals in the tourney. The offense which at times during the season was ineffective was now scoring quickly and with authority.

Cheryl Meliones stickhandles against Arizona as Sue Kreider looks on. Meliones suffered a possible broken finger later in the tournament. (Staff photo by Jim Gleason)

After the win, the team continued on and played UConn on Friday. Like the other games with the Huskies this year, UMass didn't play its game. The Minutewomen's passes weren't as good and they weren't as aggressive. Neither team took control and first half ended in a scoreless tie.

Early in the second half, UConn was awarded a penalty shot when Gayle Hutchinson stopped a sure goal by blocking it with her shoulder. It was the first penalty shot UMass defended against all year and Kathy Gipps had no chance to save it.

The stickers couldn't sustain offensive pressure long enough and UConn made the goal stand up for a 1-0 victory.

Kathy Gipps accounted for the loss. "We just don't play well against UConn. It's a mental block like we had with Springfield for so many years."

Besides being their last game of the season, the UConn game also marked the last collegiate game for seniors Kelly Salls, Judy Kennedy, Ginger Bulman, Sue Kibling, Kathy Gipps, and Cheryl Meliones.

Gridders: From joy to dismay

By MIKE BERGER
Collegian Staff

Two weeks earlier the scene was ever so different.

Against New Hampshire UMass was the celebrator, the triumphant gang that slapped each other on the back, with the attitude that "no one could beat us."

After the Yankee Conference title game with UNH, it was the Wildcat players that were seen with their heads in their laps, crying, and trying to console themselves and each other.

Saturday, it was the Minutemen's turn.

The scene was so distant from the UMass players' minds even after the 34-7 Boston College loss.

"We knew," said tight end Moses Williams, "that even with the BC loss, that we were a damned good team. A team that didn't beat themselves. We lost to BC but they beat us, we didn't beat ourselves."

"There are no excuses," said defensive back Joe Harrington.

"When it rains, it pours," said offensive lineman Jim Penta.

"I feel sorry for the seniors," said defensive lineman John D'Amato. "It was a good year, a season we all worked hard for. For it to end like this, well, I just don't know."

At the front of the lockerroom sat defensive back Dave Croasdale and quarterback Mike Fallon, two players that not by their own choice will have to face the criticism.

For Croasdale, who two weeks earlier had intercepted three passes, won the game ball, and been voted the game's outstanding player, it was a day most resembling hell.

In his last college football game, the senior, named to the Yankee Conference all-star team, fumbled a punt which gave Lehigh the ball on the UMass 16. If that misery wasn't enough, Croasdale was called for a personal foul that moved the ball to the eight.

Then Lehigh's Steve Kreider, who victimized the UMass secondary all day (nine receptions, 171 yards and four TD's) caught a pass from quarterback Mike Rieker for the game-winning score.

The victim-cornerback Dave Croasdale.

As if enough daggers hadn't pierced his heart, the officials made two more highly questionable interference calls when Lehigh had second and 10 on its own 45 and on third and 12 when Rieker (25-40, 351 yards) overthrew his receiver in desperation.

"My heart fell when I saw the ref throw those flags against Dave," said co-captain Peter McCarty.

"He's had such a tremendous season all year long and to end like this, it's not fair."

"I want to make one thing clear, and it's to say that Dave Croasdale did not lose the game for us. We, as a team lost it in the first half when we were down 23-0," said McCarty.

Opposite Croasdale in the teary-eyed Minutemen lockerroom sat Fallon, again in the hot seat for not putting points on the sooner in the first half.

"I didn't throw the ball as well as I should have. Overthrown receivers, busted plays, not taking advantage of situations. Things just didn't click today," said Fallon.

Fallon, recipient of the Jerry Nason Award for Senior achievement by the New England Football Writers Assn., was 13 for 25 for 138 yards.

"I should have hit John Romboli for a touchdown pass when he was wide open, have used Kevin Cummings more, and should have gotten the ball to John Gladchuk for a first down on our last possession of the game," said Fallon.

"It wasn't Mike's fault in the first half. We, as an offensive line, weren't moving. Nothing was happening up front," said Cummings.

The defeat will wipe out the almost miraculous comeback by the Minutemen, down by 23 points in the first half.

"We were all juiced up pretty well. We had everything going our way. It was our turn," said head coach Dick MacPherson.

"You have to take the good with the bad," said Penta, "but I wish the bad doesn't have to come like this."

THE HONEYMOONERS CHRISTMAS SPECIAL

Christmas is in the air and Jackie Gleason and the Honeymooners will celebrate that holiday with a version of 'A Christmas Carol' that Dickens would never have dreamed of in his wildest nightmare in 'The Honeymooners Christmas Special,' airing Monday, Nov. 28 on ABC-TV.

Jackie Gleason (left) and Audrey Meadows as Ralph and Alice Kramden and Art Carney (right) and Jane Kean as Ed and Trixie Norton have been fighting life's little frustrations ever since their days as television's favorite friends on the old 'Honeymooners.'

Ralph's boss believes that Ralph is the perfect man to direct the company's Christmas play. Ralph wants the assignment because the last director was promoted to Vice President. Ralph, of course, has never in his life directed a play, but that doesn't stop him as he casts Norton (Carney) in the roles of Tiny Tim and Scrooge in 'A Christmas Carol' and sells commercial plugs to help pay the production expenses.

BING'S MERRIE OLDE CHRISTMAS

Bing Crosby, whose legendary voice has been a part of Christmas since he began celebrating the season in song about half a century ago, will be seen Wednesday, Nov. 30 on CBS-TV in his annual Christmas special, an imaginative hour of music, humor and warmth taped in London in early September, five weeks before his death.

The innovative special, entitled 'Bing Crosby's Merrie Olde Christmas,' is woven around the Crosby family's responding to an invitation from an imaginary British relative, Sir Percival Crosby, to celebrate the holidays in his ancestral English country home filled with characters portrayed by some of Britain's most popular performers.

Included are special guest rock superstar David Bowie (left), Twiggy, Ron Moody, top British award-winning comic genius Stanley Baxter and the Trinity Boys Choir (from London's Trinity School) in addition to Crosby's wife Kathryn and their three children.

Brian Keith, Ken Howard, Blythe Danner and James Olson star in the television adaptation of the best-selling novel 'The Court Martial of George Armstrong Custer' on 'The Hallmark Hall of Fame' Thursday, Dec. 1 on NBC-TV.

Screenwriter John Gay adapted Douglas C. Jones' highly acclaimed novel, a literary success in both its hardcover and paperback editions, which combines fact and fiction to portray what might have happened if the controversial Gen. Custer (Olson, seated right) had survived the massacre at Little Big Horn to stand trial for his actions.

Keith (standing) plays Allan Jacobson, Custer's defense counsel in the court martial. Howard takes on the role of Army prosecutor Maj. Asa Gardiner and Miss Danner (seated, left) portrays Custer's wife Elizabeth.

U.S. to attend Cairo meetings this weekend

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Administration officials said yesterday the United States will attend Middle East peace talks in Cairo this weekend, but the official announcement will be delayed while the decision is coordinated with other parties.

Officials said the decision has been made, in principle, and that the tactics are being worked out.

They said the United States probably would be represented by Undersecretary of State Philip Habib or Alfred Atherton, assistant secretary of state for the Near East and South Asia.

Among questions to be worked out, the officials said, is whether the American representative will travel to Syria, Jordan, and Saudi Arabia after the Cairo summit.

At a State Department briefing for reporters yesterday spokesman Hodding Carter said the issue of sending an American representative to Cairo "was under active consideration, but I don't have anything to give you on who or how, or even whether we will be sending someone."

Carter said the United States is in touch with all other parties to the Middle East talks, including Syria and the Soviet Union.

Soviet Ambassador Anatoly Dobrynin spent 40 minutes at the State Department yesterday with Secretary of State Cyrus Vance, and Carter said the Middle East was the principal subject covered in the meeting.

The official State Department hesitation about the Cairo meeting reflects apprehension about the change of direction that Middle East diplomacy has taken since Egyptian President Anwar Sadat made his trip to Jerusalem last week.

The officials said Sadat's initiatives have created a new set of factors that must be considered, requiring new thinking on the part of American strategists seeking a comprehensive Middle East settlement.

The State Department has all but abandoned hope of meeting its target for a Geneva conference by year's end, but White House press secretary Jody Powell said yesterday an immediate Geneva meeting may not be as important if the Middle East momentum is kept flowing.

Among the potential dangers of a Cairo meeting, officials said, is the possibility of a separate Egyptian-Israeli settlement that could impede a comprehensive agreement involving Jordan, Syria and Lebanon.

Syria has said it definitely will not attend the Cairo session and Jordan also has indicated it will not be at the meeting.

Governors to visit

By JOE QUINLAN

Massachusetts Gov. Michael S. Dukakis will be attending an economic conference with New Hampshire Gov. Meldrim Thomson this Friday night in the UMass Campus Center. This will be the second time Dukakis has visited the campus this semester.

The two governors, along with U.S. Representatives Silvio Conte, R-Mass. and Michael Harrington, D-Mass., and officials from federal agencies are scheduled to attend a Friday night press conference, which is part of a two day session, sponsored by the Northeast Council for Economic Action, a federally-funded agency.

Dukakis said Thomson earlier Friday are scheduled to meet with the other New England governors in the New England Regional Commission session in Essex, Conn.

Dukakis will then spend Friday afternoon in Western Massachusetts, according to an aide, while Thomson will be the guest speaker at the Hampshire County Republican Club's annual meeting at the Hotel Northampton at 6 p.m.

The Dukakis aide yesterday said the rest of the governor's schedule for Friday afternoon has not yet been completed. Dukakis will not be sleeping overnight, the aide added. Thomson is expected to prepare his speech before attending the Republican club's $6.50 a ticket dinner, according to his aide, Buddy Jenkins.

A Republican candidate for the Massachusetts gubernatorial election next year, state Rep. and House minority leader Francis Hatch, R-Beverly, will also attend the dinner in Northampton, an aide to Hatch said yesterday.

A spokesman for the Alternative Energy Coalition, an anti-nuclear power group which helped organize and occupy the construction site of a nuclear power plant in Seabrook, N.H. last May, said he does not expect the group to picket Thomson's visit. Thomson has been a staunch supporter of nuclear power during the confrontations between anti-nuclear power demonstrators and the utility officials overseeing the construction of the Seabrook plant.

The Northeast Council for Economic Action has been under contract from the Economic Development Administration during the past year to help revitalize nine Northeastern states, according to councilmember Mayor Beard.

Beard said the council is composed of 30 people, 15 each from the public and private sectors of the Northeast economy. The hour-long press conference will involve discussions of the Northeast economy, Beard said.

Bromery denies faculty claims

By CHRISTOPHER H. SCHMITT
Collegian Staff

Larry S. Roberts, chairman of the Amherst chapter of the faculty union, yesterday said he believes the administration deliberately leaked details of the union's contract proposal to the press.

However, Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery, UMass executive vice-president charged with formulating and implementing policy with the faculty union, said the leak did not come from the administration.

Roberts and Bromery were referring to details of the faculty union's contract proposal which last Wednesday appeared in local media.

Roberts will tomorrow issue a statement concerning the leak, and the faculty's proposal and also said the news leak will be a topic of primary interest at a faculty union-administration bargaining session scheduled for today in Boston.

"Clearly since it (the proposal) had a cover memo from Russel Jones, its absolute, 100 per cent source was the administration."

Jones, dean of the UMass School of Engineering, is a member of the administration bargaining team.

Roberts said it was his "firm opinion" the leak was made with the official sanction of the administration. He also said there is "no way to know" who specifically on the administration leaked the proposal.

Meanwhile, Bromery said the leak did not come from the administration and he "wouldn't try to point the finger at either side."

But, Bromery said as he understood it, "a union member let it (the proposal) get out."

Bromery said it is "wrong without knowing to accuse either side" of making the leak. He said the leak may have been a result of the "wide distribution" among union personnel given the proposal in order that union members have an opportunity to comment and make suggestions on it before presenting it to the administration.

Furthermore, Bromery said he has issued a memorandum to administration personnel re-affirming the "housekeeping" agreement reached with the union earlier this year and also that he would "reprimand" any member of the administration who he found leaked the proposal.

The "housekeeping" agreement reached earlier this year says in part that no media releases will be made without mutual consent.

Roberts said the alleged leak of the union proposal by the administration is a "violation" of the housekeeping agreement.

Following the leak of the proposal, some members of the administration team criticized the union proposal as being "extreme" in its demands. Roberts charged the administration, in leaking the proposal, is using the claim that the union proposal is extreme to justify the administration taking a hard line with the faculty in contract negotiations.

Selectmen to continue eyeing plan

By PAMELA LINDMARK
Collegian Staff

Amherst Selectmen

Amherst Selectmen last night voted to continue study of a proposed agreement between neighboring towns which would determine the insurance liability of each town in connection with police and fire officers.

Most police and fire departments now call upon local departments for assistance in emergency situations. But controversy has arisen revolving around the insurance question of who would be responsible for premiums the receiving or the sending community.

Amherst is self-insured, picking up the cost of departmental injuries and-or loss in its tax-rate. Other towns such as Pelham and Belchertown are insured through an insurance agency.

In the past, Amherst's policy has been to attribute liabilities to the receiving town — that town receiving assistance. As outlined by the proposed Mutual Aid Agreement, a written contract would guarantee this to be true.

In an effort to clarify the Mutual Aid agreement with other communities, selectmen have authorized an investigation of alternatives, as well as the establishment of a meeting between towns to iron out difficulties.

In other business, a report by the Amherst Youth Advisory Committee pointed to the committee's progress and need for increased support.

The committee serves Amherst youth not attracted to other programs and activities in the town. It is an outreach program, assisting those not attracted by regulated school, athletic and recreational activities.

Maryland appeals decision

BALTIMORE [UPI] — The state of Maryland has formally asked the Supreme Court to reverse a decision requiring states to charge foreign students the same tuition as instate students at publicly supported colleges and universities.

The Supreme Court agreed to hear the case last month and a state official hand-delivered a brief to the court to meet a weekend deadline.

Accompanying the state's appeal was a friend-of-the-court brief representing 28 states that side with Maryland, including Massachusetts.

The 4th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals recently upheld a lower court decision that foreign students whose parents work at international agencies be given the same consideration for domestic status as students living in Maryland.

If the Supreme Court upholds the appeals court decision, it could cost about 400 U.S. colleges and universities up to $300 million in tuition now paid by foreign students.

At the University of Maryland, about $750,000 in tuition involving 518 foreign students is at stake. The university charges in-state students $784 yearly in tuition and $2,714 to out-of-state students.

Three foreign students sued two years ago, contending they should be entitled to in-state tuition fees even though their parents were exempt from state and federal taxes.

Central Councillor pushes leasing plan

By DIANE BURAK
Collegian Staff

Central

Central Area Council members last night heard David Barenberg, a member of the SOP explain "A New Lease on Residential Life," the second draft of a proposal supporting student leasing of dorms.

Barenberg said the University would be obligated to pay for damages that were their fault. The University is not living up to health codes, Barenberg said, citing student reports of bugs in a dorm and the Physical Plant is "far behind in doing things."

Barenberg said Residential Resources Management is in favor of leasing because it would force the Physical Plant to deal with conditions in the dorms. He also said it would prevent situations like those in the fall when lounges were used as living quarters.

CAC members were urged to inform their dorm senators about funds from an estimated 1,000 UMass students who were not taken into account in the Student Senate's budget. CAC President-Zinan also said in a report that the money is "morally ours" and could be used for area dorm activities.

A proposed constitutional amendment enlarging the voting in the Senate to include people from various academic departments was also mentioned by CAC President Mark Zinan, and in other business, he said he would meet with other area government presidents and members of the administration on Friday to decide on a new liquor policy for area governments.

In other action, Jay Flynn was suspended as Wheeler representative by Zinan for unexcused absences. A request for $150 was made for an International Dance and Disco to be sponsored by Van Meter South. The proposal was tabled until the next meeting.

CAOS asks salary money

By SUSAN O'NEIL
Collegian Staff

A member of Counseling Assistance for Older Students asked the Commuter Collective last night for $7,500 for staff salaries.

The collective, however, did not have a quorum present and could not vote on the request. A motion made to give the counseling group $2,000 will be voted on in two weeks at the collective's next regular meeting.

David Baillie, coordinator of the counseling group, said it is operating on a budget of about $14,000, about 30 per cent of what it needs. Counseling Assistance for Older Students is a Recognized Student Organization that provides academic, personal, marriage and career counseling for older students on campus.

Baillie said requests for money have been sent to 13 campus groups, most of whom have refused.

Although the counseling group has been granted federal monies through the CETA program, those monies have not been available. "We are about third on the list for receiving money," Baillie said, "but we don't know when they will be able to give it to us."

The collective decided last night not to discuss Lou Wilson, because of its lack of information about him. Wilson has written in Outfront, a student publication partially funded by the collective, about the controversial Free Church, Inc. under the pen name of Mark Lewis.

The collective will have a special meeting next Monday to discuss Outfront.

DC chief proposes fee hike

By SETH JACOBSON
Collegian Staff

The director of the University Food Services last night proposed a raise of $48 per person in the meal plan fee for fiscal year 1979.

$ Rents Committee

Arthur Warren told the Undergraduate Student Senate Rents and Fees Committee that the fee increase would be needed to meet increasing food and payroll costs.

Also at the meeting last night, the University director of planning indicated that campus meter rates may double from 10 to 20 cents an hour if present efforts to make up an estimated parking and transportation deficit of $250,000 are not successful. So far, he said, they have not been.

The director of the Campus Center said there should be no change in the current Campus Center fee of $79 in fiscal year 1979.

When presenting his food services proposal, Arthur Warren said he hopes to eliminate a current Boarding Hall Trust Fund deficit of $268,000 by fiscal year 1980. The breakdown of the meal plan increases in his proposal for the 10-meal plan, from $691 to $739; for the 14-meal plan, $786 to $834; and for the 19-meal plan, $856 to $904.

Warren maintained that the proposed increases are not unreasonable, citing food systems in schools such as Harvard University and Dartmouth College, which charge about $400 more per student each year than UMass.

Although Warren did not indicate the food quality would improve with the rise in cost, but did say it would not worsen.

Jack Littlefield, University director of planning, said the possible hike in parking meter rates would only be necessary if current measures such as the stricter ticketing in campus parking lots and the discontinuance of free or discounted parking in surface lots fail.

Other steps that could be taken, Littlefield said, would be to increase garage parking rates for non-students and eliminate free commercial parking.

Free faculty parking, as suggested in a recent Massachusetts Society of Professors proposal to University administrators, could result in a loss of $50,000 to the campus parking system, Littlefield said in response to a question from the committee. Littlefield said it was unlikely the proposal would be approved.

Director of the Campus Center William Harris said that to keep the Campus Center fee at $79, the complex will have to sacrifice various physical improvements to the building, the recovery of garage deficits, and the possibility of replacing Saga Food Services with a service run by the Campus Center itself, a proposal that, if implemented, Harris said could save about $125,000 a year.

Harris said that because of a projected decrease in student enrollment, the Campus Center could stand to lose about $260,000 in revenue from student fees next year.

Monies originally allocated for renovations of the Hatch will be cut from $70,000 to $29,000 to keep the fee the same. Priorities for monies, Harris said, will be replacing some elevator cables and installing panic hardware in the Campus Center.

One committee member asked Vice Chancellor for Administration and Finance James McBee if faculty should be expected to pay for use of the Campus Center. McBee answered that he didn't think that would be realistic.

"I hope you realize that we have been more than reasonable in giving you this proposal," McBee said in reference to the presentations.

The Rents and Fees Committee is scheduled to present the various proposals to the Undergraduate Student Senate at its meeting tomorrow night at 8.

Activist ranks sports violence

By NIEL MOELLER
Collegian Staff

Jack Scott, author and sports critic, spoke on topics ranging from drugs to sports violence before 250 persons at Mahar Auditorium last night.

On the introduction of hockey to the U.S., Scott said, "The people who rip this country off one way or another get bored by the time they're 40. I mean, how many tract houses that blow down in the first wind can you build? How many Las Vegas showgirls can you bring up to your room? So they brought hockey to this country from Canada.

"In Canada, yeah, it was a rough game, but studies document that as hockey became more and more an American sport and was televised, it became more violent," he said.

In his long, rambling address, Scott many times mentioned his association with Portland Trailblazers center Bill Walton, with whom he and his wife share an apartment in Portland. Scott is currently completing Walton's autobiography, he said.

Scott claimed that Walton, along with many other players in the National Basketball Association, are pawns of the owners and their "pushers." "They call them team doctors," he said. "The drugs they dispense aren't drugs like marijuana. I'm talking about drugs that destroy the endocrine glands, that atrophy all the bodily functions."

"One thing a lot of people don't know is athletes often play much better in college than in the pros, because their bodies deteriorate because of drugs," said Scott.

Scott charged widespread racism in sports, citing basketball as an example of a sport particularly afflicted by racist ideas. "If it's a choice between a black player and a white player for MVP (most valuable player) in this country, you know who's going to get it," he said.

"It's really sad for me to see a black player like Sidney Wicks become a scapegoat for all the troubles of the Boston Celtics," he said.

The International Women's Week planning committee met for the second time last night to exchange information concerning programming and discuss the committee's financial situation.

Irene Richard, staff coordinator of the committee from Student Activities, outlined steps being taken to draw financial support and services from campus organizations. Richard said, "In terms of activity, there will be no problem filling up seven nights of events."

There is a problem in getting funding for the programs on time, said Richards. The IWW committee will approach organizations such as the Undergraduate Student Senate this week to determine how much support they can expect, in order to plan their budget. The main expenses the committee will encounter are in the areas of child care, workshops and publicity.

The Distinguished Visitors Program is looking at Betty Ford, Barbara Walters and former Olympic gold medalist Wilma Rudolph as possible keynote speakers.

The Little Flags Theatre, which performed at last year's International Women's Week is being asked by the committee to stage "The Furies of Mother Jones."

One major problem the committee has encountered is convincing people it is not too early to start working on the week which will be held March 5-11, 1978. Richard stressed the need to begin early. "I learned a lot about better time schedules for coordinating the necessary tasks from last year's experience," said Richard.

One activity planned to bring women interested in the week together immediately is a drop-in lunch. Every Tuesday from noon to 2 p.m., beginning Dec. 6, the committee invites women to bring their lunch and share their ideas for the week on the 10th floor of the Campus Center.

The committee indicated it would like to begin designing the women's week logo, and invited artists to submit their ideas. People with skills in graphics are needed to design and layout brochures. For more information contact Richard at the Student Activities office.

IWW was held for the first time last year as an extension of previous international women's days, said Richard. Congressperson Bella Abzug and jazz singer Betty Carter were included in the list of speakers and performers. More than 100 workshops were offered dealing with women's issues such as health, work and sexuality.

Union budget held up

By RICHARD LENIHAN
Collegian Staff

The operating budget of the UMass Student Federal Credit Union has been held up on the desk of the Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs, Robert L. Woodbury.

According to a Nov. 16 memorandum from Woodbury, the budget was decided to be illegal by University lawyers because it was not being used for "direct academic and educational functions."

Much of the money for the union goes towards office equipment. The staff is volunteers.

The budget of $920, 10 per cent of the amount originally requested, was approved last spring by the Student Government Association for the operation of the student credit union. Although University lawyers at the time claimed that the association had no legal right to fund a credit union, representatives from the Legal Studies Office maintained it could.

This summer, the budget was approved by the University Board of Trustees, but was held up this fall by Woodbury. University lawyers suggested that the Credit Union budget would be legal if it were used for educational purposes such as guest speakers and honorariums.

Woodbury, in a telephone conversation last night, reiterated his position, standing by the opinion of the lawyers. When asked if he would approve the budget if it were used for guest speakers and honorariums, as suggested, he stated, "I assume it would be."

"They (guest speakers and honorariums) are part of the Credit Union's plans but not a major part," said credit union President Peter Bloom in response to Woodbury's suggestions.

Responding to charges that the Credit Union does not presently serve educational and academic functions, Bloom said, "The UMass credit union is unique in that we do perform educational functions and these functions are contingent upon the survival of the credit union."

According to Bloom, the activities of the credit union represent the real-life application of what is learned in the classroom. Citing the example of interest rates, Bloom stated that what is only theory in an economics or finance class becomes very real in the everyday operations of the credit union.

At present, the union is entirely student run, free of any faculty supervision. "We aren't subject to any rules," said Bloom, "other than the existing federal regulations so that all deposits can be insured."

Asked if the credit union plans to appeal Woodbury's decision, Bloom responded, "We have not had a meeting on it (the memo) to decide what steps we are going to take."

Dapper O'Neil accuses White

BOSTON [AP] — City Councilor Albert "Dapper" O'Neil attacked Mayor Kevin White yesterday saying he has proof that a limousine obtained by the city was purchased, and not donated as White said when the city acquired the car.

A spokesman for White hotly denied the charges.

"It's a lie," White's press secretary George Regan said. "This is just his way of getting his name in the paper."

O'Neill said he has a notarized statement from Arthur N. Shade, a Falmouth, Maine, auto dealer, certifying the limousine was new and was never owned by a private party. The car was a demonstration model for Chaplin Cadillac-Oldsmobile Inc. in Falmouth, O'Neill said.

White said earlier that the car was donated by a Maine couple who wanted to remain anonymous.

"The car was not brand new," Regan said. "We've explained time and time again how the city obtained the limousine through the kindness of two people in Maine."

O'Neill said he will call a hearing in two weeks to investigate the matter further.

Alumnus Cosby Honored In L.A.

LOS ANGELES — Bill Cosby, who graduated from UMass last May as a Doctor of Education, became the 1,690th celebrity to have his name embedded in a star in the Hollywood Walk of Fame during a large ceremony on Nov. 23 in Hollywood, California.

The Walk of Fame, which lines both sides of Hollywood Boulevard, is cluttered with metal sidewalk stars in tribute to the artists and artisans who created and perpetuated the Hollywood aura. In the center of each star is an identifying symbol depicting the medium in which the celebrity achieved stardom — in Cosby's case, a miniature television.

Cosby is one of the country's foremost comedians, dramatic actors and recording artists. Although he has five Grammy awards, seven gold and six platinum records, as well as a Golden Apple Award and an Image Award, it was his achievements in television that brought him international fame. He has won four Emmy awards.

Cosby's dedication to children and his subtle, yet effective, battle against all types of prejudice has been recognized with nearly as many awards for his humanitarian activities as his professional achievements.

Following the formal unveiling of his star in the pavement, Cosby removed a large wad of bubble gum from his mouth and placed it in the center of the star claiming that he wanted to be the first person to stick gum on his name.

Cosby and his wife Camile then left the ceremonies to catch a flight back to their Massachusetts home. They and their four children seem to prefer the snow of New England to the sun of Southern California.

Sunday openings here

By DEBBIE WALLACE
Collegian Staff

Amherst stores are being opened on these Sundays before Christmas — but not all, and some reluctantly.

In a random sampling of stores, the Collegian received mixed reactions to the repeal of the blue laws for the four Sundays before the holidays.

Amherst store owners who chose to close Sunday said they feel this is the one family day of the week. In addition, owners are being asked to keep stores open until 9 p.m. week days before Christmas, and some of the smaller business owners said they feel staying open Sunday would be too much.

Apparently, the only Carriage Shop store open this past Sunday was the Mercantile. Owner Adrian Wilkins said, "Not too many people came in ... but it was worth my while to be open." Wilkins said it would be too much of a hassle to be open all Sundays for him, but for a small group owner these Sundays before the holidays are a good compromise.

Janet Odiorne, owner of the Sheep Shop, talked about a meeting that will take place in her store tonight. It will be decided if there are enough interested store owners to keep most of the shops open.

Here is a summary of the Collegian survey:

— Sun Music, was not open last Sunday but plans on being open the next three Sundays.

— Jack Mathews, owner of Mathews Shoes, said, "Working six days is enough. The store will not be open any Sunday."

— Paper Clip owner, Bill McKeon, said, "I wouldn't open on Sunday if every other store was open."

Debby Dongan, sales clerk at Wearhouse said, "Remaining open on Sunday is convenient for shoppers, the idea is good."

Don Muller, Leather Shed owner, said, "The store will be open the last two Sundays before Christmas. I wouldn't want to do this year round but it is good for people who work during the week so they don't have to crowd all of their shopping into one night."

Robert Smith, Art Shop owner, said, "If most of the stores stay open I feel I will have to. It bothers me that other store owners are planning to be open. It's not fair to ask employees to work on these Sundays.

"The law states an owner can ask his employees to work on these Sundays," he said, "but the employee can refuse. If the employee refuses, the owner has to work and I don't see a need to work seven days a week." Smith said.

Brian Williams, a Thompsons clothing store clerk, said, "Remaining open is better for a mall than for small stores."

One of the University's Roman Catholic priests cited arguments pro and con. Father Joseph Quigley said, "The idea of the Sabbath rest has religious and practical significance. If workers did not have this resting time they would be always working, and their pace would not be slowed. It is beneficial to a person to spend one day a week slowed down," he said.

It sets aside family time, and time for people to cater to themselves. As far as keeping the stores open for the special season, Father Quigley said, "It can benefit shoppers who might have little time during the week, but it can also be an imposition on those who have to work on those Sundays. It makes them perpetual motion machines in a way. Those workers such as public conveyance workers and bus drivers usually work on Sundays but are compensated with a day off on another day of the week," he said.

"The religious aspect of the blue law is important, but the primary consideration is a humanitarian significance," Father Quigley said.

The blue laws repealed this month by the Massachusetts Legislature are more than 300 years old.

Blue laws date back to 1237, when Henry III forbade the frequenting of market visits on Sunday. In the mid-16th century, Edward VI forbade certain games on Sunday and decreed Sunday for resting.

Quote 'misconstrued'

CONCORD, N.H. (AP) — A former lawyer for the Clamshell Alliance says his statements about trials for the demonstrators have been misconstrued.

Eric Blumenson of Boston said yesterday published reports were incorrect when they suggested that anti-nuclear demonstrators considered clogging the Rockingham County Superior Court with lengthy cases.

Blumenson said some members of the Clamshell's legal committee wanted five-day trials to present as much testimony as possible against nuclear power.

The motivation was not to break down the judicial process, he said.

Blumenson said he advised them against the lengthy trials because it would "clog the courts" and diminish their chances of winning their cases.

The defendants are appealing guilty findings that they trespassed on the site of the Seabrook nuclear power plant last May 1. More than 1,400 persons were arrested at the demonstration.

Blumenson submitted a document last week to Superior Court Judge Wayne Mullavey to answer charges that Blumenson said the court was the property of Public Service Co. of New Hampshire, which owns 50 percent of the Seabrook plant.

He was reported to have made the statement after Mullavey sentenced his client to several months in jail for criminal tresspassing.

The document said: "The (Clamshell Alliance's) legal committee believed that each trial should take a minimum of five days. I said our quarrel was not with the judicial system, that we should not clog the courts, which five day trials would do, that we should try to win and no trial over two days would be likely to do that."

★ Bromery denies claims

Bromery, however, said the administration needs "nothing" to justify its proposals.

There have also been conflicting reports regarding the size of the union's proposed wage hike.

The Collegian last Wednesday reported the union asked for wage hike of 36 per cent. An Associated Press dispatch yesterday said the faculty asked for a 50-100 per cent wage hike, and the Hampshire Gazette last Wednesday reported the hike to be 19 per cent.

The Gazette figure resulted from that newspaper's own calculations, based on information obtained in the leaked proposal. Sources told the Collegian yesterday the Associated Press estimate was based on comments made to the Amherst Record by an unnamed member of the administration bargaining team.

Roberts said the Collegian figure of 36 per cent was accurate, but it is an "over-simplification" because the union proposal is made up of many components.

Roberts said the 50-100 per cent figure was "totally inaccurate and irresponsible" and it resulted from "offhand" comments made by Russel Jones.

He said given the time of the leak and the time of the comments made by Jones that Jones would have had "insufficient time" to analyze the union proposal and make his comments.

Many people fight to legalize marijuana for medical purposes

WICHITA, Kan. (UPI) — Ara Cron, a 63-year-old gray-haired woman who has lost most of her eyesight, cannot understand why the federal government refuses to allow people who are slowly going blind to use marijuana.

"I'm certainly going to do everything I can to work to legalize marijuana for medical purposes," she said in a telephone interview Sunday. "This should be available to people if it's helpful."

It may be too late for marijuana treatment for Mrs. Cron, but she would like to help others.

Glaucoma is a hereditary eye disease in which fluid builds up in the eye, putting pressure on the optic nerve until the victim gradually goes blind.

Several studies have indicated marijuana reduces the buildup of fluid, preventing the disease from worsening.

Her doctor suggested surgery, but Mrs. Cron held back. Instead, she asked the federal government in April to let her use marijuana, joining 12 other glaucoma victims in petitioning Attorney General Griffin Bell to reclassify marijuana so physicians can prescribe it for medical use.

One of the petition signers, Bob Randall of Washington, is receiving marijuana from the federal government under a FDA-sponsored research project that allows Dr. John C. Merritt of Howard University to study effects of the drug on glaucoma.

Randall, who smokes "8 or 10 joints a day," says it has relieved his pain and helped him keep his eyesight.

No such help was available for Mrs. Cron. In June, she underwent surgery. The operation cost her part of her vision.

"I'm very resentful that I couldn't have the marijuana instead of the operation," she said. "There are some days when I just can't read very well at all."

Before her surgery, Mrs. Cron received an unmarked package in the mail from someone who had heard of her plight.

"I don't know if I should be telling you this," she said, "but the box was full of marijuana. I was a little fearful to use it because I didn't know where it came from. But my pressure was so high that I tried it ... It was wonderful.

"But you have to use it every day to keep the pressure down. When it ran out, I thought of buying some on my own. But I hate to do anything illegal. And I wouldn't have known where to get it."

Doctor testifies that he knew nothing about Biko's condition

PRETORIA, South Africa (UPI) — The last doctor to see Steve Biko alive said yesterday that no one told him his patient was "an urgent case."

Dr. Andries van Zyl said he examined Biko a few hours before the black nationalist leader died in a Pretoria jail cell Sept. 12 and found him to be a "sick, sick man."

Biko, 30, the founder of South Africa's black consciousness movement, was the 20th detainee to die in police custody in the past nine months. The current inquest into his death has been told he died of severe head injuries.

Police witnesses have denied any wrongdoing on their part and maintain they thought Biko was feigning illness before he died.

Van Zyl, a Pretoria district surgeon, said he examined Biko soon after the black leader had been driven for 14 hours, naked, in the back of a landrover, 750 miles from Port Elizabeth to Pretoria.

In earlier testimony before Chief Magistrate Martinus Prins, the inquest was told Biko was kept handcuffed and in leg irons for 48 hours a week before he died. Prins was also told that police kept Biko naked for 18 consecutive days in his Port Elizabeth prison cell.

Van Zyl said he found Biko comatose when he examined him in the Pretoria jail.

He said he tried to talk to Biko "but there was no response."

Answering questions from the Biko family lawyer, Sydney Kentridge, the doctor replied "no" when asked if he had been told that Biko was an urgent case.

"Was he seriously ill?" Kentridge asked.

"He was comatosed. He was a sick, sick man," van Zyl replied.

'Revolutionaries' of the seventies

By JAMES DALTON

Apathy.

This is the charge being leveled against the student of the seventies and is an accusation I find absolutely groundless.

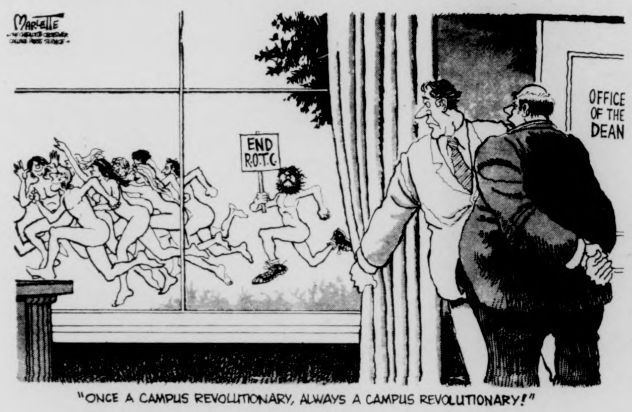
The most frequent aspersions cast against the alleged apathetic student body circulate in the political sphere. This charge comes from all areas of the political spectrum, be it the Campus Republicans, the South African Liberation Committee or the Revolutionary Student Brigade. All bemoan the ebbing tide of political activism and yearn for a more receptive political arena in which to spread their wings.

While cries for socialist revolution have diminished somewhat in the past few years and the most militant demand students seem to be making is for increased check cashing facilities, all does not appear lost in the field of politics. Radicals may whimper that students lack any concept of class consciousness and fawn to the myth of social mobility, but there are definitive signs that a number of UMass students are busily working to tear down class barriers and are indirectly establishing a dictatorship of the proletariat by absorbing the bourgoisie into the ranks of the working class. For documentation of this observation one need not spend days amid the dank and dusty archives of the university, one need only attempt passage on a Five College bus on any weekend night, especially around 8:30. Here one will find a dedicated group of individuals, in the spirit of the Leninist vanguard party, unselfishly pursuing the liberation of the means of production. The storming of the Five College buses in the effort to peacefully agitate for social change in the more elite of the colleges in the Pioneer Valley is wonderfully reminiscent of the Bolshevik storming of the Winter Palace in 1917. The enthusiasm and spirit of socialist competition exhibited in the rush and push for the opportunity to board the bus and pave the way for international socialist revolution would amaze those neanderthal-like creatures who adhere to the primacy of the economic incentive. I can only salute the courage of those students who, in their spare time, unite across race and sex lines to advance the unselfish humanistic goal of world communism, first in Amherst and Northampton and then the world!

Another example often cited by the slanderers of the student body concerning the issue of apathy is the time spent by some members of the community who each day watch certain midday television programs popularly referred to as "soap operas". These critics claim that by burying themselves in the unreality of these "real life dramas," this audience is being inculcated with a docile apolitical attitude that renders them helpless under the barrage of propaganda doled out by the likes of Procter and Gamble.

Hogwash.

This blatant misinterpretation completely misconstrues the real reason these programs are monitered so closely. These involved viewers, many of them women in the forefront of the revolutionary struggle, realize not only that the sexist roles portrayed in these programs are an important method utilized by the ruling class to divide women against themselves but also that they foster an attitude that permit the super exploitation of women workers and furthermore justifies the sexist child raising process that delivers babies, at no charge, into the hands of the capitalist industrial labor market. By monitering these T.V. shows, these program analysts hope to learn just how to combat the destructive ideology that leads to such events as the splintering of the women's movement into pro and con ERA groups. Only through the exhaustingly complete and time consuming study of this staple of American life can women, and the entire proletariat, overcome the tendancy towards accepting revisionist and opportunist leadership. The movement cannot stride forward under the counterrevolutionary elevation of the "President's wives" to positions of popular acclaim at the recent convention in Houston. The popular acclaim belongs to the dedicated revolutionaries who suffer in front of the tube each day in the name of humanistic marxism.



"ONCE A CAMPUS REVOLUTIONARY, ALWAYS A CAMPUS REVOLUTIONARY!"

These same critical hotheads also complain bitterly that the student of the seventies cares only about himself, a willing victim of acadamia and alcohol, completely unaware that in this unorganized and divided state he is but a stooge at the mercy of the Business Roundtables and Trilateral Commissions of the United States. Apparently, these enlightened ones do not attend the university, for how could anyone who has waded among the sea of humanity parading the Campus Center on any weekend night make this claim? While penniless political professionals organize tirelessly for months to bring out a few thousand people in the major cities to march for international working class communist solidarity on May Day, where but on a campus can such unity be generated as evidenced in the recent Halloween celebration at UMass? Only by donning the attire of the absurd can a concerned student demonstrate his total disgust with a system that judges a person's worth by his material accumulation. The regular mass meetings held at such counterculture hangouts as the Hatch and Blue Wall indicate this is indeed a class conscious college aware that "the people, united, shall never be defeated."

Not content with the lone insult that students are apathetic, the cynical idealists assert that UMass harbors a racist administration and tolerates racism and sexism among the student body. They cite the widespread sexist, racist, and fascist graffiti that adorns the walls of this university as evidence. This evidence is circumstantial, to say the least and furthermore, is completely inaccurate. The students clearly recognize that racism and sexism are not in their interest and instead are tools of the ruling elite to divide the workers against themselves, adding to the exploitation of all workers.

They show their utter contempt for this filth by paying the vilest insult to the sanctuaries, wherein much of this filth is perpetuated. They display their scorn in the historically insulting context of the excremental process. Wherever racist graffiti mars the walls, hundreds of student cognizant of the need for multi-national unity urinate and defacate in protest of and disgust for this diabolical ideology.

Clearly, the seeds for socialist revolution do not lie fallow. They germinate this very moment in the T.V. lounges, bathrooms and bars in the Amherst area. The militancy of the sixties has not been lost, it has merely matured into a higher phase of the never ending class struggle.

ENERGY BILL

A 'feather in a fascist cap'

charles bagli

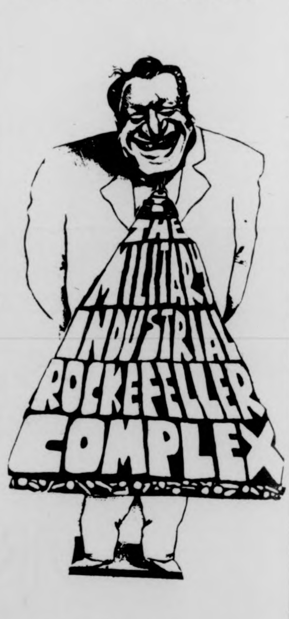
"Wild Mel" Thomson is coming! His advance men and women have been here for a while, though. I'm talking about the people that have been hanging around in front of the Student Union. You know, the Labor Party or Fusion Energy Foundation people.

Last spring they were Governor Thomson's favorite source of "secret information" on the "terrorists" at Seabrook. They were seen at numerous Clamshell Alliance meetings, attempting to disrupt them.



THE MILITARY INDUSTRIAL ROCKEFELLER COMPLEX

"Labor Party"; — hmm — makes you think the group is for working people and kind of progressive. Well we have "progressive" soap, deodorant, politicians, and toilet paper today. Talk is cheap, let's see what they do.

This Labor Party calls for more breeder reactors (which they say will solve everything from the energy crisis to freckles). It also supports Frank Fitzsimmons of the Teamsters and the arms race. It counts among its friends Meldrim Thomson and Dapper O'Neill. As its enemies, it counts the entire radical movement in this country.

The Labor Party (or Nat'l Caucus of Labor Committees, NCLC) has a murky past, and equally murky present. It originated as a "caucus" in the SDS in 1968 and was expelled for supporting the reactionary New York City teacher's strike of that year, and doing everything they could to wreck the community control movement.

From that point on the only direction was down. Each one of their "campaigns" was another feather in a fascist cap. They attacked a strike of Long Island railroad workers by handing commuters a leaflet headlined "Under socialism the trains will run on time" — a slogan taken right from the dead lips of Mussolini who, along with Hitler, called himself a "socialist" to play on the people's genuine attraction to socialism.

They used to keep themselves busy by attending radical events with lead pipes and knives (Boston, New York, Springfield, etc.), trying to implement their "Operation Mop-up". But all this activity takes money and here we get into some more Labor Party funny-business.

Careful analysis of financial reports in New Solidarity (one of their journals) shows that the NCLC — Labor Party has a weekly income of $6,500, and expenses of $28,000 thus, accumulating a weekly deficit of $21,500. Annually, their expenses are $1.4 million, with a deficit of $1.1 million. Their principal earnings allegedly come from the newspaper sales, listed at $4,000 a week.

According to printing estimates, this would amount to weekly sales of 16,000 copies. With only 1,500 subscribers the $4,000 figure would appear to be a gross exaggeration. Another source of NCLC — Labor Committee income is dues. The 600 members pay $24 a month, yielding an annual assessment of $172,800. Yet even this does not account for the Party's huge annual budget.

The Labor Party also finances its operations through bank loans. One such loan is for $48,000 from, strangely enough, the Rockefellers' Chase Manhattan Bank. Members of NCLC reportedly put up only $16,000 in collateral to obtain a loan for the political organization whose stated goals include reducing. Nelson Rockefeller to "a quaint old kook with a $35,000 psychedelic bed". Strange things for a supposedly "leftist" group.

The Labor Party has two effects. First, the Labor Party does everything it can do to confuse, disgust, and insult people. Their pseudo-scientific gobbeldy-gook can temporarily confuse things. Many people after meeting up with the group will refuse to touch a leaflet from anybody. Secondly, when a group like this calls themselves "revolutionary" or whatever they're calling themselves now, it discredits real radicals and revolutionaries and reinforces every bad idea as to what the "commies" are about.

The Labor Party has also, and it's been documented, willingly performed services as goon squads and informers.

Now, I don't know if the Labor Party is really Meldrim Thomson's front group, but it is interesting that the Labor Party has been trying to get on this campus for two years. It is also interesting that UMass is one of the Centers of the Anti-nuclear reactor movement, and many Clamshell Alliance members live around here, and that their roadshow comes flying in here raving about the wonders of "fusion power" and how we gotta build more nukes. Very curious.

If you're unfortunate enough to run into these characters, ask them where they get their money, or why they try to bust up radical meetings or why they support the Teamster goon squads attacking farmworkers in California.

Getting a better education

By the UNION ECONOMICS COUNCIL

The U.E.C. is composed of students who are interested in improving the quality of education in the Economics Department. We feel that an increase of student participation in the departmental decision making process is the means to achieve this end.

In the spring of '76, a group of economics majors began meeting to discuss grievances and potentials of the department. There was a general feeling that Economics undergrads were receiving an education of low quality. Specific problems sighted were: limited course offerings, lack of overall direction by the faculty advisors, and a helpless position of non-involvement in shaping our everyday and future lives.

A few trying meetings produced the first survey to Economics majors. It presented the group with the major concerns of the students. A student faculty meeting was then called. The short term priorities of the survey was the addition of specific courses to be offered in the coming semester. Six of the course requests were granted. This "small but great" gain provided the stimulus needed to call for the help of others in forming the base of a unified and powerful council.

The following year saw the development of new issues, especially a need to determine departmental priorities and set ground for permanent student involvement in decision making. Energies were directed toward the following areas; providing an undergrad advising service to replace the dubious one offered by the Economics Department, sponsoring a career and graduate counseling night (the first of its kind), negotiating the possibility of establishing a student-faculty curriculum committee to revise and maintain a curriculum adapted to the needs of majors, the creation of a graduate school library and a library of economic and political economy journals in our alloted meeting room, gaining the right to sit in on departmental committees, and providing recommendations and evaluations regarding hiring and tenure decisions for the coming semester.

Recently we began the distribution of the third UEC survey. This time we are asking all those taking Econ courses to fill it out in class. Weekly meetings have been held in Thompson 100 on Wednesdays at 4:30. An economics newsletter will be hot off the presses within the month. The completion of the survey will start the branching out of members volunteering to work on specific tasks which are deemed the priorities. Improved faculty advising, curriculum reorganization, increased input and a workshop series by economic professors, and course and teacher evaluations seem to be strong candidates for consideration.

This and next semester more people will get involved than ever before and sustain an already high energy level. We must reverse today's trend toward program learning and force fed education. We must learn to make our own decisions and seek guidance and direction from our educators. The days of a university education to create consumers is over. Student and youths of America have the power and will to heal our country's weakened state through unity.

Come and see how you can help us and yourself to realize the great potentials in the Economics Department at UMass.

Working toward peace in the Middle East

By YITZAK SANTIS

I tip my yamalke to President Sadat of Egypt for his bold, unprecedented trip to Israel and her capital Jerusalem. He is truly a brave man not only to the Western newspapers and populations, but to his own people as well.

So, what is the big deal about his visit? What is its significance? What does Sadat hope to gain?

Not since 1948 has an Arab leader of any country of the Arab League officially visited Israel. By doing so, Mr. Sadat has given de facto recognition not only to the State of Israel, but by visiting both East and West Jerusalem he has recognized that city as Israel's capital — something even the American Government hasn't done yet.

In his speech to the Knesset (Israeli Parliament), Sadat never once mentioned the PLO. He did not merely "forget" to bring up that organization, for in the world of international diplomacy every word, phrase and sentence is well thought out and planned.

Why, then, was the PLO left out of his speech?

In 1973, Sadat expelled the Soviet Union out of his country. He was afraid of becoming a puppet of the Russians. The PLO is recognized, supported and armed by the Soviet Union. Although Sadat wants a Palestinian state, as he mentioned in his speech, he doesn't want a surrogate state of Russia in his backyard.

Menachem Begin did not even use the word "Palestinian," never mind anything about a state. His stance is hardline and dangerous. He must compromise to some extend on that issue. Sadat's hardline stance is that Jerusalem must be internationalized. He must back off on that position as well.

As for the Palestinian issue, that is very tricky. Any agreement on that particular issue will not make everybody entirely happy. Yes, there should be a Palestinian state. But where? How? When? Who will govern? These seemingly simple questions have a hundred different complicated answers to them. The only way to solve those questions is by direct negotiations at the peace table. Sadat has finally recognized this. Israel has known that all along.

But why now? Why is Sadat, and Egypt, suddenly longing for peace? One only has to look at his country's economy for that answer. Most of Cairo is a slum, Egypt's population has doubled to 38 million in the past 30 years and food resources have diminished. Egypt's army is ill equipped and falling apart. It is mostly )Soviet weaponry, and since Sadat threw the Russians out, his army has been running out of spare parts. With the Libyans menacing him to the west, the last thing Sadat needs is a major confrontation with Israel. Egypt could benefit greatly from Israel and vice versa.

Despite the sharp criticism from Syria, Libya, Iraq and the PLO, Sadat is not alone. Jordan and Saudi Arabia support him as do most of the other 20 members of the Arab League. A few African nations have joined Sadat's camp as well.

As any sane person, middle of the road or revolutionary, knows and I hope understands, agreements reached by talking are 1000 per cent better than any type of settlement that is imposed by war.

There is now a chance for real peace and substantive agreements which would bring prosperity to all in the Middle East. Only irresponsible and insane people would condone the derailment of the peace train that is beginning to chug its way through that area. These people condone the cries to assassinate Sadat by the bloodthirsty war mongers, Syria, Iraq, Libya and the PLO.

But we must and will persevere through the battle cries of those who want to murder. We Jews and Arabs will be able to sing a song of brotherhood and freedom. For Peace will always win out over War. Life over Death.

Shalom means Salam.

Thanksgiving article is 'trash'

To the Editor:

Your article, "No Thanks," was the worst piece of trash that I have ever read in the Collegian. Why do you feel that you have to throw off your lousy Thanksgiving on 25,000 readers? The only thing that your article tells me is that your life must be in a sad state of affairs if you can't find anything for which to be thankful. Instead of wasting space in the Collegian, why don't you try to find our why your relatives are so drunk that you can't "carry on any semblence of a conversation?"

Bruce Bain

Letters Policy

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian welcomes all letters to the editor. They must be signed and include the author's address and phone number. Organizations may submit letters, but they must include a name and phone number for reference purposes.

Letters must be typed, double-spaced, at sixty spaces per line, and no more than two pages. They should be sent to the Excutive Editor, c-o the Collegian, or dropped off at the Collegian office.

All letters are subject to editing for either content or space according to the judgement of the editors. Due to space limitations, there is no guarantee that all letters received will be printed. Letters for a specific publication date must be submitted by 4:00 p.m. the day preceding that date.

Kedesy named admissions head

Deirdre Kedesy has been named director of freshman admissions following the retirement of Robert J. Doolan according to William Tunis, dean of admissions and records.

Kedesy will arrive on campus in January, and share responsibility for undergraduate admissions with Eli Sherman, director of transfer admissions.

Kedesy, who is currently assistant director of admissions at the State University of New York at Stony Brook, will supervise the review of freshman applications. UMass-Amherst receives more than 12,000 applications each year to fill 3,600 freshman openings, Tunis said.

Apply: National exchange

Applications are available through Feb. 24, 1978 in the Admissions Office, Whitmore for undergraduates interested in going on exchange in the fall or the year 1978-79. Spring only exchanges are not feasible. The participating institutions for 1977-78 are:

Boise State University; Bowling Green State University; California State College, Bakersfield; California State College, Chico; Eastern Montana College; Illinois State University; Jackson State University; Montana State University; Moorhead State University; Morgan State University; Oregon State University; Rutgers College, Rutgers University.

Also South Dakota State University; State University College at Buffalo; West Chester State College; William Patterson State College of New Jersey; University of Alabama; University of Delaware; University of Hawaii, Hilo; University of Hawaii, Manoa; University of Idaho; University of Maine, Fort Kent; University of Maine, Portland-Gorham; University of Montana; University of Nevada, Las Vegas; University of Nevada, Reno; University of North Dakota; University of Northern Colorado; University of Oregon; University of South Florida. There are eight additional schools on the program that UMass does not exchange with since these schools are on only Plan B.

The student applying for an exchange should be a sophomore; the exchange would be during his-her junior year. We prefer not to exchange students in their senior year. Students must have at least a 2.5 cumulative average.

Students interested in participating in the program next year must complete an application and return it to the box marked "NSEP Applications" at the Office of the Registrar, no later than the deadline of Feb. 24. Final selections, including a list of alternates, are expected to be completed by the end of April, 1978.

Cultural program offered

"Race to Equality: U.S. vs. Cuba," a cultural and educational two-day program, begins tomorrow at 7:30 p.m. in the 12th floor lounge of Coolidge Tower with the Cuban film "The Other Francisco."

This documentary about slavery and racism presents two different historical interpretations of the life of a Cuban slave, Francisco. There will be a second showing of the film at 9:30 p.m. Irma MacClaurin, a member of the Venceremos Brigade, will introduce the film.

On Thursday at 8 p.m. in the lounge, Prot. Ernest Allen, Afro-American Studies, and Dr. Johnetta Cole, anthropology and Afro-Am Studies, will present an historical overview of racism and its elimination in Cuba. They will also talk about its significance for the United States.

The program is being sponsored by the Southwest Center for Racial Understanding, The Venceremos Brigade, the Southwest Assembly, the Coolidge Third World Center, and several area dormitories.

Your Birthday

By Stella Wilder

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 29 — Born today, you take an objective, scientific approach to your problems. You seldom become emotionally involved in affairs which do not bear directly upon you. You prefer to live and let live, and are inclined to go about your business with little concern for objections others may have. You will with maturity learn to listen, to weigh advice carefully; but before you do you may fall victim to your own self-confidence and independence.

You are resourceful, but not to the extent of trying to make something of nothing. You insist upon having quality material to work with, though you are not always fortunate enough to get it exactly to your specifications. You are inclined toward generosity, especially where children are concerned, but you require of them their maximum effort in learning, doing, remembering, applying, and so on.

Yours is an independent yet orderly spirit. You know the difficulties encountered when plans are allowed to disintegrate and projects take off on their own. You enjoy your work, for you always choose well how you will spend your time, taking into consideration not only the desired results but also those that are possible given your talents, energy, opportunity, and material assets.

To find what is in store for you tomorrow, select your birthday and read the corresponding paragraph. Let your birthday star be your daily guide.

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 30

SAGITTARIUS (Nov.22-Dec.21) — You should get what you want out of the day. Contact the right person at the right time this morning.

CAPRICORN (Dec.22-Jan.19) — A little personal effort goes far toward reaching your goals. See to difficulties of a new project.

AQUARIUS (Jan.20-Feb.18) — A strange experience precedes a profitable one early today. Realize a small ambition toward evening.

PISCES (Feb.19-March 20) — You can easily make a friend today. Try your luck at games later on. Evening is for family solidarity.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — What you think is a thirst for knowledge may be only idle curiosity. Make peace with a child at evening.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — Elderly relatives have something important to give you today. Remember that not all gifts are tangible.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — Avoid excessive physical or mental exertion. Rest on your laurels for a change.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — Gain success in an artistic field today. The emotional outlet provided by creativity is worth the effort.

LEO (July 23-Aug.22) — Good fortune surrounds your efforts with a new phase of work. You should make tremendous progress.

VIRGO (Aug.23-Sept.22) — Outside interests take up most of your time today. Your procrastination may corner you at evening.

LIBRA (Sept.23-Oct.22) — Overlook nervous responses. Don't hold another liable for expressions of concern or fear uttered hastily.

SCORPIO (Oct.23-Nov.21) — Sincerity of purpose is necessary if you are to complete present project within a set time.

Ginger Bulman in action for the field hockey team. Ginger also stars in track and field here at UMass. (Staff photo by Jim Gleason)

As UMass standout; Bulman keeps going

By JIM GLEASON
Collegian Staff

Ginger Bulman has had a most curious athletic career. It has been very unpredictable, but through it all has kept the boldness to maintain what was best for her. Now, after years of competition, things are finally going her way.

"She does have a lot going for her," commented Ken O'Brien, her track and field coach. "Giner has been successful in many sports besides track; she has a visible social life, and she does well academically."

But it has not always been this way. In fact, fours ago every thing seemed to be going wrong. After a successful field hockey season at Auburn High School where she set scoring records, she broke all the fingers on her left hand falling off a gymnastics horse.

When deciding on a college to attend, one of the only alternatives was UMass, which she didn't want to attend.

"I really didn't want to come to UMass and I even fought it, but financially, it couldn't be beat."

It seems ironic that she now feels completely different about it. Ginger says, "I'm so glad I finally did come to UMass because I love it here. It has so much to offer."

At UMass, Ginger is a Physical Education major and would like to teach elementary school after she graduates. She lives in Town House Apartments with many of her teammates in what creates a very viable atmosphere for athletics.

She relies on sports to keep her going. In the fall there is field hockey and in the spring there's track and field. In between she participates in intramural football, volleyball, basketball, and softball.

She has found that although she was an excellent performer in high school, she has found it very tough to keep her place in college. She has had to improve every year to do so.

And she has done just that. Last year, she won the most improved player award for the field hockey team. But there were internal problems on the team which tarnish the memory of that year.

This year, the problems which caused turmoil on the team have disappeared but not the problems which seem to plague Ginger. She was forced to miss some practices and games this year due to an early season car accident and heart complications. But still she managed to come back and play the best hockey of her career in the final five games of the year in regular season.

She has managed to do so only because of her determination and competitiveness. Coach O'Brien says this is her most special feature.

"She has good technique and good endurance but her best quality is her competitiveness. She is a tenacious competitor."

Ginger is also viewed in the same light by field hockey coach Judith Davidson. I would rank Ginger as being one of the two most aggressive players on the team. She's always cutting to the ball and that style of play fits in so well with the team. She's a scrappy player."

This year was to be her best year for hockey and she was surprised that it has taken her so far. "Besides the money, one of the reasons I came to UMass was for their hockey program but I had no idea it would take us that far.

Now that her career in field hockey on the college level is over, she is going to continue playing for the association clubs near Boston.

In the spring, she will participate on the track and field team in the 440 hurdles, an event which is one of the most demanding. O'Brien feels that this is one of the reasons why she does the event.

"Ginger expects a lot from herself and works very hard to attain her personal goals."

Whether or not Ginger reaches these goals is not an all-encompassing matter. She knows when she should be assertive and what to expect from herself. She has realistic goals.

But what comes across when discussing Ginger Bulman goes back to what O'Brien said of her. She does have much going for her and she does appear to be contented with her current life style. When things weren't going her way, she made them. There are too few people in her position.

Fosse inks Brewer pact

MILWAUKEE [UPI] — The Milwaukee Brewers continued their love affair with the free agent draft yesterday by signing catcher Ray Fosse, the second free agent they have snagged this year.

The Brewers earlier signed Larry Hisle, the 1977 American League RBI champ, and last year took third baseman Sal Bando away from Oakland.

"The free agent draft has given us two players who will make a very big contribution," Allan "Bud" Selig, Brewers' president, said at a news conference.

Catching was one of the team's problem areas last season. Fosse, who played with Bando on two championship teams at Oakland and was an all-star in 1971, should help. He split last season with Cleveland and Seattle, hitting .276 overall with six home runs and 32 RBI. The year before that he hit .301 with Cleveland.

The signing caps a turbulent two weeks for the Brewers that began Nov. 18 with the signing of Hisle and was followed the next day by the firings of manager Alex Grammas and Jim Baumer, the director of baseball operations. Two days after that, last Monday, the club named Harry Dalton the new general manager. He immediately began courting Fosse.

"This has been a very turbulent period for a lot of people," Selig said. "The changes can be described as awesome."

We need certain college majors to become Air Force lieutenants.

Mechanical and civil engineering major ... aerospace and aeronautical engineering majors ... electronics ... computer science ... mathematics majors. The Air Force is looking for young men and women with academic majors such as these. If you're majoring in one of these areas, you may be eligible for either the two-year or the four-year Air Force ROTC program. And to help with the college bills, two, three, and four-year scholarships are available. These scholarships pay tuition, textbooks, lab fees, and $100 tax-free dollars a month. The Air Force ROTC program leads to an Air Force commission, an excellent starting salary, challenging work (with some of the finest equipment in the world), promotions, responsibility, graduate education and much more.

Find out today about the benefits of the Air Force ROTC program. It's a great way to serve your country and to help pay for your college education.

UPI picks Longhorns

NEW YORK [UPI] — The University of Texas completed its regular-season schedule as the nation's only unbeaten major college football team this past weekend and was duly retained yesterday as the No. 1 club by the United Press International Board of Coaches.

The last rankings will be issued after the Jan. 2 bowl games.

Texas raised its record to 11-0 with its 57-28 drubbing of Southwest Conference foe Texas A&M Saturday and earned a Cotton Bowl berth as the SWC champion.

There, the Longhorns will face off against the country's top-rated independent, Notre Dame. The Fighting Irish, idle at -1 but with a final regular-season game against Miami of Florida on Dec. 3, retained fifth place and could move up significantly with an upset of the Longhorns Jan. 2.

Texas pulled down 6 of the 41 first-place votes cast and a total of 405 points. Notre Dame received one of the five dissenting No. 1 votes and 245 points.

Oklahoma and Alabama held second and third, respectively, but the Sooners widened their lead over the Crimson Tide for the runnerup slot from three points last week to 29 this week, 350-321. The gap increased, no doubt, when Oklahoma thrashed previous No. 10 Nebraska, 38-7, Friday. Alabama also won handily, but over an unranked opponent — 48-21 over Auburn.

The Sooners and Crimson Tide received the other first place nods, two each, after both upped their season marks to 10-1.

Michigan, which had finished its non-bowl schedule at 10-1, and Arkansas, which edged Texas Tech 17-14 to also be 10-1, continued in fourth and sixth places with 287 and 183 points, respectively.

Penn State, a 15-13 winner over Pittsburgh thanks to a missed two-point Panther conversion, jumped over Ohio State to seventh, with the Buckeyes dropping to eighth, 168-141. The Nittany Lions closed at 10-1, while the Buckeyes ended at -2.

Two other matchups in the Top Eight are set for Jan. 2. Oklahoma will meet Arkansas in the Orange Bowl and Alabama and Ohio State clash in the Sugar Bowl. Also, Michigan takes on Washington, which moved into a three-way tie for 14th, in the Rose Bowl and Penn State battles Arizona State, now ranked 12th, in the Fiesta Bowl Christmas Day, Dec. 25.

Pittsburgh fell to -2-1 and 52 points with its loss to the Nittany Lions, but held ninth place. The Panthers' final game is in the Gator Bowl Dec. 30 with Clemson, which leaped from 4th to 10th with 23 points despite having finished its season the week before, also at 8-2-1.

Swimmers split two

By LAURA FRANK
Collegian Staff

The UMass women's swimming team continued its string of victories when it defeated Central Connecticut State College, 109-22, but suffered its first loss of the season, as it lost to a strong UConn team, 73-56, in a tri-meet last week.

The three teams swam together, but the meet was scored as two separate dual meets.

The 200 yard medley relay team of Kathy Jurcik, Maryanne Primavera, Deb Shwartz and co-captain Lise Hembrough placed second with a time of 2:03.0.

Lynn Lutz swam an outstanding race in the 500 yard freestyle. She finished second, doing a 5:51.7 the best time of her career. Freshman Celia Walsh finished third behind teammate Lutz, doing a 5:51.9. Walsh also placed third in the 200 freestyle with a time of 2:11.5. In the 100 yard freestyle, Jeri Otey captured second place in 58.8 seconds.

Jurcik remained undefeated in the 50 yard backstroke. She placed first, finishing in 30.1 seconds. Co-captain Rachel Mack touched third with a time of 32.2, and captured a second place finish in the 100 yard backstroke with a time of 1:10.5.

In the 50 yard breaststroke, freshman Primavera finished second doing a 36.8, and finished third in the 100 yard breaststroke with a time of 1:21.0.

Returning from an illness which kept her sidelined for one meet, Shwartz swam a 1:05.2 in the 100 yard butterfly, finishing in second place. She swam excellent races in the 200 yard freestyle and 100 yard breaststroke, finishing first in both events.

Otey swam a fast 26.6 to capture a second place in the 50 freestyle. In the 100 yard individual medley Jurcik finished second, doing a personal best time of 1:07.4.

Exceptional diving by sophomore Susie Strobel and Chris Bullard added points to the UMass total. Strobel won the required diving with 144.6 points. Bullard won the optional diving with 127.25 points. Both divers executed their dives with confidence and finesse.

In the 50 yard butterfly, Otey finished teammate Maryellen Butler close behind in third. The 200 yard freestyle relay team of Mack, Hembrough, Butler and Otey finished in second place to UConn.

"UConn was a tough team, and we were tired after a week of having three meets in a row," said UMass coach John Nunnelly.

On Dec. 2nd, UMass will swim against the University of New Hampshire and then go on to the University of Maine at Orono on Dec. 3rd for back to back duel meets.

Sports Notice

Men and women free throw shooting contestants can sign up and shoot on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday from 6-8 p.m. at Boyden Gymnasium.

Chisox, Cards finish deal

ST. LOUIS [UPI] — The St. Louis Cardinals yesterday obtained pitchers Dave Hamilton and Silvio Martinez from the Chicago White Sox, and assigned pitcher Steve Staniland to the White Sox' Iowa farm team.

The assignments completed the late-season deal in which the White Sox acquired pitcher Clay Carroll and shortstop Don Kessinger from the Cardinals. St. Louis previously acquired outfielder Nyls Nyman from Chicago.

The Cardinals also assigned pitcher Johnny Sutton to their farm club at Springfield, Ill., leaving their winter roster at the 40-player mark.

Hamilton, a 29-year-old southpaw, appeared in 45 games in relief last season with the White Sox for a 6-3 record and nine saves Martinez, a 22-year-old right-hander, was 1-1 in 10 games with Chicago and 10-7 in 26 games with Iowa.

Staniland, 22, was 0-3 at Arkansas and 3-6 at St. Petersburg last season.

Bowlers fall

The UMass men's and women's bowling team took part in their third tri-state tournament one week ago in Worcester. Sponsored by WPI, this tournament again saw both teams fall short of their potential.

The men's team turned in a spotty performance in general, finishing midway down the pack of fourteen schools. The standout for the men's team was Mike Berard, who averaged 199 on the day en route to taking third place singles, second place in all events and in third place with partner Mark Foley in doubles, three pins behind the first place team. Outstanding games for the men's team were turned in by Berard (233, 225, 201, 199), Mark Foley (205) and Tim Welch (200). The other bowlers were Chuck Bond, Kirk Peters, and Dave Turshy.

The women's team fared considerably better than did the men, as shown by their second place finish in the tournament. The highpoint in the women's match was Jackie Cashin's 232 game. Ms. Cashin also rolled a fine 191 game and a 1000 series. Other fine games rolled by the women were Gina McEvoy (218) and Cindy Adams (199).

The women's team also took 40 out of the 54 match poitns to keep them high in the overall standings. Other bowlers for the women were Beth Schneider and Jane O'Neill.

The bowlers' final tri-state tournament is this Saturday at Chicopee.

Icemen face UConn for .500 log

By GEORGE O'BRIEN
Collegian Staff

The UMass hockey team, coming off a frustrating 10-8 loss to AIC in Springfield a week ago, will try to snap a two game losing streak tonight when it invades Storrs to battle arch rival UConn in a 7:30 game.

The Minutemen, now 1-2 have lost their last two games, to Lowell and AIC after winning their season opener against New England College.

In those two games, the Minutemen have played well offensively, but have had their defensive problems, especially in their own end. In the AIC contest, UMass was up 5-1 after the first period, but fell back under the heavy Yellowjacket attack, giving up four goals in the second period, and five in the third.

"Defense is a total team thing," said UMass coach Jack Canniff who was bitterly disappointed with the AIC loss. "We have to show much more poise and maturity in our own end."

Commenting on the AIC loss, UMass forward Lincoln Flagg said, "We knew that they would come out flying in the second period. They came at us and forced us to run around a little and not play our style."

The Minutemen will be hoping for more defense tonight when they play UConn, a team they have totally dominated in recent years. UMass has won its last four encounters with the Huskies and rules the series against UConn, 25-5-1.

Tonight's game will be the season opener for the Huskies, who are coached by John Chapman, now in his 18th season as hockey mentor.

Last year was one of the few losing seasons for Chapman. His Huskies finished with a dismal 8-14-2 record, but played better than that ledger would indicate. UConn was in contention in almost all its games, and were outscored by the thin margin of only 107-103.

UConn has always been a scrappy team that can pull off the big upset. Last year, the Huskies knocked off a tough Lowell team that later went all the way to the finals in the ECAC Division II playoffs.

UConn has 12 lettermen returning from last year, but it lost two of its top scorers. The Huskies will have to rely on their defense, which is led by senior goaltender Lou Mami, now in his second year in the nets for UConn.

This game could be an important one for the Minutemen if they hope to reach their goal of .500 by intersession. With tough foes Middlebury, Army and Merrimack lying ahead, a win over UConn would be very helpful.

One problem for the Minutemen could be the goaltending. John Riley, who has played all three games for the Minutemen was hurt in practice this week and is still doubtful as a starter for tonight's game. If Riley cannot play, senior Paul McCann will be in the nets.

BLUELINE BANTER..... Tonight's contest may be one of the few college games you will see where the wind and the cold may be a factor. UConn has an outdoor rink, which has a roof, but is not enclosed.... If the wind is westerly, it could be a problem.... UMass co-captain Bob White, who has missed the first three games with an ankle injury, will not be ready tonight, but will probably see action this weekend, when the Minutemen battle Norwich and Middlebury.

Raiders drub Bills; 34-13

OAKLAND [UPI] — A gimpy-kneed Ken Stabler, a doubtful starter at game-time, passed for three touchdowns and Mark Van Eeghan ran for 144 yards last night in leading the Oakland Raiders to a 34-13 rout over the Buffalo Bills.

Stabler, who strained a knee last week and almost didn't start, threw 28 and 12 yards to Cliff Branch and 44 to Fred Biletnikoff and left early in the fourth quarter.

Van Eeghan, with his 144-yard effort, ran his season total to 1,012 yards and became the first player in Raider history to achieve two 1,000-yard seasons. The big running back churned out all the key yardage and left it to Pete Banaszak to crack over from the one twice to account for the other two Raider touchdowns.

A sportswriter's letter: 'All I want for Christmas...'

Geez, Thanksgiving has barely passed, and already people all over are shifting gears into the Christmassy spirit. Santa Claus (phony ones naturally) are popping up everywhere via helicopters, fire engines and chauffer-driven limousines.

About the only place he hasn't arrived early yet is McDonalds. Maybe he and Ronald don't get along well.

Russ Smith

All I want for XMass

Personally, I disagree with this form of insanity. I don't want to seem like scrooge, but XMass is still 27 days away.

I don't seem to recall many human-type people getting all hyped-up about turkeyday 27 days in advance. I can see getting psyched about New Year's Eve a month (or more) ahead of time, but Christmas.

Maybe it's the commercialistic attitude that catches all by surprise; towns put up their festive decorations, stores have post-Thanksgiving-pre-Christmas sales with artificial trees, two for the price of one, etc.

Since I can't beat the XMass rush, I might as well join it by making out my annual list to Santa early too. Since it's rather long, maybe it's best I do make it out early anyways.

Dear Santa,

I am trying a new approach of getting my XMass hopefuls to you. Last year, my letter to you up north must've got lost in the mails, because my stocking was bare as Mother Hubbard's cupboards.

An understanding person, I realize some articles on my humble list will not fit down the chimney. In such cases, I leave it up to your better judgement as to where to deposit them. Thanks for your time and say hi to Ms. Claus for me.

What I'd like for Christmas: 1977

... not more than an inch of snow

... at least third place for the Celtics

.... Steelers, Dolphins, Bears and Broncos headed into the playoffs; Vikings stay home so the Super Bowl will be exciting for a change

... tidal wave big enough to wipe out UMass-Boston's Columbia Point, waterfront campus; funding granted to that campus then switched to U of M-Amherst

.. the outlawing of astro-turf in the American League: let the National League keep it

... Dallas' cheerleaders

... fans for UMass' hockey games

... more happy hours

... less Yankee fans in the world

... Reggie Jackson to quit baseball and go into obscurity

... no more country-western specials on t.v. especially east of the Rockies (the mountain range, not the NHL team)

... good ideas for better columns

Gee, I guess that's it. Oh, wait. I've got a hunch that you'll be extra busy next year this time. To take some of the load off you, I've made out my XMass list for '78. It's spread out over the year for easier handling.

Wishes for 1978:

... a warm January or free trip to Florida (I'm not picky)

... a couple key UMass basketball victories; Minutemen-80 UConn-79, UMass-77 Providence-71, UMass-100 Boston College-42

... the women's hoop team to do well against some tough competition (Queens, Adelphi, Rutgers etc.) and more fans to support them also

... support of school teams in general

... another bonfire by the Bluewall

... a great New Year's Eve, followed by no hangover (I wish this on the whole U of M community — and the 'few' who drink)

... a Tampa Bay opening game victory

... super lacrosse season for Garber's Gorillas

... NCAA bid for hoop-squad; enough of the NIT

... good weather for intramural softball season

... second place finish for the Minnesota North Stars

... Steelers-Super Bowl Champs

... someone besides the Canadiens winning the Stanley Cup

... no more Indy 500 on t.v., along with the elimination of Challenge of the Sexes contests also — we all know which sex is better

... higher pay for Collegian sports writers

Senator Bill Owens

The Whole World is Watching

Note: The following statements were made in front of the White House by Dick Gregory and Senator Bill Owens before their arrest in front of the South African embassy, November 24 (Thanksgiving).

Gregory: "We as a world body of decent folks really haven't shared our outrage. I don't think that South Africa will be under half the pressure that America was under demonstrating against the Vietnamese war. The world community woke up and said that, yea, it's a bad war."

Question: "Do you feel that demonstrations in the United States will have any effect, as they did during the Viet-nam war?"

Gregory: "I think that they would have more of an effect.... I would just hope that the South African heads of state will know that there are a lot of decent people on this planet that are outraged over what's happening there. I would think that we wouldn't have to go to jail this Thanksgiving, but if we have to I think that we would be willing to do that, that we take these placards, go over there (to South African Embassy) and let them know that we know about many of the people that they killed there. I would hope that there be some way where there would be inspections there so that the world would know who's in jail, and who the prisoners are before they come up dead within the prisons."

Question: "Mr. Gregory, how many times have you been out here?"

Gregory: "I guess every Thanksgiving for the last five years."

Question: "Do you think that there will ever be a time when you don't have to come out here?"

Dick Gregory and Senator Bill Owens lead demonstration in front of the White House.

Gregory: "I hope so, then I think that I would probably have a real Thanksgiving here."

Question: "Yesterday, the Polaroid corporation announced that it was no longer going to do business within South Africa. Does that decision meet with your approval?"

Gregory: "I don't know. If they really have decided. They were supposed to have made an agreement in 1971 that no more of their paper would get in. This is what's used for the I.D. cards. So it's very difficult to say. I would hope that what they are saying is good, and honest, and inevitable, but this is the type of pressure that's needed, and I would hope that General Motors, and the rest of the top corporations would see that they have a responsibility, and that they can turn this around, if they act now. If they don't what do we do, we end up with a lot of violence, we end up with a lot of plants blown up, because once guerilla activity starts escalating, there seems to be no stop to it."

Question: "As a result of the world wide outrage over the death of Steve Biko, do you think that will have some type of an effect of turning around the situation there in South Africa?"

Gregory: "I would like to say yes, but then there's another death in the detention center since then. You would really like to say yes it is and you can't. You would think it would, but it hasn't; you kind of wonder what kind of people you're dealing with? But I know one thing, I know that we, the people on this planet, if we raise our voice, we can turn anything around. Decent folks have that much power, it's just a matter of unifying it. I would hope that these type of demonstrations like today, most Americans are sitting home being thankful, we have a lot to be thankful for. I know I as a black that was heavy into the Civil Rights movement and I can relate to what's happening in South Africa, with all the insanity that we went through here. I'm a father with ten children, if one of them's late coming home from school, I don't have to worry about them being in a detention center. So many of us blacks who have just come out of direct confrontation to change laws, and we know, that the world, if they need an example they have an example that you can make inroads into changes, human dignities and human liberties, without armed confrontation, without bloodbath. I would hope that this example would be used there."

A LETTER TO THE PRESIDENT

The Honorable James Earl Carter
President of the United States of America
1600 Pennsylvania Avenue
Washington, D.C. 20500

November 24, 1977

Dear President Carter:

It is with a great degree of sadness that I write this letter urging you to move with all deliberate speed to help to rectify the deplorable conditions foisted upon the shoulders of Black Africans in the Republic of South Africa.

I am sure I speak for many millions of Americans and others throughout the world who saw a new day dawning when you declared Human Rights as the cornerstone of American Foreign Policy. We foresaw America, though imperfect but sincere in its own quest for racial harmony and human justice, using its vast material resources, its political influence and its goodwill and moral integrity to persuade oppressive regimes around the world that individual freedom, human rights, is or ought to be the fundamental principle of any society.

To the extent that you have communicated this message to the leaders of the world, I join with others in applauding that effort. However, Mr. President, in the case of South Africa much more must be done. No matter how well meaning, verbal chastisements and arms embargoes will not suffice. We need immediate and stringent economic sanctions that will make South Africa decide whether to have racial harmony and economic prosperity, or slide into the abyss of revolutionary struggle and bloodshed.

Several Massachusetts corporations have taken steps to impose economic sanctions on South Africa. The First National Bank of Boston has restructured its loan program in respect to South African corporations or foreign companies doing business there. The term of a loan agreement has been shortened from five years to three years, hopefully discouraging corporate clients from using the resources of the First for investments in South Africa. The Polaroid Corporation has cancelled its relationship with its South African distributor and thus forfeited $3 to $4 million in business. Two other Massachusetts banks will make no loans to South Africa. These individual acts of conscience on the part of corporations are indeed commendable. They illustrate for this nation and the world that what happens in South Africa is the responsibility of us all.

The Government of the United States of America, as the leader of the free world, can do no less than private corporations and individuals to ensure an end to the murder, brutality and dehumanization of the Black population of South Africa. The United States must make the difficult decision to bring tremendous economic pressure to bear on South Africa, or be accused, and rightly so, of being hypocritical and discriminatory in its application of human rights policy.

In our lifetimes, Mr. President, we have seen vast technological, economic and political change. We have seen lunar landings, new and improved international financial systems, the end of colonialism and the rise of subject people. History is on the side of the African patriots who resist oppression in Soweto, Durban and all across South Africa. Let us for once be on the correct side of progressive forces and not find ourselves espousing democracy at home and supporting totalitarianism abroad, out of step with history and change.

Gregory: "First, thank you for being here this holiday, and I would like at this time to introduce Senator Bill Owens from Massachusetts, state legislator. We had talked about six weeks ago in his office about what was happening in South Africa, and what we might be able to do to dramatize the situation.... We felt that we should be here in front of the White House this morning, Thanksgiving day, to say to America and the world that we in America have a lot to be thankful for, and I would hope that the President of the United States would use his prestige and power of his office. I appreciate having a President in the White House that talks about human rights, and I think that there is no area on this planet today where human rights have been so blatantly violated, than in South Africa and Rhodesia."

Gregory: "I would like to see the President go to the world religious bodies and ask the leadership to use all of their influence and all of their power. I'm one that firmly believes that it does not have to come to an armed confrontation or a bloodbath. And I know that there are many people on both sides just waiting for that because they think that that's the only way. I would hope that it wouldn't come to that because I think that it would be bigger than South Africa, I think that it could set off racial unrest around the world. I would just hope that the president and the business interests in this country would be able to see that, but most of all I would hope that the masses of the decent people would raise their voice, and if that happens, I'm sure that the conflict that's within Rhodesia and South Africa will be resolved."

Owens: "I would like to take this opportunity to say that I've been in touch with a number of natives of South Africa and in talking to them, I'm convinced that they have decided that the country is theirs, and that they are not going to for longish periods, tolerate the murders and rapes that are constantly existing there. They have decided that they are going to take over the government by any means necessary. I for one, in concurrence with Mr. Gregory, certainly hope that it does not come to a blood bath. That's why I'm here today, to say to the President, of the United States of America, that he should use the prestige of his office to see to it that there are severe economic sanctions, to stop in the media, the running of the ads for the sale of the Krugerrand, to provide other economic sanctions so that the Vorster regime will in fact fall.

It is not right, it is immoral, and cannot be tolerated any longer in times like these. Some of you are probably aware that the First National Bank of Boston, which is the largest bank in New England, has decided that it's going to at least withdraw some of its economic interests, and will not participate economically to the extent that it has. First of all I don't believe that is enough, I think more has to be done. We know that the Poloroid people have decided not to business in South Africa. That is not enough. We're saying that all of the multinational coporations that have formed and are doing business in South Africa need to begin to withdraw. They need to withdraw and provide those economic sanctions so that the regime will not have an economic base from which to continue to operate. It is within this context that we are here today to say to the President of the United States of America, that let the issue of human rights be nore than rhetoric, let the office that you hold influence some of the decision making processies that are now going on to the detriment of poor people in South Africa.

Let us further recognize that whatever happens in South Africa is going to be a reflection of what's going to happen throughout the United States of America and throughout the world. We know that directly or indirectly, everything that happens there, is going to be reflected here, and we know much of what is going on here, is as a result of what is going on in South Africa, and we think it all has to end."

Gregory: "We would also like to thank the D.C. chapter of the National Council of Black Churchmen who have declared December 11th a day of national mourning for Steve Biko. We feel that it is this type of pressure that will help influence what decisions go down in South Africa. I think if people who really believe that the mightiest government in the world would not be forced to come out of Viet-Nam, if they would just sit and evaluate that...."

"Basically we're dealing with our children, after the children came out and raised their voices, then America began to turn and turn and eventually we got out of that war, I think we can influence what happens in South Africa and Rhodesia. I think that this is more important than Viet-Nam, because Viet-Nam I don't think, at the stage where we got out, could have tipped off racial wars around the world. I think if we see the whites with a mass wholesale slaughter of blacks, I think that we're going to have a problem around the world, and I think that if you see the black guerillas go in with a wholesale slaughter of whites we're going to have problems in many countries. I would just hope it wouldn't come to that."

Owens: "I would just like to say that I'm here today as a symbol of black elected officials, that I believe need to get more deeply involved in the issues of South Africa, and public elected officials in general. It is my sincere belief that elected officials need to stop being water-boys for the power elite and the business establishment. I think when we do get involved we begin to educate our constituency more and more to what is going on. Then the Vorster regime will understand that the actions that they are perpetrating cannot and will not be tolerated, and I think that as Dick Gregory has said in the past, the South Africans will probably feel pretty good today. If we decided to take our Thanksgiving to say to America and to the world, we've got to stop what is going on in South Africa, and we're willing to give up our day of Thanksgiving to be out here, and in Dick Gregory's words, again, we're got to not necessarily be so anxious to celebrate Thanksgiving, but again to look at Thanks-living, and that's what it's all about in South Africa."

Press Release

On November 21, 1977, in Harlem, New York, USA, at the Renaissance Theatre Ballroom, the AUDELCO Audience Development Committee's 5th Annual Recognition Awards were given. The theme was "Overture - Family Reunion". AUDELCO was founded in 1973 to fulfill the needs and increase awareness in the art and cultural activities in the Black Community. The affair was one not to be forgotten easily.

The evening opened with a mime presentation by Billy Banner. The co-host were Ruby Dee and Ossie Davis. The Harlem Children's Theatre staged a magnificant and original moving presentation called "Ju Ju Man". There was a performance by Vinnie Burrows and a vinette from "Young, Gifted and Broke" by Weldon Irvine. Presentation of Outstanding Pioneer awards went to Willis Richardson and Pearl Primus. The 5th Annual Recognition Awards were: LIGHTING DESIGNER, Shirley Pendergast, for "Unfinished Women...." N.Y. Shakespeare Festival Mobile Production; SCENIC DESIGNER, Tim Phillips, for "Winti Train", COSTUME DESIGNER, Edna Watson, for "MacBeth"; DIRECTOR, Bill Duke, for "Unfinished Women...."; CHOREOGRAPHER, Talley Beatty, for "Alice"; PLAYWRIGHT, Richard Wesley, for "The Last Street Play"; SUPPORTING ACTRESS, Rosanna Carter, for "The Unfinished Women..."; SUPPORTING ACTOR, Leonard Jackson, for "MacBeth"; OUTSTANDING PERFORMANCE IN A MUSICAL (FEMALE), Brenda Brown, for "Young, Gifted and Broke"; OUTSTANDING PERFORMANCE IN A MUSICAL (MALE), Mikell Pinkney, for "Young, Gifted and Broke"; OUTSTANDING MUSICAL CREATER, Weldon Irvine, for "Young, Gifted and Broke"; MUSICAL PRODUCTION OF THE YEAR, "Young, Gifted and Broke", Author: Weldon Irvine, Producer, Marjorie Moon; LEAD ACTRESS IN A DRAMATIC ROLE, Gloria Foster, for "Agamemmon"; LEAD ACTOR IN A DRAMATIC ROLE, Richard Gant, for "soledad Tetrad"; CO-WINNERS for DRAMATIC PRODUCTION OF THE YEAR, "Three of the Best" Authors: Ed Bullins, Clay Goss, Richard Wesley, Producer: Solid Productions; and "Unfinished Women....", Author: Aishah Rahman, Producer: Joseph Papp.

A special notice should be given to the very hard working Board of Directors who are Natalie Fuller, Vivian Robinson, Winnie Richardson, Sylvia Spooner, Renee Chenoweth, and Doris Smith, and who, by the way, I owe a special thanks. Can you imagine being stranded in New York City on a Monday night and having your car towed and it cost $60 to get it out, and the only people that are willing to honor a check are the beautiful sisters for AUDELCO. It is organizations like this that make for a more viable Black Theatre.

Statement of Paul Robeson, Jr. Concerning the Play "Paul Robeson with James Earl Jones"

A GIANT AMONG GIANTS: Paul Robeson died Friday afternoon at the Pennsylvania Medical Center, Philadelphia. Robeson was an outstanding world figure, unbending champion of human dignity, best son of the Black People, a fighter for the working class, and an artist superb. The Daily World learned of his death just at press time. In our next issue Tuesday, we will pay due tribute to Robeson and publish his obituary.

I have seen "Paul Robeson", a one-man play with James Earl Jones on several occasions. While the script had undergone a number of changes for each of the performances I attended, it continued to be a fictionalized and distorted portrayal of Paul Robeson that misrepresents the most important aspects of his life. It trivializes the Paul Robeson story and makes his basic character unrecognizable.

The play is currently playing in Boston and I understand that it will subsequently appear in Chicago, Cleveland, Milwaukee and Washington, D.C. This production whittles down the giant stature of Paul Robeson to such an extent that he is made to resemble the false image that has been created by the white Establishment. His powerful message to all oppressed peoples and to Black Americans in particular is diffused and lost in a mass of confusion.

Anyone who takes the time can easily see through this crude commercialization of Paul Robeson's name by reading his own book "Here I Stand" (Beacon Press, Boston), listening to recordings of his performances and viewing film of him. My father's own words and deeds provide the best criticism of this play which I consider to be an insult to his memory.

Paul Robeson, Jr.

THE PAUL ROBESON

By DR. EWART GUINIER

"Everything I have done is an extension of my feeling about my own people. I feel some way I've become tied up with this whole problem of human freedom. I have no end to my artistic horizon."

Paul Robeson
New York Times
Apr. 19, 1942

My first distinct recollection of becoming aware of Paul Robeson as an important personage occurred in the fall of 1929 when I entered Harvard College as a freshman. Robert Weaver, then a black graduate student, and I were driving to Quincy to see a Eugene O'Neill play that had been banned in Boston.

Weaver, from Washington, D.C., where the "Harlem" Renaissance of the twenties had been developing, mentioned that Paul Robeson had played the title role of one of O'Neill's plays and had acted in several others.

Since then I have had innumerable occasions to read about, discuss, listen to and see Paul Robeson.

Beginning in the spring of 1946, and until the spring of 1953, in several capacities but primarily as the international secretary-treasurer of the United Public Workers Union with a membership of over 100,000 civil servants. I was privileged to be associated with this giant of a man in many projects organizing nonwake workers on the Panama Canal Zone and in Hawaii, developing campaigns to end discrimination in the United State's Treasury Department's Bureau of Engraving, opening up opportunity and jobs for black women and men in New York City hotels, on the airlines, in offices, in plants and factories throughout the country, in the entertainment world as well as on the baseball diamond, and in the political system.

After leaving the trade union movement in 1953, my contacts with Robeson were infrequent. Beginning in 1960, especially with the entrance into the U.N. of scores of African nations, my reflections on the meaning of Paul Robeson's life has intensified.

And starting in 1968, while as associate director for programs of Columbia University's Urban Center I was a member of the Advisory Committee for "Black Heritage: A History of Afro-Americans," I began discussions with others about Robeson, especially with the brilliant historian and folklorist, Sterling Stuckey, a professor at Northwestern University. Stuckey introduced me to the facts which demonstrate, unequivocally that Paul Robeson was one of the outstanding students of linguistics and culture — especially of African linguistics and culture and of their survival and great influence on the development of a distinct Afro-American culture.

To me, therefore, a serious appraisal or delineation of Paul

More on the Advocate Program

By JOHANNA P. BRASSARD

This is the second article in a series of three about the Advocate Program, which is located at Montague House near The School of Education. (Telephone: 545-3623-5) The purpose of the series is to increase awareness of the Advocate Program within the Third World Community. Last week's article was an introduction to the Program; this article will be a more precise description of the nature and functions of various program components (the information for this week's article was graciously provided by Rich Bell, Assistant Director of The Advocate Program.)

The Advocate Program (AP) is really a conglomeration of concerned agencies and individuals. It is through their deep commitment to troubled youth, their energy, and donations of physicial facilities and funds, that the AP survives and thrives.

Energy and physical facilities are provided for the AP by the University, The Pioneer Valley and caring persons throughout Massachusetts. Funding for development of the Program and staff wages is granted primarily by the Commonwealth and Federal Governments; only one AP position is funded by the University.

One might see the AP as a large stone bridge built to support and guide youths over the stormy waters of adolescence. I will examine the entrance, walkway and exit of the bridge before discussing the layout of the "blocks", or components.

The entrance to the bridge is actually the Hopbrook Farm in New Salem, Mass. The farm was obtained by the AP through a private contractor. The Department of Public Welfare of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts (DPU) refers Massachusetts adolescent boys in need of a home, an education or counseling to this outer component of the AP. Another Commonwealth agency, The Department of Youth Services (DYS) refers troubled and court-involved boys from six of seven regions in Massachusetts to the Farm.

At the Farm, the boys are oriented into the AP. They are provided with supervision, counseling, educational and recreational services related to those which they will encounter as formal members of the AP. During the two to eight weeks which they spend at the Farm, a pre-placement staffing is held for each boy. All those concerned with his particular case, including a potential Advocate, meet with one another and the boy to develop a "service plan". The plan outlines educational, personal, health and living goals for the adolescent. These plans will be initially implemented by the AP, but include provisions for discharge from the AP and after-care. Later, if any change in the plan are necessary, the entire staffing reconvenes.

Female adolescents receive the same attention regarding a "service plan", but they have little time to be oriented into the AP simply because they must be placed directly with an advocate for lack of an orientation facility for girls.

Along the walkway itself we find the Pioneer Valley and the University, both very sympathetic of the kids involved in the Program. For example, the Amherst Police and the Hampshire County District Court and Probation Office have always supported the AP in its efforts. Both the Valley and the University provide AP youths with recreation and transportational facilities, and Advocates. The University also provides interns and volunteers from the Juvenile Justice division of The School of Education, physical facilities, Health and recreational facilities, as

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN, EARTH, WIND, AND FIRE!

The Earth, Wind, and Fire concert, on November 11, came out on stage with smoke. They was bad!!! Nobody could tell those jokers if the sky was pink or purple, because they had the sky and they was bad. They was so bad they came from outer space, and blazed their story with the earthlings.

Denise Williams was Miss Paradise of Beauty, as she jazzed so fine they loaded up trucks with fainted, unconscious men who couldn't stand the pain of watching that goddess come down from the stars. It was a mind-blower.

Pockets was bad too, but they were new, and we were hungry for Denise Williams and Earth, Wind and Fire.

And they fed us too. They were so bad they jammed their message like they was the only group around. They was so bad, there is no such thing as bad if they wasn't it. They jammed their songs one right after another. They was the monster from church. It got better and better. It ended, after the obvious encore, with The Serpentine Fire, the latest smoke source from Earth, Wind and Fire.

John Henry he could hammah,
He could whistle, he could sing,
He went to the mountain early in the mornin'
To hear his hammah ring,
To hear his hammah ring.

John Henry worked in all kinds of weather,
'Cause a workin' man cain't do no better.
John Henry said to just keep in motion

JOHN HENRY ON DRUMS — MAX ROACH AND QUARTET AT STORYVILLE

Professor Max Roach looked aglow on the first night, October 18th, of the final week of performances at Storyville on east 58th in New York. His quartet constants, Billy Harper on tenor saxophone, Cecil Bridgewater on trumpet and Reggie Workman on bass reciprocated with deep bows after fraternal introductions by the master drummer. They repeated this gesture of veneration directed toward Max Roach throughout the evening as each suite concluded and as they responded to heart-flung applause from the audience.

The first composition "Effie" by Stanley Cowell, veered forth from a vibrant intro. Max Roach did not hesitate in pushing hurricane tempos as horn duets, solos and syncopations alternated, intersected and converged. Roach's cymbal rolls rode above his own confluence of rhythmic streams as well as accentuated the deep drops from Workman's bass. Billy Harper's saxophone shrieked in long-and-short breath cries. Cecil Bridgewater stepped forward for short sprints. Workman hit the strings precisely and his strong hands raced up and down the neck of his instrument to produce stopped and lasting chordal throbs.

For his initial solo, Max Roach painted cymbal patterns resembling a Nelson Steven's canvas or the sounds over Harlem on a hot summer's night. From his high-hat he sent updrafts of sunbrass through the blue gray club lights. With one hand he directed the emanations from this two-cymbal instrument and with the other, transformed wood and metal matter to an extended shimmying — wampwahumpwahump.... Reggie Workman added an undertow of bowing and the duet of horns restated the theme, spiraling or latticing registers hurled amidst the rich rhythms.

"Calvary" arranged by Billy Harper gave rise to step-by-step ascensions in sound imagery. Bridgewater propelled columnar sounds that joined the climb with Mr. Harper, freeing the spiritual with each progression. The intensive horn discourse emitted sharp syllabication. With all metals flashing, Max Roach and Workman stirred up fire and brimstone rhythms. By this time hands fleeting the drums had long since disappeared from sight. Max Roach moved with the convolutions rising from brush work. Sudden clear streaks of melody struck open areas between strong beat phrases. High-hats sputtered. The quartet reconvened their instrumentation for a breaklight denouement.

Papa Jo Jones had come in. Between sets he was solicited for his opinion on the world series. He reprimanded, "What does this have to do with music? I came to hear Max Roach!"

The next set began where the former had let off — at sonar speeds riding meteors with tails of polyrhythms stampeding space and silence. Exhortations created musical upheaval and vitality within the sphere of tension. Each musician translated the themes improvisationally, splicing and segmenting them; and, created moments of jitanjafora which then would glide into an urban cantata of sirens wailing through heartbeat rhythms echoing the real life.

The final work displayed Harper's puncturing and stridulous saxophone vocals, peaking to incite from Bridgewater's trumpet sententious streaks. Light bounded from brass, sound shadows quivered aloft taunt strings stretched over a wooden lake of resonances, and earthy tremors relentlessly found volume through the profundity of the drums. Max Roach spaced multiple beats building a roaring seventh-wave crash before retreating as a seabound tide. Climactic crescendos were fed unceasingly by the bass palpitating, the tenor dancing, the drums jumping, the trumpet punctuating, the horns thinning, the ercussion pushing for a rush of harmony before decelerating, before subsiding in "The Call of the Wild and Peaceful Heart", another Harper composition. At 2:00 a.m. Max Roach smiled through the heat and the applause; he reintroduced quartet members, who, with him, conducted all this energy.

The Max Roach Quartet will be performing in San Francisco, Los Angeles, New Orleans and Chicago. Spring engagements in Europe will be followed by a tour of Japan and a late summer return to Europe.

In August of this year his quartet recorded in Holland. Since then Max Roach has recorded a solo album; Freddie Waits joined him for another and at the end of September he did a duet album with Dollar Brand. These are Max Roach productions and will be distributed by various companies.

Released in Japan on the Victor label is a two volume recording titled, "Genius", featuring Max Roach and Clifford Brown playing at the Bee Hive in Chicago in 1955. Another recent release in Japan is the double record on the Nippon-Columbia lable, "Live in Japan."

Last year in Paris, Max Roach and Archie Shepp recorded "Force" with commemorative compositions titled "Sweet Mao" and "Sud Afrika". In performance, Max Roach has played a selection from this album dedicated to the struggle of Blacks in South Africa. Referring to this work from "Force," Max Roach emphasized, "...You had Bird writing things like "Passport" at a time when the authorities were taking away certain people's passports. "Jazz" and Blues have always been music that people lived their lives by. That's why I wrote, "South Africa Godamn!" — it was a small effort on my part to give somebody some hope in that situation in South Africa." This record has received the highest honor awarded a record in Europe, the GRAN PRIX INTERNATIONAL DU DISQUE.

A Revolutionary Organizational Framework For: "Work Among the People."

The following is a commentary by Nummo News' Editorial consultant Waɹada Tzake. It is a tool which can be used as a guidance point by all serious groups who are actively involved in the struggle to end the suppression of man by man.

In many revolutionary situations and periods, we find that there are many revolutionary groups. Some or all of the groups declare the revolution to be their property and not that of the people. They 'cut up' the other groups trying to justify their own position and decry the other groups. Instead of trying to organize the people on all fronts, they disorganize the people on all fronts, they disorganize the masses by their opposition to each other and very often they create open hostility which the masses only see as unnecessary disunity. Disunity frustrates the masses and limits the extent of the revolution's success. Naturally more people will be attracted to the group which displays the greatest amount of unity and success but this does not give the revolutionary group in a strong position the right to discredit the valuable work that the weaker group have done or are doing. The energy put out in assassinating the character of other groups should be put into channels creating a closer unity with all fronts and ending 'organizational cannibalism.' If the viability of the alternatives offered by the revolutionary group is to succeed it must understand what it is up against as well as the possibilities and shortcomings of its own rhetoric. Consequently, discussion of strategy is most important.

The following is a list of a few noteworthy internal guidelines which can assist in strategy discussions as well as in the establishment and continued functioning of any organization which is actively involved in the struggle to end the crimes against humanity.

Set Up A Framework"

Patience, discipline, order, leads to successful organization. To maintain organizational discipline and punctuality it is imperative to be committed to organizational "Law and Order." Foremats, agendas, timetables, schedules, workshops and the exercise of carrying out duties and responsibilities are really the pillars on which a successful revolutionary organization is established.

When working on schedules do so with regards to the limitations of your resources. It is of no use for an army to go unprepared for a minor battle much less a major one.

This is a principle which all revolutionary organizations must adopt. If caught unaware fight your way out of the difficulties, but do not go around creating problems for yourself by taking up tasks you have to leave midway or quarterway. Otherwise people would pin a mental emblem on you marked: Joker.

"Work Among the People"

Around what should a revolutionary organization hinge all its activities? There is but one answer — the people. It is the masses that is the important factor in a revolutionary struggle. It is only when this concept prevails, that the revolution is the people's, that we really begin to understand what revolutionary work is all about. No amount of intellectualizing, no amount of talking, no amount of revolutionary discussion or training among ourselves can achieve what we wish for the people. All of this must take place, but it is only concrete work, real work, solid organizational foundations and definite control that involves all or most of the people, in a particular district, that stems the reactionary tide and builds the revolutionary flow. If, however, the revolutionary organization becomes counter-revolutionary, then it is either those who hold the correct line seize power and ensure that the correct line is maintained, or, if seizing leadership is impossible, then split the scene and form a new group, then go to the people and promote a correct line of struggle.

This is not disloyalty to your organization but loyalty to people. This must be clear. Down with all counter revolutionaries and pretensive "revolutionaries" who are really reactionaries in heart and soul and revolutionaries in mouth.

Spread the Work Effort

When brothers or sisters find themselves organizationally overworked, they must decentralize the work effort and seek new and enlarged membership. This may well mean more work but in the long run it will pay off and more people will gain the necessary experience to build the group and foster a revolutionary doctrine and a revolutionary change.

Use Every Disadvantage To Your Advantage by Organization

Very often situations confronting revolutionary organizations are not in their favor. In fact there are more instances in the history of revolutionary groups where things are disadvantageous. But serious groups, though, practice and theory, would eventually develop a line of strategy that would make the group ever-ready for 'come what may.' Disadvantageous situations arrive from many points but two of the most important factors are: 1) the general situation existing in the area, district or town, i.e., police or army suppression by the government, or indifference by the people, etc. 2) the lack of organizational preparation. If there is no organizational preparation (training mentally and physically) then it would be impossible to transform a bad situation into a good one. None of the above mentioned obstacles can be overcome if there is no organization, preparation and structure to which the people can attach themselves. So let it be known. No bad situations can be transformed into a good situation if we revolutionaries fail to organize.

Office Holders Must Excel In Office

If a brother or sister has an official position he also has certain rights and duties that arise from the practice of that office. If the service granted is good then the office will gain much respect and whoever comes into it afterwards would have to upkeep and improve the standard or be replaced. All office holders must excel so that an office within a revolutionary group may possess much meaning and respect.

As an office holder, keep in mind these principles: 1) Be organizationally promotive if you like, but not personally egotistical. 2) Be organizationally self-righteous if you like but not personally so. 3) Be full of praise for your organization as you rightfully should be, but let other people praise you. Even if you deserve praise be modest. More people would respect you for it.

In a revolutionary group all talent must be used. Everybody has talent. It is for the groups' management to find out all the possibilities for a member in the group. There is no excuse for those who have talent and revolutionary ability and not use it to the hilt for the people's liberation.

Save Us From These Talkers

When a group sits and waits, analyses and hopes, waits and sits again, it not only falls into the category of a useless talking-shop group politically masturbating around events; but is also a non-revolutionary group, playing at revolution. A revolutionary group has two distinct functions in its initial stages. 1) To work among its own membership. 2) To work among the people.

If the group remains chatting and counter-chatting while the people are in need of direction and want to move forward out of their suffering and destitution, then it is fit for nothing but the dumpheap. It is just a hoax, a newspaper group that makes a well prepared statement every now and again and is seen putting up a front in the news media and nowhere else. They talk and their action is their talk. By all means talk, with hope and analyze, but do so while organizing people.

Don't Lose Spirit

Sometimes individuals might despair over the lack of response of the population to serious and enlightening discussion and action, lines of activity that can probably remove them from their area of degredation and want, to areas of self-sufficiency and upliftment. You may say because of their negative response: "It's a waste of time." However, it's the responsibility of all revolutionaries and revolutionary groups to maintain a level head. Be inspired not only by success but by failures as well. In fact the successes of many revolutionary activities were inspired and motivated by previous failures. When you see despair and shame around you do not let it get you in its grip. Do no let fear and anxiety cow you into inaction. Do not let despondency grab your revolutionary soul and defeat you. Seize the time and situation.

Have faith in the revolution and you will move the masses. What looks like an impossible task, by the will of the people shall just be another exercise in self-liberation. This must be your undying faith. Have faith in the people and you will move them.

Despite all, Victory.

Hunger, thirst, pain, dishonor, poverty, loneliness, betrayal, slander, prison — death, they are all parts of being involved in a revolutionary organization. If you join a revolutionary group and do not expect all these things, then you have the wrong conception of what a revolutionary group is all about. Then you have come into a group for a tea party or a fete and not for a revolution. But those of you who know why you join, to create a revolution, then you know too, that despite all the tribulations, there is the victory for the people. Work for this victory! Join a revolutionary group for the victorious people's revolution.

As one son of the South to another, we understand by seminal experience the deprivation and the horror involved in the systematic denial of basic rights and human dignity by one race over the other. We also understand these principles: first, you cannot dehumanize another man without stooping to sub-human levels yourself. Second, you cannot crush a people. For each Steve Biko killed to cripple a movement a martyr will arise and others will come forward to take his place. Ask Anwar Sadat and Menehem Begin of this. Ask Fidel Castro or his brother, Raul. Ask Jesse Jackson and Andrew Young. And from all of these great men you will receive an answer you already know.

I urge you, Mr. President, in respect to South Africa, do not base your judgement upon what is political or apolitical, but upon what is right and just. Then we will have a government we can respect and be proud of.

Sincerely,
Bill Owens
Massachusetts State Senator
The Second Suffolk District

How To Be A Better Organizer

Some of the most consistent models the world has had in successful organizing, are the people who have made history, by a direct course of action, even when every one else gave up. These models are the people who we admire today for their consistent day to day work for the masses of people. They work not for themselves or for their ego but for the benefit of all on this planet. People in this country who have not seriously studied people who make positive change should begin to study these people. The people I am referring to are no different from the rest of us; they have only decided that they would not be a slave to any Being on this planet and that is what they did. It is not easy for one to be consistent, but it is the only standard we have for positive change. Change does not happen by accidental clusters of events; it only occurs when people and not the leader type decide that they will make history and not live someone else's history. Students and concerned people must study day and night the history of students in relationship to change.

There Was Nothing To Be Thankful For

On November 24, 1977 at 10:00 a.m. some interested people in front of the White House in Washington, D.C. requested that the Carter administration implement an economic embargo against South Africa. Three people decided that they were willing to get incarcerated for demonstrating in front of the South African Embassy in Washington, D.C. The people who were incarcerated were Dick Gregory and Mrs. Gregory along with Senator Owens of Mass. There was a van and a car from U. Mass to go down and support the demonstration. We are planning another demonstration for the same reasons later on. The National Black Students Association cosponsored the demonstration with Dick Gregory. Some of us will go back in front of the Embassy on December 25, 1977. More details about the next one will be in Nummo News.

The Rise of the Caribbean Nation

There is a new mood in the Caribbean. For those who remember the attempt at "federation" as an effort to unite the pre-independence English speaking territories, the new mood is reminiscent.

Today, however, the young militants, workers, and farmers in the Caribbean are no longer talking about just the English speaking territories. These revolutionaries are talking about a Caribbean Nation that would unite and free all the territories, English, French, Dutch, and Spanish speaking territories.

These militants have come out against the fragmentation of the Caribbean and against the domination of all the European colonial powers, including United States' rule over Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands.

CARIBBEAN NATION CONCEPT GROWING

The idea of a Caribbean Nation is taken quite seriously. Taken all together this nation comprises more than 230,000 square miles of territory and 24 million people. With the addition of CUBA, the population is increased another 10 million making a total population of 34 million people. The nation includes Belize in Central America, Guyana, Suriname, and Cayenne on the tip of South America, Bonaire off the coast of Venezuela, and extends to Jamaica, Haiti, the Dominican Republic, and the Virgin Islands in the east. Despite the large geographical distances that separate many of the territories and the different languages spoken, there exist a natural unity which has existed since slavery. The very word "West Indian" conveys images of a common lifestyle, culture, political, economic, social conditions and tradition.

A COMMON HERITAGE OF REBELLION

Perhaps the thing that unites the Caribbean most is the unceasing revolt of the people themselves against conditions which are repeated almost exactly in every territory. In every territory, every one of them, there were countless revolts by the slaves to free themselves. There were countless acts of resistance and rebellion. It made no difference whether or not the slave master and slave spoke Dutch, Spanish, French or English.

Part of the legacy of this Caribbean revolt against slavery, colonial, and mercantile capitalist domination was the Haitian Revolution in 1804. Not only was the first independent Black government in the Caribbean established, but in breaking the bonds of slavery, those Black Freedom Fighters had defeated the military and diplomatic armies of France as well as Britain and Spain. The victory of Haiti and the ceaseless revolts of Black slaves in the U.S.A. forced France to sell the "Louisiana territory" to the newly formed United States. It was not until 1954, at Dien Bien Phu in Vietnam, that a major European power was again defeated by a small colonial country.

This revolt of the poor workers and farmers of the Caribbean continues today. Though there are now ten (10) politically independent territories in the Caribbean, the former slave masters still influence and control much of the wealth. The other 25 territories are still under the rule of either Britain, France, Holland, or the United States. Even in the independent territories the masses are forced to fight against high unemployment, corruption, and repression at the hands of new elites.

WORKERS DEMAND A NEW SOCIETY

Yet this new mood continues to grow and to make clear the demands of the new Caribbean Nation. From one end to the other, we hear that the Caribbean people "must move together towards genuine political independence and a new form of government; we want true political and economic self-determination."

At one end, in the English speaking independent territory of Guyana, an alliance working people states its resistance against corruption of the country's political elites and raises the cry for a new society.

"The new society is not a string of words dangling from the future. It is not a gift from above. To win the new society the working people must fight for daily improvement in the economic political, and cultural conditions of work and life of the people... Working people of Guyana! Regard yourselves as part of the working people of the whole world... an organized, united and educated working class cannot be defeated.

At the other end the statements of a group of young workers from Martinique and Guadeloupe, territories still colonized and controlled by France reflect this new mood.

"For three centuries, our country has been under the direct and blood domination of French imperialism. For three centuries, we have been colonized, put in bondage, our economic development paralyzed by the pressure of French industry, our national culture crushed, and French citizenship imposed upon us since 1946 just serves in fact to suck our blood... Our struggle for independence is the struggle of the poorest classes of the population for a better life. We do not fight for the West Indian bourgeoisie to make profit... we fight for independence, not to give power to anyone, but to rule ourselves, we workers, poor peasants, unemployed, men, women, and youth."

That is the new mood of the Caribbean, the birth of the Caribbean Nation for independence and self-determination "to rule ourselves, we workers, poor, peasants, unemployed, men, women, and youth."

The Caribbean Nation is becoming more a reality in the daily struggle of its people. Considered by many people in the U.S.A. and Europe to be places of pleasure resorts and fun-filled days, the Caribbean has a rich history of struggle against exploitation and domination. The Caribbean Nation comprises not only the chain of islands enclosing the Caribbean Sea, but also the territories on the mainland of South and Central America which bound it.

A. Then ten (10) politically independent territories are: Barbados, Cuba, Grenada (including Carriacou and Petit Martinique), Haiti, Jamaica, Cooperative Republic of Guyana, Commonwealth of the Bahamas, The Dominican Republic, Trinidad & Tobago, Suriname.

B. Non-Independent Territories: 1. British Colonies — Antigua, Babbuda, Bermuda, British Honduras (on the mainland of Central America), Dominica, Montserrat, Redonda, St. Kitts-Nevis-Anguilla, St. Lucia, St. Vincent and the Grenadines, The Cayman Islands, The Turks and Caicos Islands, The Virgin Islands (British). 2. Dutch (The Netherlands) Colonies — Aruba, Bonaire (off the coast of South America), Venezuela, Curacoa, Saba, St. Eustatius, St. Maarten. 3. French Colonies — Cayene (so called French Guiana on the mainland of South America), Guadeloupe and its Dependencies, Martinique, St. Martin. 4. United States Colonies — Puerto Rico, Virgin Islands (U.S.) — St. Croix, St. John, St. Thomas.

Plan of Reverse Racial Discrimination

Congratulations Allen Bakke, for a fine and outstanding performance in showmanship, courage and the ingenius plan of reverse racial discrimination. You have succeeded in alerting the entire world of education and jeopardizing the years of fighting Black people have done to win an education in this country.

Bravo, to the people who produced the beautiful cross burnings that appeared on campus and in the Amherst area just a couple of months ago. The place and the timing was perfect, right outside of a largely attended disco. Just like the good ol' days back in slavery. Those cross burnings were, indeed, perfect reenactments of the racist anymosity still thriving in the blood of "narrow minded" individuals.

The Ku Klux Klan is not only doing a beautiful job of showing the world that they are still alive and kicking. They're doing even better at showing Black people, that they hate us more today than they ever did.

Please excuse my sarcasism in discussing such a crucial and serious matter as racism in this country. It only serves the purpose of sparing readers of the filthy disgust I feel on this subject. Appropriate words to justly discuss racism would only legitimize the banning of this article due to "indecent" language.

What is it going to take for oppressed people to realize that slavery and anymosity have not vanished. They have only taken on a different form. They are just as vivid today as they were in Kunta Kinte's time.

Does everyone have to walk around in white sheets and pointed hats before we realize who our enemies are?

Why they are out to destroy us and what avenues they are using to accomplish this.

Do we not realize that not all racist people are white. They are hundreds of people who are out to destroy their own race. They're KKK members that give the Black power sign.

Do we expect to see men in white wrappings on horses with flaming sticks in their hands? Do we expect to see students walking around campus with KKK printed on their T shirts?

Apparently we do. Even after a physical cross burning, an open and direct death threat against us, we still without thought, party every weekend.

Our insight is so shallow that we can't see the hundreds of plans designed right within the structure of this university to eliminate Black people.

Since we can't see them, there is no way we can defend ourselves against them. Must we always be shown something physical to realize danger. We should be aware enough to recognize threats through a one word hint in a newspaper.

We as Black people had better start looking a lot deeper into the direction of America. The direction of our future is contained within it.

Otherwise, we are going to become so politically and socially blind that we're going to find ourselves thanking people like Sir Allen Bakke for threatening our existence.

Black Mayors Caught in a Web

By LYNORA WILLIAMS

Ten years ago, Carl Stokes was elected mayor of Cleveland and he became the first Black to head a major U.S. city.

Today, Blacks head a number of major cities — including Atlanta, Detroit, Los Angeles and Washington, D.C. A number of Blacks also run small rural towns of the South and a few Northern suburbs with majority Black populations.

And in November elections, Detroit Mayor Coleman Young won his bid for reelection, while New Orleans' Ernest (Dutch) Morial was voted in as that city's first Black mayor. On Oct. 4, Atlanta Mayor Maynard Jackson won reelection in an overwhelming vote.

Clearly, the phenomenon of the Black mayor is here to stay. But what significance does this hold for Black people throughout the country?

Are Black mayors what Coretta Scott King once called them — "the newest problem solvers for the urban crisis?"

In a sense, yes. But they are largely problem solvers not for the poor and working people, but for the ruling class.

More in touch with Black residents, they are able to better contain and coopt the potential rebellions lurking in the increasingly third world urban centers. Even those more responsive to their Black constituencies can only offer band-aid solutions.

It was Stokes himself who first embodied what has become the major political role for most big-city Black mayors in this country.

Stokes, elected the year after Cleveland was rocked with uprisings, served to cool off an angry Black community. Three years later, Kenneth Gibson served basically the same function in Newark, N.J.

In some cases, Black mayors have escalated from the politics of cooptation to the politics of repression — as in Mayor Maynard Jackson's recent union-busting tactics to resolve Atlanta's strike by largely Black sanitation workers.

TOKEN POWER

These are examples where the problems have been so severe for the local ruling class that the Black mayors were given a measure of political clout. In some cities, however, Blacks have been mere tokens — such as Washington, D.C.'s Walter E. Washington and Richmond's Henry L. Marsh.

It's not a question of good or bad intentions. Many Blacks are elected as progressive candidates with widespread backing. But they inherit a host of difficulties — financially strapped cities, poor housing, minute tax bases and high unemployment rates. And without fail they are the butt of racist harassment from right-wingers.

Thus confronted by forces beyond their control, they are often compelled to abandon their progressive stands.

BIKO INQUIRY: COVERUP GOES ON

By KAREN GELLEN

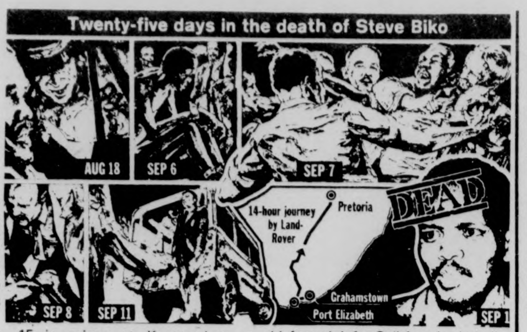
"We don't work under statutes," Col. Pieter Goosen, the officer in charge of Steven Biko's dentention, told a Pretoria courtroom last week.

"Thank you very much," Sydney Kentridge, lawyer for the Biko family, said. "That is what we have always suspected."

The exchange was typical of those taking place for the past two weeks during an official South African government inquest into the death of the popular young black consciousness movement leader (Guardian, Nov. 23). Biko was found dead on the floor of his Pretoria jail cell Sept. 12.



Twenty-five days in the death of Steve Biko

As the inquest continued, some 15 resolutions were being debated in the UN dealing with southern Africa.

The apartheid regime is "stonewalling" the Biko case. As Kentridge successively unraveled self-contradictory police and government accounts of Biko's death, the judge on Nov. 18 removed the question of a coverup from the jurisdiction of the inquiry.

Outside the courtroom each day, meanwhile, black demonstrators have gathered, singing political songs and raising chants such as "John Vorster and Jimmy Kruger are killing Azanians."

"They'd never dare do thatif you people weren't here with your cameras," one of Biko's jailers told a New York Times correspondent.

And inside, the inquest proceedings continue to reveal the brutal elements involved in the murder of Steven Biko. While the killing itself will likely remain protected by Pretoria's legal cocoon, police testimony has painted a dangerously revealing picture of the inhuman treatment of jailed black activists.

Security officials have admitted that Biko was forced to remain naked in his cell for nearly three weeks. This is "routine procedure," authorities said, to prevent a further epidemic of suicides in South Africa's jails. Suicide has been the official cause listed in most of the score of recent unexplained prison deaths of black detainees.

ANOTHER ACTIVIST DIES

(As the inquest entered its third week, Pretoria announced that yet another young black activist — this one a high school student arrested July 1 — had killed himself. The alleged suicide was 18-year-old Bonaventure Malaza, who had reportedly been found hanged Nov. 15 in prison at Krugersdorp, a suburb of Johannesburg.)

In Biko's case, police reported, the denial of clothing was also a precaution against a possible escape attempt. And, authorities admitted, the rule was in force Sept. 11 when Biko — already dying from massive brain injuries — was transported 700 miles by road, chained to a mat on the floor of a police van.

In a working to short-circuit the question of a high-level coverup, Judge Martinus J. Prins also ruled inadmissible last week the widely publicized initial statements by Justice Minister James Kruger that Biko has "starved himself to death."

This avenue of questioning is important to the Biko family case because, as lawyer Kentridge explained, the floating of that first cover story meant the government "had something very serious to hide."

In the UN, at the same time, the General Assembly was moving to a vote on 15 resolutions targeting apartheid South Africa and its allies. One key proposal would urge the UN Security Council to again consider imposing mandatory economic sanctions against the Vorster regime.

Resolutions to this effect were blocked in the council earlier this month with a triple veto cast by the U.S., Britain and France. The assembly proposal notes that a cutoff of foreign investment in South Africa "would constitute an important step in the struggle against apartheid."

Other measures being considered by the General Assembly include an oil embargo against Pretoria. This move is also aimed at weakening the Ian Smith regime in Rhodesia, as South Africa now serves as the chief conduit for Salisbury's vital oil imports. There is also a proposal to strengthen the arms embargo recently passed by the Security Council by mandating an end to Pretoria's access to nuclear equipment, materials or technology from abroad.

Israel's "continuing and increasing collaboration with the racist regime" is also under attack in the General Assembly. In supporting a resolution condemning this relationship, Nigerian Ambassador Leslie Harriman, chairman of the UN Special Committee against Apartheid, said Israel was acting "in defiance of the UN, in defiance of Africa and in utter contempt of the black people of South Africa."

Also, he said, Israel, "the one country which has tried to comfort the apartheid regime after the murder of Steve Biko," had on Nov. 7 reiterated that it "will not abandon South Africa."

ANTI-APARTHEID RESOLUTIONS

The 15 resolutions — which also encompass racist sports, bantustans, political prisoners, trade unions and other aspects of apartheid — were overwhelmingly supported by most third world member states, the socialist countries and some Western nations. Speaking for the strong resolutions, Angolan Ambassador Elisio de Figuereido noted however that "as long as the minority regime of Vorster is allowed to continue in power, to freely practice the abominable system of apartheid, there will be no peace in southern Africa."

"We must not only condemn the Vorster regime, denounce it, seek to isolate it," he added, "we must utterly destroy the fascist apartheid structure that rules South Africa."

People's Democratic Elections in Mozambique

SAMORA MACHEL

Last month the Mozambican people began, for the first time in their history, a process of democratic elections. In a recent speech to the first session of Mozambique's First People's Assembly President Samora Machel explained — from a Marxist-Leninist point of view — the political significance of this important step forward and its relationship to the fight against neocolonialism. Following are excerpts from his address.

These elections are of great historic significance; they are the first to be held throughout the country, the first in which millions of men and women, millions of workers, will elect their representatives at all levels.

Two years after the proclamation of our independence — an independence that is at one and the same time a rupture with the colonial power and the emergence of a state founded on the worker-peasant alliance — the creation of the People's Assemblies means the consolidation of class power, of people's power.

This is an important moment when the people, in an organized way, affirm the reality of their power. The power of the people serves the people; strengthening it improves the people's lives.

The democratization of working methods and the popularization of the political line that accompany the elections and the founding of the People's Assemblies establish irreversible situations in the evolution of our revolutionary process. The masses become conscious of the fact that they are responsible for their state, that their state will be what they decide it should be.

This awareness and determination makes the people's conquests irreversible, and will block and annihilate any attempt by reaction and imperialism to bring down our People's Republic. The exploiting classes are thrown from power once and for all; the working class and its principal ally, the peasantry, are installed in supreme organs of the state.

The question of power is fundamental to the revolution. The revolution triumphs or fails when it holds or loses power. Without taking power there can be no revolutionary conquests, no revolutionary transformations in society. This is logical since power is the capacity of a class to impose its interests, to impose its will on the entire society, the capacity of this class to mold society in accordance with its interests', to lead it through the transformation process that satisfies those interests.

In their efforts to keep the masses confused, and in their deliberate action to prevent the masses from gaining power, the exploiting classes spread the myth of the neutrality of power. According to bourgeois theorists the state is neutral; the state of bourgeois law is a state above classes and their conflicts — a state that could be used independently, by exploiters and exploited.

Thus, the question of the conquest of power by the workers, of the overthrow of the exploiting classes and their state apparatus, is never raised. In consequence, the question of instituting a dictatorship of the proletariat is also never raised. This is an attempt to demobilize the working class; an attempt to convince the working class that their struggle to overthrow the power of the bourgeois state is useless.

The historical experience of the people, the historical experience of our people, shows us that these theories are wrong. In our country, successive classes of national and foreign exploiters held power, always to the detriment of the interests of the overwhelming majority of the people.

By its very nature and class objectives, the People's Liberation War created favorable conditions such that, in our historical circumstances, we could accomplish the tasks of the national democratic revolution and begin the process of the people's democratic revolution.

At the time of the struggle against the new exploiters who arose within Frelimo, the need to build from the ruins of colonialism a new kind of society, a new type of power, became clear to the broad masses in the liberated areas.

In the practice of the revolutionary process, the working masses had come to understand that the central question of our struggle was to know which class or classes should hold power in our society, and also what concrete measures should be taken to win this power.

The answer we found was that we must prevent Mozambican exploiters from occupying the vacancies left by colonialism. We must prevent the small national exploiters, allied to imperialism, from occupying power and progressively turning themselves into a new bourgeoisie.

Our fight was to destroy the small crocodile on the river bank instead of leaving him to grow and turn into a strong crocodile. We did this by destroying the political and economic power of the feudal regulos; we also did it when we took control of trade and encouraged the organization of collective modes of production in the liberated areas.

As far as structures were concerned, we systematically rejected all those who aspired to become new exploiters. The people's committees of peasants in cooperatives and poor peasants, allied to the soldiers, were the first forms of the new power in the liberated areas.

With the victory of national independence the struggle against attempts to distort the revolutionary content of our fight intensified. The recent political and ideological battles to destroy the colonial capitalist state apparatus, against economic sabotage and the destabilization of our power, are other such moments in the defense of our fundamental interests.

This is not a theoretical and abstract battle. It is a battle where the improvement of our life, the possibility that we, and in particular our children, may live in prosperity and comfort, is at stake.

There is a radical difference between the power of the working class and its fundamental ally, the peasantry, and the power of the exploiters.

The working class and the peasantry constitute the overwhelming majority of our people, the essence of the working classes. Their power is the power of the vast majority, their interests are the interests of the vast majority of the people. They exercise power as the vast majority and impose their will on the handful of exploiters.

Another fundamental aspect, perhaps the principal one, of the holding of power by the working class is that by freeing itself and holding power, it not only liberates itself, but liberates and benefits the whole society. The power of the working class leads to the harmonious development of the whole society.

(These problems are shared by mayors of small towns. But small-town mayors also face difficulties of a different nature. More than half of the nation's 161 Black mayors are heads of towns of 2000 people or less. Many of them were elected as a direct result of intensive voter registration drives by civil rights workers in the 1960s. These mayors face a vindictive white ruling class and receive even less support from the federal government than their big-city counterparts. Pleas of Black mayors for money to upgrade such basic services as sewage and water supplies are often ignored.)

BIG CITY MAYORS

The newest addition to the roster of big-city Black mayors is Ernest (Dutch) Morial, elected to the New Orleans post Nov. 12. Morial will take over from Atlanta's Jackson as the Black mayor with the largest city in the South.

A former state judge, Morial ran on a moderate platform, opposed by a right-wing white, Joseph DiRosa.

DiRosa, who conducted a openly racist campaign, won only five of the city's 17 districts. At one point during his campaign he called Blacks "jungle bunnies." He also said that Morial was "importing" Blacks to vote for him.

Mayor Coleman Young, elected in Detroit in 1973, established a firm hold on that city's political leadership when he was reelected to his second term this month. Young defeated another Black man, Ernest Browne Jr., who ran on a conservative plank with the support of many whites. Blacks make up 55 per cent of the voters in Detroit, however, and Young carried that constituency.

By most accounts a populist, Young won 60 per cent of the vote. In his first election bid, he had the support of both the Detroit United Auto Workers and Henry Ford 2. This time he had even broader support.

Young has demonstrated an understanding of the crisis of U.S. cities but has been confined to patchwork efforts at solving them. He is, however, somewhat responsive to the demands of a highly unemployed minority community and of political activists, some of whom openly worked in his first campaign.

For example, Young has charged that financial interests have attempted to take over the cities and that the federal government has forsaken the cities. "The only answer we've had from the federal government in the last several years to the problems in our cities is millions and billions of dollars of aid to the police force," he said in a speech last year. "That's Law Enforcement Assistance (LEA) money to buy bigger machine guns and more sophisticated radio equipment, weapons of repression. And the same administration in Washington that pumps out billions in LEA aid vetoes bills to provide jobs, bills to provide assistance to beleagured cities. So I believe that we've come to a real crisis in this nation."

ATLANTA'S MAYNARD JACKSON

Like Young, Atlanta's Jackson built a coalition of Blacks and capitalist interests. But Jackson was open about his allegiances when he fired 1000 striking city employes earlier this year. The largely Black workers, members of the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employes (AFSCME), had gone on strike demanding higher wages. Jackson did not hesitate once in his ferocious strike-breaking effort.

But workers and other progressive forces failed to mobilize to oust Jackson, despite many strike-period vows to do so. But Jackson's greatest tests are still to come. An urban policy center, Atlanta Research, has predicted a severe fiscal crisis for Atlanta.

The policital character of many Black mayors was reflected two weeks ago, in remarks by A.J. Cooper of Prichard, Ala., president of the National Conference of Black Mayors. "Carter is going to be a great president and will do a lot for the Black community," he said.

Perhaps the situation was most graphically summed up two years ago by the Black-oriented magazine Ebony when it remarked: "Like flies trapped in a spider web, Black mayors can wiggle a little bit but they can't move very far."

Federal District Judge Orders Trial In Public Interest Suit of Robert S. Pritchard, ET. AL. V. United Klans of America, ET. AL.

Federal District Judge Orders Trial In Public Interest Suit of Robert S. Pritchard, ET. Al. V. United Klans of America, ET. Al.

(Baldwinsville, N.Y.) A trial was ordered in the action of the National Demonstration Project to Study Extremism (NDP) of the Panamerican-Panafrican Assn. v. the United Klans of America by Senior Federal District Judge Edmund Port in Utica yesterday (October 25, 1977). Last ditch efforts to have the suit dismissed were brought by the Alabama-based United Klans of America, and their New York State Agents. According to a spokesperson for the plaintiffs, the UKA is the largest confederation of Klan Chapters in the U.S. Its members at one time exceeded 250,000, according to F.B.I. figures. Current figures released by the UKA are regarded as inflated solely for public relations-recruitment usage.

Defendants include Charles Holland, a veteran organizer identified with KKK Rallies in recent years in New York State's Southern Tier, in Windham Center, PA., Pine Bush, N.Y., and South Hamilton, N.Y. It is reported that Holland has acted as organizing agent variously of the Nathan Bedford Forrest Klan of Florida, Northern Independent Klans of N.Y., and of the United Klans of America of Alabama. Holland, formerly a N.Y. State Correctional Officer, was until his recent retirement, assigned to guard the arsenal at Walkill Correctional facility amid informed speculation concerning an arms build-up in KKK quarters. At the same time, the KKK has successfully launched a recruitment drive for new and old members, notably among N.Y. State Correctional Officers with access to Correctional facility arsenals. Holland was one of the principal targets of a September 2, 1975 Ruling by N.Y. State Commissioner of Corrections Benjamin Ward ordering KKK Correctional Guards to resign from the KKK or face dismissal from their posts. The foundation-sponsored NDP was responsive to the request of Commissioner Ward's office for its research materials regarding Charles Holland's KKK affiliation. Holland is now a UKA "Kleagle" (organizer) of a State Chapter in formation. He also characterized himself in a 1975 Court Proceeding as a "Reverend-Minister of the Gospel".

Defendant Raymond Bagnall, a Sherburne, N.Y. farmer, was organizer of a KKK Rally on July 5-6, 1975 on New Berlin, N.Y. land which he owns in the Town of Columbus. It was established that Bagnall leased his land for one dollar to the Nathan Bedford Forrest KKK of Florida.

Holland and Bagnall appeared Tuesday in Federal District Court to offer defense arguments for dismissal.

Birmingham Corporate Counsel of the UKA, John E. Mays, Esq., representing Imperial Wizard Robert Shelton's United Klans of America, and Albert P. Lentz, York, Pa., head of the NAAWP ("Nat'l. Assn. for the Advancement of White People") had submitted written motions to dismiss.

The action is the outgrowth of a UKA Rally on July 9, 1977 in the evnirons of Colgate University in South Hamilton, N.Y. The Rally was advertised in flyers mailed to the New York media from York, Pa. The flyer stated in part, "The United Klans of America, Inc. invites the public (those that could be potential members) White Gentile American Citizens are eligible. Those not eligible to join - Stay away."

The NDP filed a pre-Rally suit for a temporary injunction on July 8, 1977 in response to the Rally organizers' alleged overt attempts to manipulate the media with inflammatory and violent-provoking threats regarding alleged anticipated confrontations. Judge Edmund Port denied that request. The NDP was unable to take advantage of the apparatus for an eleventh-hour appeal of that decision despite the availability of a U.S. Court of Appeals Judge in New York City on the following Saturday morning, and instead focussed on preparations for a Court test of their second claim for relief on which Judge Port did not rule at the time: a Permanent Injunction to prevent similar KKK Rallies in New York State in the future.

A spokesperson for the foundation's NDP has stated, "Our up-to-date studies confirm that Klan Rallies are not simple forums for 'racketeering in hatred', or public relations vehicles for recruitment. They are instrumentalities of violence, in and of themselves".

The plaintiffs, acting as "Private Attorneys General" are engaged in research-oriented initiatives focusing on domestic and international racialist supremacist movements. The Research-Activists have attended local, regional and national KKK Rallies. They have also penetrated the very Inner Councils of KKK organizations with the actual assistance of certain KKK Executive Members.

Among the plaintiffs are Concert Pianist Robert S. Pritchard, black American Founder-Chairman of the Panamerican—Panafrican Assn.; Poet Antoine J. Polgar, French-born Executive Director; S.D. Rodman, a foundation trustee, and law clerk-intern with the NAACP; and Ms. Robin Barovick, a Jewish-American staff-member. Messrs. Polgar and Rodman appeared in Utica Federal District Court for the plaintiffs.

The plaintiffs concede that the action was brought in an effort to address the unchecked spread of orchestrated, racially-inspired violence augured in South Hamilton in the wake of prior incidents in Plains, Ga., Columbus, Ohio and New Rochelle, N.Y. They also noted they had focussed on the electronic media's news coverage of the Rally in Central New York which appeared supportive of the traditional KKK Rally self-fulfilling prophecy of violence. A principal organizer of the South Hamilton Rally was reported in the print and sound media as stating the purpose of the Rally was to gain publicity. His subsequent references to the expectation that "heads would roll" at the Rally, and that "carnage had been threatened" appeared to veteran KKK Rally observers as specifically designed to capture media attention on the basis of an appeal for "blood, guts and violence." Plaintiff A.J. Polgar added, "While our monitoring indicated some attempts by the media to practice restraint, restraint did not prevail. The propensity to court violence was dramatically illustrated by attempts of a major Syracuse TV news department to confirm the attendance of a black American correspondent of the Baltimore-based Afro-American newspaper chain at the Rally. An unorthodox bribe in the form of videotape footage of any violence that might befall the correspondent was promised for use in whatever legal action the correspondent might pursue, in return for an exclusive confirmation of his time of arrival at the Rally site. Related inquiries by other members of the local white media before the Rally betrayed attempts to convert the black correspondent into a 'newsmaker' rather than a 'news-person'. The integrity of Dr. Pritchard's presence as a legitimate correspondent assigned to cover the New York State KKK Rally was thereby compromised. Another local black newsman was denied entrance at the Rally site", Polgar confirmed, "despite the fact that the media was invited through unsolicited flyers mailed from outside the State, and through confirmations solicited by telephone in which the racial identification of a non-white reporter was clearly offered."

Another spokesperson for the National Demonstration Project to Study Extremism said, "It is time to challenge attempts by extremists to exculpate and disassociate themselves in advance from responsibility for overt acts of violence. Our studies prove that the KKK openly advocates violence, and urges its members to 'lash out' in a manner that will not endanger the Klan. The KKK is a secret oath-bound organization which openly stresses such total fealty to the group that its members are pledged to lie in Court. While the KKK has been somewhat successful in persuading the general public that it is now a chivalrous, non-violent civic improvement association, our very personal experience within the 'Klaverns' (Inner Councils) of the 'Invisible Empire', and the violence to which we have been subjected, gives the lie to this claim."

Mr. Polgar pointed out that even prior to undertaking their organizational study, they had been targets of KKK intimidation and violence. In 1966, Dr. Pritchard's Winston-Salem, N.C. home was threatened by KKK night-riders. In 1965, a cross was burned on the lawn of his country residence in Dutchess County, N.Y. Four white NDP associates of Pritchard were arrested for trespass at a July 6, 1975 KKK Rally in New Berlin, N.Y. The most dramatic incident occurred at a 1975 Labor Day KKK Rally at Stone Mountain, Ga. where Dr. Pritchard and six of his correspondents-team associates were beaten, maced, robbed and forcibly ejected.

UKA Imperial Wizard Shelton has publicly spoken of instituting a $50 Million action against the U.S. Government alleging damage to the UKA as a result of illegal domestic surveillance and harassment by 'private' government-funded 'front' organizations. A spokesman for the National Demonstration Project to Study Extremism states, "It is predictable that the UKA will attempt to compromise the credibility of our Federal Civil Rights Action by calling into question the integrity of our parent foundation as a private, non-governmentally-funded or related organization".

The embattled Central New York Based Multi-Ethnic—Multi-National Resident Foundation group sponsored by Dr. Pritchard is considered so beyond the pale of racial orthodoxy in the hamlet of Baldwinsville, N.Y. that Dr. Pritchard and his Inter-Racial—International group of colleagues were alleged to be "revolutionaries" when taking up residence in this conservative, predominantly-white suburb of Syracuse in 1970. Since then, Dr. Pritchard and his colleagues have been subjected to a seven year siege of unlawful surveillance, mailed and telephoned death-threats against Dr. Pritchard himself, and threats of permanent disfigurement. Continuing up to the present day, they have escalated up to press-time to include arson and two threats of arson upon the organization's foundation-estate headquarters, as well as a threat of assassination by "a marksman" on a County highway travelled by Dr. Pritchard. He explains that the same climate which produces such formidable examples of racialist conflict as are occurring in Namibia, Zimbabwe, and in South Africa and Great Britain where KKK Chapters have been established, afflicts a growing number of U.S. small towns, suburbs and Villages (like his own Baldwinsville, N.Y.). He cites the "strategic apathy" of the average white citizen as a major contributing factor to the unchecked proliferation of such American domestic hate groups as the National States Rights Party, scores of KKK Chapters and Nazi Party cells, ROAR (Restore Our Alienated Rights), the Posse Comitatus, etc.

Jury Convicts Klan Bomber

In 1963, the 16th Street Baptist Church was the focal point of the civil rights struggle in Birmingham, Ala.

On Sept. 15 of that year, a bomb ripped through the church taking the lives of four young Black girls: Carol Denise McNair, 11, and Cynthia Wesley, Carold Robertson and Addie Mae Collins, all 14. Their photographs now hang on one of the church walls.

And on Nov. 18 — the day young McNair would have turned 26 — an Alabama Circuit Court jury convicted Ku Klux Klansman Robert Edward Chambliss, 73, of first degree murder for the McNair murder. The jury, nine whites and three Blacks, recommended life imprisonment.

Alabama Attorney General William Baxley indicated after the trial that Chambliss was the ringleader of a group which planted a powerful dynamite bomb in the church, killing the girls in the basement as they met to change into their choir robes.

Alabama state and local officials stated last week that they will seek indictments soon against at least four other individuals whom they believe were members of the unit responsible for the explosion.

Following the trial, Chambliss' attorney immediately filed an appeal. The convicted murderer then went free temporarily after posting a $20,000 bond. The former Birmingham garage mechanic also faces murder charges in the deaths of the other three girls.

"The Ku Klux Klan has been exposed once again as 'yellow-bellied' cowards who operate with dynamite and darkness," commented John Jung, a member of the prosecution team, following the verdict.

DAMAGING EVIDENCE

Rev. Elizabeth Cobbs, Chambliss' niece, produced the most damaging evidence during the proceeding as she quoted the bomber's statement a day before the explosion: "I've got enough stuff to flatten half of Birmingham."

"Just wait until tomorrow morning and they'll beg us to let them segregate," Cobbs quoted her uncle as saying on the eve of the 1963 terrorist action.

Other witnesses testified that they saw firecracker-like bundles in the Chambliss home several weeks before the church bombing.

The 16th Street Baptist Church bombing was one of some 50 racist bombings directed at Blacks which took place in Alabama in the late 1950s and early 1960s. Observers widely suspected the KKK in the terrorist acts.

Following the murder of the four girls, the FBI sent in teams of investigators who gathered 200 volumes of evidence, but the Justice Department never brought a case — despite outrage expressed across the nation.

Birmingham authorities arrested Chambliss for illegal possession of dynamite in October 1963 but he escaped on an appeal in city court.

Chambliss' conviction came after he was indicted this summer by a grand jury investigating a series of bombings.

well as the work-study position mentioned earlier.

At the exit of the AP bridge are two alternatives for AP youth. Those with chronological and emotional maturity enter an Independent Living Program. Here they receive Life Management Instruction and are allowed to live in an apartment on their own or with another AP youth for a short time before they are discharged from the AP. Those unable to participate in The Independent Living Program are discharged to their families of origin. Organizations within their home communities are contacted to give post-AP support to the youth.

Affiliated with the Independent Living Program at the AP is a Group Home, privately funded and located in Belchertown, Mass. This organization is structurally similar to the Independent Living Program, but all youths are referred directly to the home through the DYS. In both organizations, all adolescents are between the ages of sixteen and a half and seventeen — all will soon be legal adults and no longer under the jurisdiction of the respective program. Therefore it is vital that the troubled kids are provided with coping instruction before moving out into an alienating world.

Now I will look at the supportive structure of the Advocate Program. First are the "pillars" of the bridge; the Director, the Assistant Director and the Secretary. Their wages are made possible through DYS funding. In one side of the river, at one end of the bridge, stands the Director, Bob Winston. At the A P he sees to the overall development and administration of the AP staff, and "service plan" of each youth. In addition, he is responsible for the AP budget and serves as an Assistant Professor in the Juvenile Justice division of the School of Education.

The "center pillar" is the Secretary. She supports sixty-three staff members, several advocates and many kinds through her reception, typing and overall clerical duties.

Beside the secretary, at a pole opposite the Director Rich Bell. He is responsible for the supervision of a youth's admittance into and discharge from the AP. He oversees the implementation of each youth's "service plan", and sees that both kids and Advocates are given adequate support through his supervision and periodic evaluation of various AP components and staff within those components.

The blocks built into the periphery of the bridge are the unpaid interns and volunteers, and the Community Reach-Out Coordinator paid by the University. Eleven students from the Juvenile Justice division of the School of Education work at the AP for one semester. They are instructed as to the workings of the Juvenile Justice System in Massachusetts, the administrative aspects of the AP, and may eventually take on one or two cases. Academic credits and valuable training are received this manner. Three volunteers are available to provide constructive activity outside of the AP for a youth. But they may also spend the day just talking to or having fun with the youth.

The Community Reach-Out Coordinator is a work-study student. She is an important worker in the AP as she is responsible for recruiting, interviewing and evaluating potential Advocates.

Towards the center of the bridge body are three Title One Teachers, The Coordinators of Educational, Clinical and After Care Services, and the Coordinator of skills and Activities are built in. The teachers are paid through a national grant set up for educational services applied to be the DYS. The DYS hired these teachers, and pays all coordinators through its own funds.

The three teachers make up the facility for the Alternative Education Program at the AP. They teach courses necessary to bring the youths who are behind in their studies to the level of their peers, and to qualify others for the GED. The coordinator of Educational Services works in conjunction with these teachers, as he or she is responsible for "the development and implementation of (educational) services" for AP kids.

The Coordinator of Clinical Services is responsible for the training of new staff and Advocates, for the interviewing of kids referred to the AP by the DPW and DYS, and for counseling kids and Advocates. This coordinator may refer kids with special programs to outside agencies for counseling and evaluation.

Troubled adolescents are prepared for life by the Coordinator of Skills and Activities. Most "recreational" activities are primarily instructive and constructive, although some events are planned just for fun.

The duties of the Coordinator of After Care relate to the efforts of the Coordinator of Skills and Activities since both are primarily concerned with the adolescents' future after his or her six to eight month stay at the AP. This position is that of an advisor in the preparation of "service plans" in which the date and type of discharge from the AP are outlined.

The keystone of this supporting bridge includes three Field Supervisors and several Advocates paid through DYS funds. The Field Supervisors are each assigned a caseload of eight to ten kids. They provide supportive services for each youth and Advocate on their caseload, and are on call twenty-four hours a day, seven days a week. In order to receive support from the rest of the staff in dealing with the specific problems of a given adolescent, they must report the status of the adolescent to their fellow workers.

The positions of Field Supervisor and Advocate are perhaps the most time consuming and emotionally demanding; yet the rewards of watching troubled youth progress to positive goals is just compensation for headaches and low monetary rewards. It takes a great deal of love and caring for other human beings to continue with either job. Advocates themselves must bear the responsibilities of any good parent, offering a comfortable home and genuine concern for their charge. In some ways they are almost the Ideal Parent — how often is anyone given the chance to choose a parent sharing his or her own interests?

The AP Staff feels a need for more Third World Advocates. They see the struggles of every member in the community, but hope that you might take the opportunity to love and guide a younger Brother or Sister. The job requires an especially patient, mature, sensitive and caring individual — call the Advocate Program, if you think that you would like to participate in a very important, worthwhile activity.

Next week: interviews with kids, Field Supervisors and Advocates.

MORE TO COME

Statement Concerning The Play "Paul Robeson"

Paul Robeson and W.E.B. DuBois in Paris, 1949

Robeson must include the following or it is hopelessly flawed, truncated or even a caricature:

— Robeson as an outstanding student of linguistics and culture — folk culture.

Robeson as one of the great humanitarians of the twentieth century — of all times!

Robeson as a profound realist and scholar — a heroic figure who on the basis of his scholarly analysis of situations, came to a conclusion as to the needed response and, in his view, acted in the best interests of all humanity.

On Thursday evening, October 20, 1977, at the Colonial Theater in Boston, I saw a disfigured "Paul Robeson" presented as the real Paul whom I had known and worked with for some twenty years. I cannot accept the portrayal I saw as an honest attempt to pay "tribute to Paul Robeson."

James Earl Jones is a magnificent actor and he is a pleasant and even endearing "Paul Robeson." But it is not the real thing: not only as to Jones' unsuccessful singing but as to the essence of Paul Robeson.

The United States Government spent millions of dollars and used hundreds of operatives from at least 1949 to 1957 to make a non-person of Robeson to incite black leaders to disown him and to malign his character, to try to drive a wedge between this great man and the millions of both white and black in the U.S. as well as aboard who were inspired by his staunch defense of his right to sing, to espouse liberation of his people here as well as in Africa, and to talk against the horrendous "containment" policy of the U.S. Government which was to lead us first into Korea and then to the terrible debacle known as Vietnam.

Some Glaring Omissions

There is no account in the play that in 1944 Robeson had received the NAACP's highest award — the Spingarn medal. Nor is there indication that he, as early as 1934, revelled in his desire "To Be African," not because of a "Roots-like fantasized ocean voyage in 1939 (described in the play) but because of his discoveries while studying in London at the end of the twenties of the rich and varied cultural and humanitarian contributions of his people in Africa.

Further, there is no sense in the play that Robeson in Salt Lake City in the spring of 1947 renounced the traditional concert stage where he sang and performed for the wealthy and vowed to use his talents for the education of working people. Nor is there any account of his exertions over the years (and particularly from 1947) on behalf of workers, white as well as black, struggling to better their economic and general social conditions.

Factual errors

Factual errors abound in the play. We did not go to war a month after Woodrow Wilson was elected president as stated in the play. Erroneously, the indication is given that while the American Bar Association banned blacks, membership in its New York City affiliate was open to Robeson at the time he "practiced" law. This was not to come till the early forties, during World War II.

Also, blacks did not settle in Harlem until thirty to forty years after the Civil War, and then only in small numbers. And the "Harlem" Renaissance did not put forth an alternative to the dominant social, political and economic system as stated in the play. Robeson did not regard Mussolini and Hitler as "maniacs" but as studied and vicious racists who would deliberately destroy humanity rather than share power with working people. Robeson's Paris statement of 1949 is placed so as to seem to have occurred during the Korean War which did not begin until June 1950.

Peekskill(s) — where the "concert hall" where Robeson was to sing was burnt down and the subsequent meeting grounds and audience were attacked by hoodlums as the N.Y. State Police remained immobile — occurred in August, September and not as the pray seemingly enters — during the Korean conflict. I was at Peekskill. It is pure invention that Robeson stated: "It is me they are after... anyone who wants to... go..."

The Unreal Robeson

Even with Jones off stage and the lights focussed on Robeson's picture the singing from off stage by Jones of 'This Little Light of Mime' is disappointing. Why not use a recording of Robeson's? Many are available.

The gratuitous and insulting quips for laughs reminds of white "black-faced ministrelsy" — for example, put into Jones' mouth is "bloody is the only word in the English (British slang) vocabulary likely to come from Harlem."

And, again in 1939 as Robeson passes the Statue of Liberty: "Are you ready Desdemona..." Pure suggestive fiction!

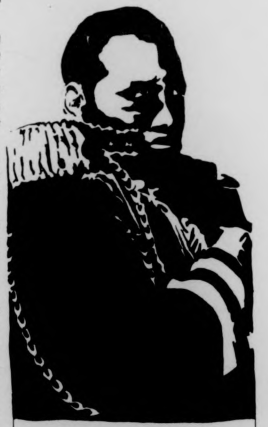
The "Truman" episode is a mockery of what happened. In response to brutal lynchings of blacks after World War II — as happened in 1919 after World War I — Robeson led a delegation to see the president and said: "If the government doesn't protect blacks, they will protect themselves." (This statement, however was omitted from the play, Truman objected, but we pressured into appointing a Commission which eventually brought in a positive report on necessary actions which were never enacted.

character. Further Robeson never said regarding to Stalin Peace Prize, "Thanks a lot Uncle Joe!"

Robeson had in California and 1946 stated under oath, "I am of a communist" but refuse thereafter to answer the question. Had he lied in 1946, he certain would have been prosecuted for perjury. Before the House UnAmerican Activities Committee in 1956 Robeson did not whimp about being a "charity case." He said he would stay right in the U.S. which his ancestors helped to build and enjoy a piece of the rock just like the Congressmen!

Robeson's son charges the play as being a continuation of the undercover State Department "planned propaganda effort" initiated January 1, 1951 to portray his father as "spiritually alienated from America" and from "the bulk of his own people," while slavishly adhering to the communist line.

The best comment on this controversy to date is a statement made Sunday, October 23, 1977 by Professor Derrick Bell of the Harvard Law School. As a youngster he remembers Paul Robeson being an inspiration of a "dignified black man." Of the current debate he says:



Robeson as the "Emperor Jones."

All of this might be dismissed as supposition and unfair criticism were it not for James Earl Jones telling admission that he was an actor, not a politician. In deeming himself a mere thesbian gladiator for hire. Jones acknowledges his committment to self-aggrandizement at the expense of concerns crucial to black people. It is precisely that commitment which despite his enormous skills renders James Earl Jones totally unsuited to re-enact Paul Robeson's life on the stage.

S. Korea planned White House spy group

WASHINGTON [AP] — The South Korean intelligence agency planned to install a spy network in the White House and to pay off aides to top U.S. leaders last year in hopes of winning United States support for South Korea, a document released yesterday alleged.

The plan apparently was dropped when previous activities by the Korean Central Intelligence Agency in this country were exposed.

Rep. Donald M. Fraser, D-Minn., who released copies of the report during a subcommittee hearing yesterday said the 1976 plan and an earlier KCIA plan, apparently in 1973, "reveal a calculated attempt by the KCIA to use clandestine means to sway American public opinion and official policy.....

"The action taken by the KCIA to implement the plans must be recognized for what it is — outright subversion," Fraser said. He said that about $750,000 was earmarked for the KCIA operations, not including money that was to be contributed to congressional campaigns.

The alleged KCIA plan released by Fraser's House International Relations subcommittee envisioned $100-a-month payoffs to 14 aides in the White House, State Department, Defense Department and intelligence agencies.

It envisioned payments of $53,000 in campaign contributions to at least four congressmen and "special manipulation" payments to selected congressional aides.

The plan also called for efforts to win over and manipulate reporters in major U.S. news organizations and to manipulate university people to promote support for South Korea.

The elaborate plan to influence U.S. foreign policy and public opinion allegedly was distributed to KCIA station chiefs in the United States in early 1976 — shortly before other similar South Korean efforts were publicly disclosed.

A subcomittee member, Rep. William Goodling, R-Pa., said he believes Korean efforts to carry out the plan were cut short by the publicity.

The subcommittee apparently obtained the document from Sohn Ho Young, who defected as the KCIA station chief in New York City two months ago. Young testified before the subcommittee yesterday.

The alleged plan envisioned paying $100 a month to three aides for the "intelligence network in the White House," three aides in the State Department to strengthen ties with an unnamed official there and three aides to "concentratedly infiltrate" the Defense Department's military aid division.

It also called for $100-a-month payments to five employees in U.S. intelligence agencies to strengthen ties with them.

Three unnamed aides in the House Speaker's office and other congressional leaders' offices were to be paid $500 a month as "paid collaborators."

Some $15,000 was to be paid in "special manipulation expenses" to aides apparently in at least four different congressional offices.

The KCIA also planned to try to recruit and manipulate reporters for the New York Times, Washington Post, Christian Science Monitor, and American Broadcasting Co., according to the alleged plan.

Another goal was to "manipulate" two news organizations whose names were censored out of the copies of the plan released by the subcommittee.

The KCIA planned to "hire and utilize two American reporters as paid collaborators" and to hire one reporter for a Korean residents newspaper for $12,000 a year to manipulate him.

It planned in some cases to try to convert reporters by flying them to South Korea for visits and also hoped to convert at least one unnamed Harvard University scholar listed as an opponent of South Korean President Park Chung Hee's policies.

The former KCIA station chief in New York City told the committee he believed the KCIA drafted the plan because it was afraid of losing U.S. support in the wake of America's leaving South Vietnam.

Three UM students arrested

By MATHEW KOVARY
Collegian Staff

AMHERST — In an early morning raid on No. 68 Riverglade Apartments, Amherst police arrested three UMass students and charged them with possession of stolen property valued at $2500.

Arrested were Maria E. Roberts, 20, of 21 Rolling Green, Oscar Grimaldi, 22, of 68 Riverglade Apartments and Richard Santos, 20, also of 68 Riverglade Apartments. All are charged with receiving stolen property, police said.

Most of the recovered property was reported stolen over the holiday weekend in break-ins at Brittany Manor Apartments, police said.

In addition, police found a small quantity of marijuana, several hypodermic needles and syringes and other implements used to administer drugs.

Acting upon information received from a Brittany Manor resident, officers from the Amherst Police Department obtained a search warrant and with assistance from the Massachusetts State Police and UMass police, entered and searched the apartment at 3 a.m. yesterday.

Police say additional charges will be brought against the suspects pending further investigation.

Keep your eye on the potatoes

By BRIAN NELSON
Collegian Staff

Three UMass students think of themselves as mashed potatoes.

Beginning this fall, Steve Kravitz, Alan Silberberg and Joe Bailey have been performing "original comedy funny stuff" as Mashed Potatoes, playing coffeehouses in the five-college area, and the newly opened City Studio Theater Cabaret in Northampton.

Mashed Potatoes also performs on radio. The team's WMUA radio show, "Mashed Potatoes," is aired Saturdays between noon and 1 p.m. ("the time varies," according to Silberberg).

Kravitz attributes the name "Mashed Potatoes" to his radio play, "The Great Potato." Why the team chose that name, however, is a mystery even to its members.

Kravitz defines the group's reportoire as "a combination of things."

"People ask us," he said, "if we are Firesign Theatrelike, and we say we draw, I guess, from everywhere, and we've come up with what we'd like to think as our own style."

Mashed Potatoes' style ranges from Abbott and Costello to Italian commedia dell 'arts. Its skits include spoofs of TV commercials ("Peter Lorre Kitchen Appliances — they cut through anything"), topical issues ("DNA: A Genetic Love Story"), and UMass (the Meaties Liberation Movement's siege on Basics).

Almost all of the team's material comes from simple observation, according to the team.

Kravitz: "I believe that comedy is just taking everyday situations, and finding one point out of it, and just blowing it out of proportion." Silberberg: "You just have to watch this place, there's so much going on."

Kravitz and Silberberg have been watching the comic side of life since attending junior high together in Worcester. During high school, both belonged to the Worcester County Clown Club, and a rapport evolved.

"Once a long time ago," Silberberg said, "I said to Steve, 'Hey, stop and listen to us: we're funny.' And he said something like 'Nah ... ' And I said, 'Yeah; we should really work on it.' "

The two temporarily separated after high school. Kravitz enrolled at North Adams State College; Silberberg at UMass.

Mashed Potatoes

Last summer, Silberberg persuaded Kravitz to transfer to UMass. Kravitz in turn persuaded Silberberg to form a comedy team.

"He's the push behind the group," Silberberg said of Kravitz. "He wanted to start doing something. I kept saying, 'yeah OK, yeah OK,' and he said, 'well, when?' Finally, we got into it, and once I did a little bit, I really got into it."

Joe Bailey joined Mashed Potatoes in late October.

"Joe helps on sound effects, voices, and the writing," Silberberg said. The team's "commercials" — including several "act before midnight" offers from "Can't Tell Records " — are Bailey's creations. Bailey also plays fall-guy "Bo Jailey" to the team's stock characters "Bingle" (Silberberg) and "Gabby" (Kravitz).

"Mashed Potatoes" premiered on WMUA shortly before Bailey joined. Silberberg described the show's general response as "little, but from that little, it's been good."

"Mashed Potatoes" runs about 15 to 20 minutes. It's originally loose, semi-improvised production has given way to formal scripts, primarily to save time, according to Silberberg.

"We've found (scripts) to be so good," he said, "as opposed to ... well, one week we went in at 10 p.m. to record the 15 minutes, and Joe ended up leaving around 7 the next morning and Steve and I stayed until 8:30. But with the scripts, it takes us now about two and a half hours from beginning to end."

"The hardest thing about radio," Silberberg added, "is that there is no response at all. For comedy, you do need some sort of a response. We tend to get really insecure about the bits we have done, and we all have to talk about it. We'd say, 'Why don't we cut it?' 'No, it's good, it's good.' It's scary, because you don't have your laughter."

Would the team rather perform live than on radio?

Kravitz, a performing arts BDIC major, prefers the stage. "I like the audience, I like the reaction, I like the response."

Silberberg, an undeclared major, prefers radio. "There's so much more on radio than on stage, say, because you have the sound effects, you have the possibilities of editing, you have the possibility of having two things said at once ... it's neat."

Whatever the medium, Mashed Potatoes leaves their audience hungry for more.

"We've already got bookings for next semester," Kravitz said. "Things are starting to look good."

'Radicals are optimistic believers' says speaker

Dorothy Dinnerstein, author of "The Mermaid and the Minotaur" spoke on the definition of radicalism and other topics to a large group in Mahar Auditorium last night. (Staff photo by Patrick Dobbs)

Defining radicals as the "optimistic believers in the reconstruction of society," Prof. Dorothy Dinnerstein, author of "The Mermaid and the Minotaur," last night lectured and participated in an open discussion sponsored by the Five College Women's Studies Faculty Seminar.

Dinnerstein, a psychology professor at Rutgers University, also read passages from her book concerning male and female relationships and the position of women in child rearing.

Janice Raymond and Bonnie Smolen, both involved in Women's Studies programs, also participated in the discussion with Dinnerstein and told of some of the problems they had in relating to her book.

Raymond described Dinnerstein's book as "a work of monumental scope." She did, however, object to the passivity of the terms used in the book, such as "sexual arrangement," meaning the position of men and women in society.

Raymond also objected to one of Dinnerstein's proposals for equalizing parental roles. "I do not see two-sex child rearing as the solution," she said. Raymond went on to cite the alarming statistics of child abuse committed by men and asked the near capacity audience, "How many men would you trust with children?"

Smolen expressed her concerns as to the growing preoccupation with violence in our society. She and Dinnerstein discussed whether or not aggression was intrinsic to the nature of people or a result of environment.

This issue lead to a broader discussion in which the audience participated. When asked how women should deal with male brutality, Dinnersteain responded, "If we don't want to be beaten then we don't have to. We want women to be beaten up because we want mama to get it."

The audience pressed Dinnerstein to comment on the use of rage by women as a means of changing society, and her passive philosophy seemed to disturb the audience. "A lot of people complain that I don't seem as angry as I ought to," the author conceded.

SWA hears student tenant contract plan

By MATHEW KOVARY
Collegian Staff

UMass students are neglecting their rights to have a clear cut tenant-landlord contract with the University, a representative of the Undergraduate Student Senate Lease Task Force said last night at the Southwest Assembly meeting.

According to David Barenberg, "The University of Massachusetts is one of the very few large state universities in the country which does not have lease agreements with their students."

Barenberg said that as long as the University is not responsible by law to students as tenants, the rents can continue to rise while the quality of residential life decreases.

Barenberg asked Southwest Assembly members to notify their constituents about the senate's effort to establish residential contracts with the University.

During his presentation, Barenberg handed out copies of a proposed lease to assembly members along with a questionnaire on dormitory living conditions which, he said, will aid the senate in drawing up a "solid, well planned lease with which we can negotiate with the administration."

In other action, the Southwest Assembly last night passed a bill that would allow Southwest representatives to attend executive committee meetings.

Joni Mersky, who introduced the bill, said, "Southwest reps could then feel free to work directly with the executive committee, and maybe favorable exchanges could occur.

In the Southwest vice presidential election Bruce Aronson beat Peter Torkildsen by 19 votes in an election that was marked by very poor voter turnout. According to statistics, only 17 per cent of the Southwest community voted in the November election.

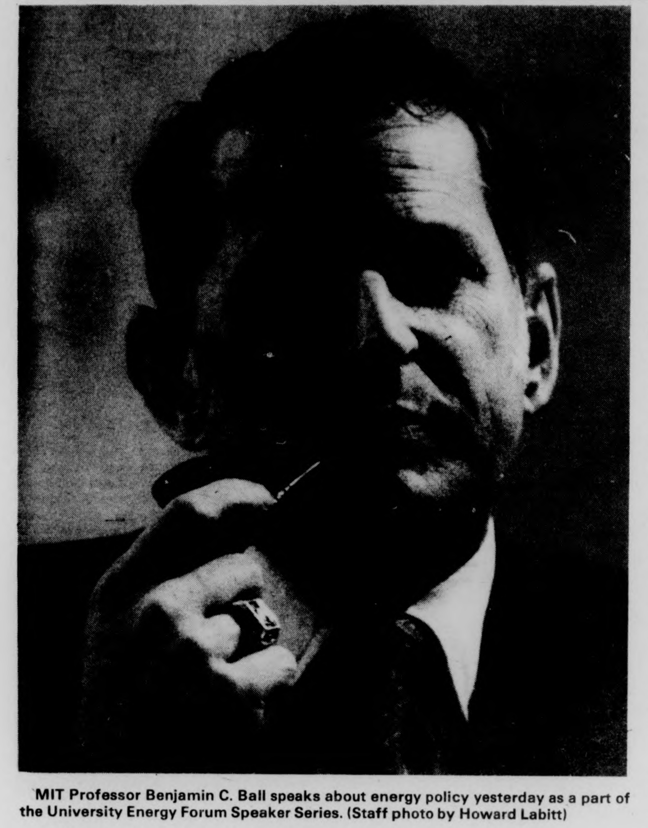
MIT professor calls energy crisis a myth



MIT Professor Benjamin C. Ball speaks about energy policy yesterday as a part of the University Energy Forum Speaker Series. (Staff photo by Howard Labitt)

By AMY KAPLAN
Collegian Staff

An MIT professor yesterday told UMass students there is no energy crisis because it is a short term aberration.

Ben C. Ball, a professor of management and engineering, spoke on energy policy research and its implications in Herter 231 as part of the University Energy Forum Speaker Series.

Ball is also Vice President of Gulf Oil Corporation in charge of the Planning Research Department of the Corporate Planning Group in Pittsburgh.

Ball started by explaining that our energy situation in the United States should be viewed from an analysis of a long time period, and this "will require new kinds of decisions and ways of making them."

He explained that value judgements must be made and then applied to the tradeoffs. "The cost of risks must be examined and then we can talk about policy," Ball said.

Ball's lecture was based on aspects of the energy situation, including its dimensions, tools and systems for coping, the role of strategy development and planning and choices for the future.

He went on further to explain that this situation is a totally new one, an example being that the energy sector was transparent 10 years ago. "For the first time this problem cannot be solved by technolgoy," he said.

The speech emphasized that government, private industry, and for the first time, the public have the responsibility for participating in energy situations. He said that the issues of this analysis in the public and private sector are largely unfamiliar and the main problem is the rising cost of energy. "Every geographical region of the United States is different with regard to energy priorities and decision making," he said.

Ball said that an important thing to be aware of is that the public and private sectors are dealing with different issues and constraints. A graph was shown which listed the issues of the government to be security, distribution of wealth, Gross National Product and a possible backstop energy source. The first three, Ball said, were unmanageable thus far and are constrained by ecology.

Ball emphasized that there is no one energy industry, but instead, a large number of firms using a variety of policies. "Every geographical region of the United States is different with regard to energy priorities and decisionmaking," he said.

In the private sector, the graph listed profit, cash flow, growth and technology to be the most important factors, and geology was listed as the constraining influence.

"Neither the public or private industry is equipped or wants to handle energy decision making, and there are a variety of techniques for decision making," said Ball. He noted the compromise, temporary system as inadequate and cited the anti-nuclear situation as an example.

He proposed a system for policy making which would deal with energy's new long term serious consequences which would give a comprehensive model. He said "We cannot be adversaries, but must find out how much it is worth."

Solar lab near FAC works on new energy source

By GARDE WELLS
Collegian Staff

The sun's rays provide enough energy for 100 per cent heating and 40 per cent of the cooling requirements in the Transportable Solar Laboratory, now outside the University Fine Arts Center, open free to the public from 11:30 a.m. till 4:00 p.m. daily through Dec. 10.

The Transportable Solar Laboratory gathers data on solar energy in various climatic regions of the United States as a means of determining the use of the sun's power for heating and cooling factories and office buildings.

The U.S. Energy Research and Development Administration and Education at UMass is sponsoring the coming of the solar laboratory and the project is co-funded by the U.S. Energy Research and Development Administration and Honeywell, Inc.

The lab consists of two units: a 12 x 45 foot semi-trailer that houses the solar energy heating and cooling equipment and a 12 x 50 foot modified house trailer designed to resemble two offices or conference rooms. The units total about 1,000 square feet of floor space — approximately that of a small home.

Sixty-four solar collector panels are the heart of the solar energy collection system. The panels are divided into two large assemblies, one on the side of the van, the other on top. They are raised into their operating positions by hydraulic jacks.

The solar lab, made up of the two large vans, serves in the collection of solar energy, conversion into hot water for storage and conversion of the stored energy for heating and cooling.

The individual computer designed panels that absorb the sun's energy measure approximately three by four feet and are made of two steel sheets. Cool water is circulated through passages in the steel sheets where it is warmed by the sun.

Once the water in the solar collectors has been heated, it is pumped in to two 500-gallon insulated tanks for storage. Hot water flows through the collectors to the tanks at approximately 11 gallons per minute. Full force of a garden hose is about seven gallons per minute.

The water is pumped from the tanks to the laboratory's conventional heating and cooling systems. When the tanks are full of hot water at sunset, there is enough energy stored to heat the laboratory for two full days, or to cool it for several hours.

Under favorable "insolation" (sun energy-absorbing) conditions, the system is still usable when supplemented with a small water heater. The laboratory is designed so that it can be completely heated by solar energy for six to nine months of the year, depending on local conditions.

Data is taken from about 100 points on the lab and includes individual solar collector panel temperatures, water flow rates and pressures, and air flow rates in the heating and cooling ducts.

An automatic data "multiplexer" simultaneously records all data points on a cassette magnetic tape. At the end of each test day, data from the tape is transmitted to a computer in Minneapolis, Minn.

Once in the computer, the data can be analyzed, thereby determining which area of the nation are more conducive to use of solar energy. The lab is equipped with a complete weather station so the solar energy collection system's efficiency and performance under prevailing weather conditions can be measured. The data acquisition system also monitors the energy required to operate the laboratory.

Solar systems in homes and buildings provide energy for large portions of the heating, cooling or hot water used at 25 sites. Solar systems exist on single and multi-family dwellings in San Antonio, Texas, Minneapolis, Minn., and Albany, New York.

UMass to be cited for unfair labor practices

By CHRISTOPHER H. SCHMITT
Collegian Staff

An "informal conference" today in Boston will determine whether UMass should be cited for an unfair labor practice charge against an Amherst labor union.

The Massachusetts Labor Relations Commission will hear arguments on the charges from Local 1776 American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees, and the UMass administration.

The union has charged the administration is guilty of not adhering to a negotiated agreement.

The dispute centers on "agency servancy" fees. These are fees collected from bargaining unit members to pay for negotiations and other miscellaneous costs.

Bargaining unit members need not be union members to be required to pay the fee.

The union earlier filed 146 grievances with the administration over bargaining unit members who did not pay these fees.

A labor commission spokesperson yesterday said the union asked that an unfair labor practice charge be considered after the administration "failed to act" on the grievances.

Today's hearing will be to determine if a formal charge should be issued against the administration.

Pan African Congress president may be dead

By JAMES LEWIS JR.
Black Affairs Assistant Editor

Sources have revealed that the founder and president of The Pan Africanist Congress, in South Africa, Robert M. Sobukwe, is presently being killed, or already dead. People supposedly do not know about him. This article is intended to inform and to introduce him.

In 1958, Sobukwe founded the S. African faction of the Pan Africanist Congress. On March 21, 1960, Africans were waging a positive campaign against the passbook system that gave them the right to travel. Blacks in Sharpsville, Capetown, and some other places, left their passbooks home. In Sharpesville, 86 unarmed people were killed and many more wounded as police opened fire on the gathering. Sobukwe was arrested and imprisoned for five years. When he came out, he had lung cancer. Now he is being kept at the University of Capetown.

He may be dead, or he may still be alive. One of his lungs has already been removed. The reason for the uncertainty is that the media has purposely kept him out of public focus. Supposedly, only two sources know the whole story of Mr. Sobukwe, a New York Times reporter, and the Rand Corporation, a Brain Box located in Washington D.C., that employs most of the intelligence workers.

Sobukwe would be 59 years old. He had a degree in law, and was a lawyer. He has a B.S. in economics, and his masters in African languages. He taught linguistics at the University of Witwatersfund, internationally ranked 7th in the world.

Dick Gregory cited an interesting statistic, saying that the U.S. cancer industry pulls in three times more profit than the U.S. auto industry. Recently, Ruby Bates died while in prison because of cancer, he would always complain that they were poisoning his food. Bates was first arrested in 1963 in connection with John Kennedy's assassination and he was killed because he knew too much about intelligence operations in the area.

Another interesting occurance in the early sixties was the injection of millions of Americans of a cancer virus, SV-40, when people thought they were receiving polio vaccinations. Dick Gregory also supplied this fact. He proved his claim by reading a letter from the American Cancer Society, who told him his claim was correct. Many people with cancer may have a latent form of the injection.

It seems that the occurances are related, internationally related, in the early sixties, and in prison situations.

The Medical Prison and intelligence systems in this country and internationally, should be watched very closely. Robert Sobukwe was living well until at age 42, he was arrested and sentenced to suffer a 17 year death, for trying to give his people an identity to be proud of.

Two day seminar on Cuba begins today in S. West

Coolidge Tower in Southwest will host a two day seminar on Cuba. Tonight, Wednesday, November 30, the film, The Other Francisco will be shown on the 12 floor lounge at 7:30 and 9:30 p.m.

Thursday, December 1, at Coolidge Tower, Professors Ernest Allen and Johnetta Cole will speak on the subject of "Race and Cuba."

Admission is free.

"The Other Francisco," directed by Sergio Giral, questions Anselmo Suarez portrayal of Cuban slavery in his novel, "Francisco." Suarez's version of slavery has jealously as its main theme.

Francisco an educated obeying house slave, supposedly kills himself over Dorotea, a beautiful young woman who submits to her white master's lust in order to save her love, Francisco. She then flees in shame and self-hatred feeling unworthy of his love. Francisco in utter despair hangs himself from a tree.

Giral in his retelling of the novel, analyzed the history of the original novel, and includes the character of the author and his social class. The perspective of "The Other Francisco," encompasses the effect of economic and market interests upon slavery, and the desire and determination of Cuban slaves for liberation. Consequently, doubts and questions begin to formulate as one ponders whether Francisco's sole reason for committing suicide was Dorotea, or were there other factors involved?

Hatred, power, lust, and greed, together with the historical background of the times, and the prelude to future slave revolts, makes for the intellectual and emotional reexamination and reflection of the life of Francisco.

Black activists fast for South African blacks

BOSTON [AP] — Comedian Dick Gregory, his wife and Sen. Bill Owens, have turned to prayer and fasting to focus worldwide attention on the plight of blacks in South Africa.
